It is difficult for us to realize that estimated by the long reaches of history our country is yet in its infancy. Less than a century and a half ago—indeed just subsequent to the organization of the society which honors me with its attention at this moment—in this City of Brotherly Love, the accredited representatives of an humble and pious constituency scattered along the Atlantic coast from New England to Georgia embarked upon an experiment. It was an experiment in political economy without a precedent and without a parallel. Thitherto from the earliest dawn of civilization there had been almost universal acquiescence in the now abhorrent doctrine of the divine authority of kings to rule common people. Whoever disputed that principle was denounced as an anarchist, intent upon public outrage and private mischief. Whoever asserted an inalienable right to a controlling voice in his own government was condemned as a disturber, seeking to overturn established conditions and to involve the community in disorder and chaos. The power of Great Britain was absolute, and it was exercised with the most offensive and oppressive insolence. Beginning with trivial exactions concerning nonessentials, her aggression gradually advanced from one usurpation to another until it finally culminated in the supreme infamy of a burdensome tax levied upon subjects impudently denied any influence in the administration of their own domestic affairs. And it was when this climax of iniquity was complete that there was exemplified before a waiting world the first demonstration of American patriotism. [Applause.]

It is profitable for us of this generation to glance back in retrospect to those immemorial days. There is Benjamin Franklin, with inimitable wisdom and unanswerable logic, collecting all the reasons for a divorcement from the mother country into one terse and indisputable argument, "taxation without representation is tyranny"; and sagely counselling his compatriots that unless in that crisis they all hung together, it was extremely probable they would all hang separately. [Laughter.] There is Thomas Jefferson dedicating the mightiest efforts of his transcendent genius to the cause of human freedom.

There is John Adams beseeching his brethren for a definite expression in favor of independence: "Sink or swim, live or die, survive or perish, I give my hand and my heart with this vote." [Applause.] There is Patrick Henry, that inspired Irishman [great applause], before the Virginia Legislature in a fine frenzy of eloquence, exclaiming: "Cæsar had his Brutus, Charles the First his Cromwell, and George the Third may profit by their example." [Applause.] Then, pausing for a moment for the tumult to subside, there burst from his indignant lips that memorable philippic now so familiar to every schoolboy orator: "What is it that gentlemen wish? What would they have? Is life so dear, or peace so sweet, as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? Forbid it, Almighty God! I know not what course others may take, but as for me, give me liberty or give me death." [Prolonged applause.] And there is the formal declaration, signed and sealed, asserting that "these united colonies are, and of a right ought to be, free and independent States," written out of the faithful hearts of those consecrated patriots and ratified by the unswerving fidelity of their unconquerable countrymen. [Applause.]

Let us look again. Behold, the feeble and struggling colonists are engaged in a tremendous war with the most formidable military power on the globe. With no army, with no navy, with no credit, with no commerce, but with unfaltering confidence in the righteousness of their cause they have valiantly appealed from the cruel ultimatum of an arbitrary and insane king to the beneficent God of battles. There is the lamented Parker instructing his minutemen on Lexington Green: "Don't fire unless fired upon; but if they mean to have a fight, let it begin here." [Applause.] There is Ethan Allen assaulting Fort Ticonderoga and demanding its unconditional and immediate surrender. "Upon what authority?" inquired the terrified British commander. "In the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress," thundered the redoubtable colonel. [Gent applause.] There is John Stark leading an attack upon the impregnable outposts of the enemy, his clarion voice ringing full and clear above the roar of musketry: "Boys, there are the redcoats; we must beat them to-day or Mollie Stark is a widow." "There is the young and amiable and ambitious Hale executed as a spy, crying out upon the gallows in the presence of ignominious death: "Would to God I had a dozen lives to sacrifice for my country." [Applause.] There is John Paul Jones, his good ship stripped and almost sinking: "Have you struck your colors?" signaled his adversary. "No," trumpeted back the invincible sea-dog, "I have just begun to fight." [Great applause.] And there is George Washington, sublime and self-poised on his bended knees at Valley Forge invoking the aid and support of Divine guidance. Ah, the heroes of that cause and of that war are nameless and numberless and deathless. And after the blood and carnage and defeat and victory came the capitulation of Cornwallis and the acknowledgment of American independence. The long end hoped for, fought for, prayed for, was achieved at last. Liberty triumphed over tyranny, and the imperious edict of despots was superseded by the legally expressed will of the majority, honestly ascertained and faithfully enforced. A government was established, deriving its just powers from the consent of the governed and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. A constitution was ordained, guaranteeing to Catholic and Protestant, to Puritan and Cavalier, to Royalist and Republican, like security in life, property, and the pursuit of happiness, and the United States of America entered upon its unprecedented career of prosperity and usefulness and honor. [Great applause.]

The student of our history is interested and yet perplexed when he is compelled to consider that even at that remote day when Washington was inducted by unanimous acclaim into the first Presidency there existed radical differences of opinion respecting the character of the new government. One school of thought affirmed that it was simply a voluntary association of sovereign States, subject to be dissolved at the election of any one or number of its membership. Another school of thought maintained that it was a union, inseparable, indivisible, perpetual. [Applause.] Out of that disparity of belief, earnestly entertained and energetically defended, there arose as the years elapsed heated discussion, bitter controversy, crimination, and recrimination, all to be adjudicated irrevocably, to be adjudicated forever, to be adjudicated right at Antietam and Vicksburg and Appomattox. [Great applause.]

The Civil War was a tragedy so unparalleled in the written records of humanity that no imagination, however vigorous and resourceful, is competent to delineate its awful enormities. Reflect a moment upon all that was involved. Think of the terrible loss of life, of the tremendous destruction of treasure, of the firesides ruined, of the hearthstones desolated, of the families beggared, of the national travail and wretchedness and misery, of the individual suffering and sacrifice and death. Think of the faithful husband as he renounces the sweet and tender associations of home, the devoted wife, the cherished children, and then think of him on the bloody field of battle slowly dying of a mortal wound—and all for principle, all for liberty, all to preserve a united Government of indestructible States, one and indissoluble, then and forever. Think of the dutiful son, the silent joy of an affectionate and solicitous mother, the stalwart support of an aged and declining father—think of his farewell to those sorrow-stricken parents; farewell not until to-morrow, not until next week, not until after awhile, but farewell until they all shall stand at the last day in the presence of each other before the judgment bar of God. Think of the romantic suitor as he sighs au revoir to the soft-voiced siren who has long reigned empress in his heart. We may not be pardoned for referring to that interview. The surroundings are inspiring in their character. There is the fife and the drum and the uniform and the march and the grand old patriotic songs which stir men's souls. All without is tumult and confusion, all with them is confidence and love. This rueful Romeo is whispering to his gentle Juliet the old, old story, which always is new at every repetition, when suddenly the drums beat, the advance is sounded, and they must part for a time, it may be forever. Think of that hero as he marches away to the strident music of the war:

> His not to reason why;
> His but to do and die.

And then think of him at Shiloh, or before Atlanta, or in the Wilderness yielding up his young life that the great Republic may remain. [Applause.] We try to measure all the sorrow and the sacrifice, and we are stupified with horror. The eyes grow dim, the lips are silent, the heart is still. There are names we do not know, and graves we can not find. There are messages that never came, and mournful whispers carried on the weeping winds to breaking hearts that never cease to break, yet can not die. There are memories that time will not obliterate, and familiar footsteps which ever echo and reecho in the corridors of the imagination. There are strains of music weird and gay and sweet and sad which transport all the past upon their matchless melody and waft it by beyond our grasp on mystic wings of sound. And even to this day there are tears that will not dry, and sobs that can not break in tears. Oh, how superb, how magnificent, how glorious, how cruel, how terrible, how remorseless is war to the victorious and to the vanquished. [Great applause.]

It was a calamity unspeakably sorrowful, that fratricidal misunderstanding between the people of the North and the people of the South. But we long ago learned to embrace the philosophy expressed by our great President in his second inaugural, "The Almighty has his own purposes, and the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether." There could not be a new birth of freedom so long as the old institution of slavery survived. There could not be a more perfect union in peace until the doctrine of States' rights perished by the sword. There could not be the remission of national sin without the shedding of individual blood. And so the war was inevitable. It was a fearful retribution, but its compensations were more than manifold, for out of it there emerged the regenerated, the reunited, the real Republic which is now the miracle and the marvel of all the civilized communities of the earth. [Applause.] The conflict itself is become a priceless and imperishable memory, with its bloodiest battle fields cherished everywhere as sacred theaters upon which were illustrated the sublimest exhibitions of American endurance, American bravery, American patriotism. The heroes of that unexampled collision, whether robed in the blue of victory or in the gray of defeat, each battled for a principle which he believed with every aspiration of his soul to be right; each rendered to the cause he espoused the last final measure of duty as he conceived it; and the incomparable valor of each is the treasured heritage of our common country. [Applause.] And it is our common country now. A little while ago I witnessed a spectacle which to me was a genuine revelation. There were miles of carriages, civic societies in full uniform, salvos of artillery, regal pomp, and military pageantry. The ceremonial was the unveiling of that historic statue on the Lake Front in Chicago, erected by the gratitude and generosity of the State of Illinois in honor of Gen. John A. Logan. [Applause.] Throughout the 5 miles of that remarkable procession the atmosphere was enriched with continuous cheers as Federal and Confederate emulated each other in tribute to that invincible warrior, the superb Black Eagle of the Fifteenth Army Corps. And when I saw that demonstration I said to myself, it is our common country now. [Great applause.] Do you know, my countrymen, in the National Park at Chickamauga the sovereign State of Kentucky has created a single memorial to her sons under Thomas and her sons under Bragg who fought and fell on the decisive field. And on that magnificent marble there is inscribed these significant and inspiring words:

"As we are united in life and they in death, let one monument perpetuate their undying deeds, and one people forgetful of all the bitterness of the past ever hold in grateful remembrance all the glories of the terrible conflict which made all men free, and retained every star upon our Nation's flag." [Great applause.]

And when I stood in the shadow of that majestic column and read that noble sentiment composed by a colonel who commanded a Confederate regiment at Snodgrass Hill, I said to myself again, it is our common country now. [Applause.]

Indeed, who can doubt it after the memorable incidents of the Spanish-American War. That was an unfortunate and sanguinary encounter in which we became embroiled with a semibarbarous power, but let it be remembered that the catastrophe was not of our own provoking. After exhausting every resource of pacific diplomacy we were compelled to submit the questions at issue to the arbitrament of the sword. We forbore until forbearance ceased to be a virtue. We delayed until dilatoriness was fast becoming a crime. Yonder on the little island of Cuba thousands of innocent women and children were starving at our very threshold. Robbery, rapine, and murder without example characterized the conduct of Spain toward her impoverished dependency. We petitioned, and our petitions were ignored with contempt. We remonstrated, and our remonstrances were spurned with derision. We protested, and our protests were scorned with defiance. Finally the good ship Maine was destroyed, and by that last act of infamy 267 of our gallant seamen on a friendly visit to a supposedly friendly port, with no moment's warning of impending danger were ruthlessly slaughtered, and without a conscious struggle they passed from the repose of sleep to the repose of death. Then came our declaration of war. It was a trumpet call to duty, and it unified this country as no other agency could have accomplished. [Applause.] Instantly a million men were ready to respond to the crisis, and they came from every city, from every town, from every village, from every hamlet in the broad commonwealth. For the first time in generations there was no North, no South, no East, no West—only a single country with a single emblem and a single destiny. Thus fortified we proceeded from victory to victory while vengeance was ours and until we had repaid. It was our supreme privilege to emancipate a beleaguered people, to avenge fiendish and brutal assassination, and once again to banish European tyranny from the occidental hemisphere. [Applause.] I do not know your opinion and I would not violate the proprieties of this occasion, but I have the profound conviction that there is no place in the territory of this western continent for any but American institutions; there is no room in the atmosphere of this western world for any but the American flag. [Prolonged applause.] In that brief but brilliant engagement with Spain, whether with George Dewey steaming over the torpedoes into Manila Bay, or with the peerless Schley at Santiago, or with the redoubtable Rough Riders of San Juan and El Caney, the American Army and the American Navy achieved inextinguishable renown, and communicated a new and resplendent glory to our triumphant Republic. [Applause.] And when I observed the Federal general, Merritt, and the Confederate general, Wheeler, standing side by side and shoulder to shoulder under the beautiful banner of the free, I said to myself a thousand times, it is our common country now. [Great applause.]

The past so opulent is past—what of our future? To-day we are the most important people on earth, to-day we are the most progressive, to-day we are the most powerful. We know more than any other people [applause], and upon sufficient persuasion we can be induced to confess the fact. [Laughter and applause.] We have got more books on our shelves, more pictures on our walls, and more thought in our brains. We have got more pleasant homes in this country, more happy children, more intelligent women and more intellectual men, and the United States of America is the best government ever organized by man. [Applause.] No other nation so nearly approaches absolute equality, no other Republic ever survived half so long without a successful revolution, and every additional star we imprint upon our emblazoned banner is a perpetual evidence that we are resolved to advance throughout all eternity. [Applause.]

So far as I am concerned I have not been depressed by the insidious pessimism which characterizes contemporaneous philosophy. On the contrary, I have unlimited faith in the great Republic. A nation that is capable of producing George Washington and Thomas Jefferson and Alexander Hamilton [applause]; that is capable of producing Andrew Jackson and Henry Clay and Daniel Webster [applause]; that is capable of producing Abraham Lincoln—and what shall I say in this presence of that overshadowing character, of that mysterious admixture of melancholy and merriment, of laughter and tragedy, of mirth and tears? [Applause.] When the nineteenth century shall assemble its illustrious dead in their final Pantheon there will be Napoleon for France, Gladstone for Britain, Bismarck for Germany, Tolstoy for Russia, and for America the grandest personality in all modern history; the emancipator, the martyr, the man, Abraham Lincoln. [Prolonged applause.] A nation that is capable of producing Lincoln; that is capable of producing Ulysses S. Grant, that silent soldier whose military strategy exploded ancient fallacies and introduced original conceptions of popular government; whose inspiring epigrams, "I propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer," and "No terms other than unconditional surrender will be accepted," stimulated the hesitant North to renewed endeavor, and whose prophetic words, "Let us have peace," were a sacred benediction upon the troubled hearts of all his countrymen. [Applause.]

A nation that is capable of producing Grant; that is capable of producing William McKinley, that matchless sacrifice to an anarchy as inexcusable as it was insane, who was everywhere recognized as a synonym for fidelity to friendship, for devotion to duty, for perfect consecration to the public service; whose laborious and eventful life, whether in private conduct or domestic relation or official position, was one harmonious symposium of the sweetest, chastest symphonies that can be improvised from the atmosphere of heaven. [Applause.]

A nation that is capable of producing such a citizenship and of inspiring it with such a patriotism must have a marvelous future. And it shall go forward forever, surmounting one obstacle after another in the pathway of its development and of its destiny, until finally it shall seize and hold and reflect the glory and the grandeur of all the earth. [Prolonged applause.]

Joaquin Miller, that erratic and eccentric genius of the Sierra Nevadas, has written a poem of Columbus and his voyage, of its hopes and fears, of its doubts and despairs, and of its ultimate reward in the discovery of an unsuspected continent. I never read that poem without instinctively feeling that its exalted sentiment typifies the irresistible progress of my country:

Behind him lay the gray Azores,
Behind the gates of Hercules;
Before him not the ghost of shores,
Before him only shoreless seas.
The good mate said, "Now must we pray,
For lo, the very stars are gone;
Brave Admiral speak, what shall I say?"
He said, "Sail on and on and on, sail on."

They sailed and sailed as winds might blow
Until at last the blanched mate said,
"Why now not even God would know
If you and all your men fell dead;
These very winds forget their way,
For God from these dread seas is gone;
Brave Admiral speak, what shall I say?"
He said, "Sail on and on and on, sail on."

They sailed and sailed, then spake the mate;
"This mad sea shows his teeth to-night,
He curls his lips, he lies in wait
With lifted fang as if to bite;
Brave Admiral say but one good word
What shall I say when hope is gone?"
The answer leaped like a leaping sword;
He said, "Sail on and on and on, sail on."

Then pale and worn he kept his deck
And peered through darkness. Ah, that night
Of all dark nights, and then a speck;
A light! A light! A light! A light!
It grew, a star-lit flag unfurled;
It came to be time's burst of dawn.
He gained a world, and gave that world
Its grandest lesson; On and on and on, sail on.

[Great applause.]

And so, my countrymen, shall this imperial Republic of ours, proud of yesterday, contented with to-day, hopeful for to-morrow, sail on and on and on throughout the countless cycles of its shining career until it shall attain an approximately perfect day when no decoration shall be so exclusive, no dignity so exceptional, no distinction so extraordinary as citizenship in the United States of America. [Prolonged applause.]

RELIEF OF HOMESTEADERS IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 20498) for the relief of certain homesteaders in Nebraska, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at half past 10 o'clock to-morrow morning. I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] desires to occupy an hour in debate at that time, and I ask unanimous consent further that the hour from 10.30 o'clock a. m. to 11.30 o'clock a. m. be devoted to that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 10.30 o'clock a. m., and that immediately after the reading of the Journal the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] may have an hour in which to address the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the gentleman going to discuss?

Mr. RAINEY. Certain phases of the water-power conservation question.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I have received notice from the gentleman from Illinois that he intended to make this speech, and that he also intended to refer to me in that address.

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. If this House gives him permission to address it for an hour, I shall ask permission to reply to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if it is to be a personal controversy between two gentlemen I do not think that we can set aside to-morrow to carry it on.

Mr. MANN. Why not extend the time a little and divide it up, if they need it?

Mr. RAINEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee may be accorded the privilege of replying.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the gentleman from Illinois having an hour, but I want the same amount of time, if I deem it necessary, in which to defend myself and reply to anything that he may have to say in reference to me.

Mr. RAINEY. I suggest that the House adjourn until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if it is to be a personal controversy between two gentlemen I do not think that I can consent to it. We will have conference reports and other matters of importance to attend to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think both gentlemen will be able to get time to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is to come up at that time?

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow; that I have the hour from 10 o'clock to 11 o'clock, and that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] have the hour from 11 o'clock to 12 o'clock, if he so desires.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, while I dislike to object to that, I feel I shall have to.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it is only adding half an hour more to the time the gentleman proposed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I fear if the gentlemen start in a controversy of that kind it will reach well into the day.

Mr. RAINEY. I do not think I will even take the hour.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentlemen will compromise on 45 minutes a side, very well.

Mr. MANN. Oh, let them have an hour and meet at 10 o'clock.

Mr. RAINEY. I do not think I shall take over 45 minutes, but I would like to have an hour.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, with the understanding that when 12 o'clock is reached, the House may proceed with business, without interruption on account of these speeches, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, and that he shall have one hour in which to address the House, and that the gentleman from Tennessee shall have one hour in which to reply.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. With the understanding that when 12 o'clock is reached the House may proceed with business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that it will take 10 or 15 minutes to read the Journal in the morning, if not longer.

Mr. RAINEY. Then take that much time off each one of us.

The SPEAKER. Half and half?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the gentlemen better agree to the proposition that each take 45 minutes.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I will ask that each side have 50 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to each side having 50 minutes, if we meet at 10 o'clock, if my colleague proceeds at that time.

Mr. RAINEY. I intend to proceed at 10 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. I do not care to have the House meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow and then have it start on something else that is not expected to come up at that time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the House meet at 10 o'clock a. m., and that immediately after the reading of the Journal he and the gentleman from Tennessee shall proceed to address the House——

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to make the request in my own name that I have the opportunity to reply to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Well, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow, and immediately after the reading of the Journal he shall have one hour. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] wish to prefer a request?

Mr. MANN. It was 50 minutes.

The SPEAKER. It is 50 minutes instead of an hour. Now, does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to make a request?

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask permission for an equal length of time to answer the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] asks for 50 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I couple with the request that when the hour of 12 o'clock is reached that the business of the House shall be proceeded with.

Mr. MANN. I could not consent to that, because that might deprive the gentleman from Tennessee of his time.

The SPEAKER. Why not compromise it in this way, that immediately after the reading of the Journal the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Tennessee shall, under the direction of the Chair divide what remains of the time equally between them until 12 o'clock.

Mr. RAINEY. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Is it the Speaker's suggestion?

The SPEAKER. Yes; and that would seem to be a fair compromise.

Mr. MANN. If that is the request of the Speaker he is putting and the proposition he has made, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. That is the proposition the Chair puts, that when the House adjourns to-day it shall adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock a. m., to-morrow, and after the reading of the Journal that the speech making by the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Tennessee extend to 12 o'clock, the time to be divided half and half between them by the Chair.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if he will insure us a quorum.

The SPEAKER. It will take half an hour of that time to get a quorum.

Mr. AKIN of New York. I should like a quorum here to hear it.

The SPEAKER. That is a laudable desire. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

INJURED GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 23451, the omnibus claims bill, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 23451, an act to pay certain employees of the Government for injuries received while in the discharge of their duties, and other claims for damages to and loss of private property.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and asks for a conference.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman asks unanimous consent, I object.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Tuesday, August 20, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HENRY of Texas, from the Committee on Rules, to which was referred the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 24) providing for an inquiry as to the purchase of the home of Thomas Jefferson, at Monticello, Va., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1214), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 1) arranging for improvement in the American tobacco-trade conditions, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1213), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN, from the Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 26329) to amend proviso in meat-inspection law concerning products prepared according to directions of foreign purchasers, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1225), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, submitted a report (No. 1207) on the hearings before said committee, commonly referred to as the Florida Everglades investigation, which report was referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4033) for the relief of Warren E. Day, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1218), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 26338) providing for patents to desert-land entries on reclamation projects, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 26339) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and settle certain accounts, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. DOREMUS: A bill (H. R. 26340) requiring all ocean and lake going vessels propelled by machinery and over 15 gross tons to carry a message case for the purpose of communicating any accident on shipboard to people on shore, when no other means are available; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 26341) to regulate the construction of dams in navigable rivers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Resolution (H. Res. 700) to pay E. B. McClelland for services as a House Office Building policeman; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania: Resolution (H. Res. 701) authorizing the appointment of a special committee to investigate conditions existing in the Paint Creek coal field of West Virginia; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BOOHER: A bill (H. R. 26342) granting an increase of pension to Mary F. Murphy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER: A bill (H. R. 26343) granting an extension of letters patent to William F. Brothers; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. DENVER: A bill (H. R. 26344) granting a pension to Alice Ricketts; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26345) granting a pension to Maud A. Johnston; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FLOOD of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 26346) for the relief of the legal representatives of Thomas B. McClintic, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 26347) granting an increase of pension to Alpheus Danley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HELM: A bill (H. R. 26348) for the relief of the estate of John Wesley Eubanks; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LEE of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 26349) granting a pension to John Dowdy; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LEVER: A bill (H. R. 26350) authorizing the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint E. F. Slater, a first lieutenant in the Medical Reserve Corps of the United States Army, a captain in the Medical Corps on the retired list, and increasing the retired list by one for the purposes of this act; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McGILLICUDDY: A bill (H. R. 26351) granting a pension to Rosie Scott; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIS: A bill (H. R. 26352) granting a pension to Lydia B. Fowler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 26353) granting a pension to Arrietta Newbert; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, August 20, 1912.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. GALLINGER took the chair as President pro tempore under the previous order of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. PENROSE and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. PENROSE. While I am on my feet, Mr. President, I desire to give notice that to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal, I shall rise to make a privileged statement regarding certain correspondence between John D. Archbold and myself. I understand that this will not interfere with the unanimous consent already given, and I ask that it be noted on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the Senator's privilege.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It having been agreed by unanimous consent that on this day at 11 o'clock the Senate would proceed to the consideration of executive business, the Sergeant at Arms will see that the galleries are cleared and the doors closed.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 3 hours and 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday morning, after the routine morning business and prior to the time at which the unfinished business would come up, we consider House bill 22913, being an act to create the department of labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho asks that on Thursday morning, after the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 22913) to create a department of labor. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. I ask for order in the Chamber in order that the Senate may understand the request.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Idaho add to his request not to interfere with the consideration of appropriation bills or conference reports?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I think that under the circumstances that should be added.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order as modified will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed that on Thursday morning, immediately after the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 22913) to create a department of labor, this, however, not to interfere with appropriation bills or reports of committees of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho? The Chair hears none.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. NEWLANDS, Mr. SMOOT, and others addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels constrained to lay the unfinished business before the Senate. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. CUMMINS. I had not desired at this moment to lay aside the unfinished business, but I have no objection to yielding to any business that will not require considerable time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Iowa yield for morning business?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield for morning business.

THE "TITANIC" DISASTER.

Mr. SMOOT. The other day the Senate passed a resolution providing that 12,000 copies of Senate Document No. 806, Sixty-second Congress, the report of the Senate Committee on Commerce on the Titanic disaster, be printed for the use of the Senate folding room. I ask that a reconsideration of the resolution be had, and that instead of having it furnished to the Senate folding room it be furnished to the Senate document room.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the former order will be reconsidered, and the request as now made is that the resolution be amended by striking out "folding" before "room" and inserting "document."

The resolution (S. Res. 356) was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That 12,000 copies of Senate Report No. 806, Sixty-second Congress, second session, report of the Senate Committee on Commerce on the Titanic disaster, be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In view of its importance and the widespread interest in the findings of the British commission appointed to inquire into the causes contributing to the wreck of the steamship Titanic, I ask unanimous consent that the official findings of the commission presided over by Lord Mersey be printed as a public document (S. Doc. No. 933).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Michigan? The Chair hears none.

SECUNDINO ROMERO.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent that the evidence taken in the hearing of the Senate on the appointment of Secundino Romero be made a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear the Senator's request.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent that the evidence already taken and already printed in the matter of the appointment of Secundino Romero be made a public document.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will object to that.

Mr. REED. I simply want to relieve it from secrecy. I do not want to have it cost the Government a cent.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think matter touching the personal character of men over whom we have no jurisdiction should not be printed as a public document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. REED. I move that the report of the hearings on the appointment of Secundino Romero be made a public document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the testimony taken in the case of Secundino Romero be made a public document.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest that the motion can only be appropriately made and considered in executive session. It would involve a discussion of it and a disclosure of it to do it in open session. I raise the point of order that it can not be considered in open session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. REED. Under what rule is the point of order sustained?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion relates to a matter belonging to the executive business of the Senate and manifestly can not be considered in open session when objection is made.

Mr. REED. The question whether the evidence shall be made public or not I insist belongs in open session. As to the question of discussing it, I am discussing the Chair's ruling, with the Chair's permission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. REED. The question as to what shall be said in that discussion, of course, must be regulated by the proprieties of the occasion. This is a public session of the Senate, and I am asking to have a matter made a public document, which is already printed. I respectfully protest against the ruling of the Chair that a motion of that kind can not be considered in the public sessions of the Senate, and I challenge any man to produce parliamentary law that says it can be considered only in executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the testimony was printed in confidence by the committee. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. REED. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An appeal is made. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it. The decision of the Chair is sustained.

THE J. KENNARD & SONS CARPET CO. (S. DOC. NO. 934).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury calling the attention of Congress to private act No. 77, "An act for the relief of the J. Kennard & Sons Carpet Co.," approved August 16, 1912, and stating that an appropriation of $2,427.88 will be necessary to enable that department to carry out the evident intention of the act, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE (S. DOC. NO. 935).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the United States Public Health Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, an item in amount of $50,000, under the heading "For pay and allowances and commutation of quarters commissioned medical officers and pharmacists," to provide for 25 additional commissioned medical officers, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of the Central Trades and Labor Union, of East St. Louis, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the better protection of American seamen, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of Local Union, No. 21, Liquor Dealers' Protective Association, of Proviso, Ill., remonstrating against the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I present a petition of members of the Railroad Men's Political Club of Tacoma, Wash., praying for the creation of an interstate industrial commission. I ask that the petition lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution.

THE CREATION OF AN INTERSTATE INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

Whereas the peace and tranquillity of the Nation has been disturbed from time to time by strikes or threatened strikes, by lockouts, by "open" or "closed" shop controversies, by blacklisting, boycotting, or blackmailing, thereby causing unnecessary economic waste to the workingman, to employer, and to society in general; and

Whereas the use of these prerogatives in industrial disputes are detrimental to the best interests of our people: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this organization favor such Federal legislation as will provide—

First. That it be unlawful to strike or to lockout, to alter wage scales or change working conditions, and, really, unlawful to blacklist, to boycott, or to blackmail, except, however, such alteration of wage scale or change of working condition as may be amicably adjusted between employer and that organization of employees representing any particular craft; and

Second. That in lieu of the exercise of such prerogatives and the present system of adjusting labor disputes, that there be created an interstate industrial commission, with the power of a court, and that there be such changes in our political machinery somewhat as outlined hereinafter; and Third. That there be created an interstate industrial commission to consist of one commissioner selected by and from each of the following organizations of employers and employees: The Railway General Managers' Association; the joint railway brotherhoods; the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association; representative of the mill workers; the coal-mine operators; the coal miners' union; the mine owners, other than coal; the mine workers, other than coal; the National Manufacturers' Association; the National Civic Federation; the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association; the American Federation of Labor; the shipowners; the seamen's union; and a chairman to be appointed by the President, and which member shall be a Cabinet officer.

Each commissioner shall act as the national representative of the organization electing him in legislative matters, and shall be subject to recall by the same authority responsible for his selection; and

(a) Such commission shall have plenary powers in all matters pertaining to industrial disputes other than intrastate; and

(b) It shall be invested with the full power of a court in such matters as examining witnesses, taking evidence, requiring production of documents, enforcing awards, and all other things pertinent to industrial disputes conformable to law which may be necessary to enable them to discharge the duties of their office; and

(c) Its awards shall stand unless reversed by Congress, to which there shall be the right of appeal; and

(d) It shall fix a minimum wage—a living wage—upon an eight-hour six-day-a-week basis in all classified industries not having such minimum wage, except, however, intrastate industries; and

(e) That the Department of Commerce and Labor be abolished and that all matters pertaining to commerce be transferred to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that all other matter to the interstate industrial commission; and

(f) That the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission be made a Cabinet officer.

Mr. POINDEXTER presented a petition of members of the Wallingford Baptist Mission, of Seattle, Wash., praying for the appointment of a day to be known and observed by the Nation as "mothers' day," which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan presented petitions of sundry citizens of Petoskey, Three Rivers, Owosso, Port Huron, and Battle Creek, all in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the establishment of a department of public health, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE presented a memorial signed by 432 citizens of the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the adoption of the proposed provision in the Panama Canal bill permitting the free importation of shipbuilding material, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHIVELY, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 18787) relating to the limitation of the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon a public work of the United States and of the District of Columbia, and of all persons employed in constructing, maintaining, or improving a river or harbor of the United States and of the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1056) thereon.

Mr. POINDEXTER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14053) to increase the pensions of surviving soldiers of Indian wars in certain cases, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1059) thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 7430) providing for the cancellation of certain overdue personal taxes in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1057) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 7162) to amend section 801 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1058) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to, and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

S. 7325. A bill for the extension of H Street east from Eighteenth Street north to Oklahoma Avenue (Rept. No. 1053);

S. 7326. A bill for the extension of Maryland Avenue east of Fifteenth Street to M Street NE. (Rept. No. 1054); and

S. 7327. A bill for the extension of Eighteenth Street east from Benning Road to K Street north (Rept. No. 1055).

THE ARMY CANTEEN (S. DOC. NO. 931).

Mr. GALLINGER. I present a protest, signed by 94 leading practicing physicians and teachers in various parts of the country, remonstrating against the reestablishment of beer selling in the Army. I ask that the protest be printed in the RECORD, together with the names, and that it also may be printed as a document, and that 1,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed as a document, 1,000 additional copies to be printed, and to be printed, with the names, in the RECORD, as follows:

[Senate Document No. 931, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

THE ARMY CANTEEN.

Mr. GALLINGER presented the following memorial of physicians remonstrating against the restoration of the Army canteen:

To the honorable the Members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives:

The undersigned physicians respectfully but earnestly protest to your honorable bodies against the passage of any bill to reestablish beer selling in the United States Army.

A study of the Army statistics during the present nonbeer period as compared with the previous beer-selling period shows:

First. That the average admission rate for alcoholism in the Army has been lower during the nonbeer period, 1901–1910.

Second. That although the average admission rate for venereal disease has been higher during the nonbeer period than in the preceding beer-selling period, the greatest increase took place in the beer period immediately after the Spanish War. The increase between the first and the last year of that period was 106 per cent. The increase in the nonbeer period was 19 per cent, at the highest point reached by the venereal rate, which was seven years ago (1905).

In other words, beer, which is now advocated as a preventive of venereal diseases, failed in the beer-selling period to prevent an increase nearly six times as great as the increase during the nonbeer period.

Third. It is not only in the state of drunkenness that men step into danger of incurring venereal diseases, but in the state of exhilaration and weakened self-control, which follows the use of comparatively small amounts of alcoholic liquors. Modern scientific investigation has shown clearly that one of the earliest effects of the use of alcoholic liquors is impaired self-control. This impairment of self-control not only follows the use of the stronger alcoholic liquors, but may also follow the use of beer.

Fourth. Army tests, conducted by generals and Army medical officers, have repeatedly shown the disadvantage not only of the spirits drinker, but of even the beer drinker, in health, endurance, morale, and marksmanship—the qualities which are especially necessary for the efficiency of the soldier.

In view of the foregoing facts, we respectfully submit that science and experience indicate that the sale of beer in the Army is not only not required to diminish venereal diseases, but that its reinstatement would conflict with the best interests of the soldier himself, physically and morally, both in the Army and when he returns to civil life, and that it would be in direct opposition to the highest efficiency of the Army as a means of national defense.

We therefore respectfully urge you not to pass any bill for the reestablishment of beer selling in the Army.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CRANE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $43,880 for increased quarantine facilities at the port of Portland, Me., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 25970), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

BUST OF JOHN HANCOCK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 58), of the House of Representatives, which was read, as follows:

Whereas the Society of the Sons of the Revolution of Massachusetts desire to present to that State a bust of John Hancock, and in order to do so it is necessary to obtain a cast from the head of the statue now in the Senate wing of the Capitol, which is the only known statue of Hancock: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That Herman Walthauser, of Boston, Mass., be, and hereby is, authorized to make a cast from the head of the statue of John Hancock, now located in the Senate wing of the Capitol.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the adoption of the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY FOR ALASKA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 62), from the House of Representatives, which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the enrolling clerk of the House, in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 38) entitled "An act to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes," be directed to regard the matter furnished in the conference report to be inserted in lieu of amendments Nos. 7 to 15, inclusive, as following the word "years," on page 3, line 18; and that the matter proposed to be stricken from amendment No. 68, as set forth in said conference report, be designated "All after the word 'thereof,' in line 21 of the proposed amendment, down to and including 'and' in line 24."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This concurrent resolution is intended merely to correct a clerical error. It does not change the measure. I ask for its adoption.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

MISBRANDED DRUGS.

The bill (H. R. 11877) to amend section 8 of the food and drugs act, approved June 30, 1906, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the bill may receive present consideration, if I may do so under the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill the title of which has just been stated. Is there objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to hear the bill read first.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; let it be read.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That that part of section 8 of the food and drugs act of June 30, 1906, defining what shall be misbranding in the case of drugs, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto a third paragraph to read as follows:

"If its package or label shall bear or contain any statement, design, or device regarding the curative or therapeutic effect of such article or any of the ingredients or substances contained therein, which is false and fraudulent."

So that the said part of said section 8 shall read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That the term 'misbranded,' as used herein, shall apply to all drugs or articles of food or articles which enter into the composition of food, the package or label of which shall bear any statement, design, or device regarding such article, or the ingredients or substances contained therein which shall be false or misleading in any particular, and to any food or drug product which is falsely branded as to the State, Territory, or country in which it is manufactured or produced.

"That for the purposes of this act an article shall also be deemed to be misbranded. In case of drugs:

"First. If it be an imitation of or offered for sale under the name of another article.

"Second. If the contents of the package as originally put up shall have been removed, in whole or in part, and other contents shall have been placed in such package, or if the package fail to bear a statement on the label of the quantity or proportion of any alcohol, morphine, opium, cocaine, heroin, alpha or beta eucaine, chloroform, cannabis indica, chloral hydrate, or acetanilide, or any derivative or preparation of any such substances contained therein.

"Third. If its package or label shall bear or contain any statement, design, or device regarding the curative or therapeutic effect of such article or any of the ingredients or substances contained therein, which is false and fraudulent."

Mr. HEYBURN. The necessity for it is obvious.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LITTLE CALUMET RIVER BRIDGE, ILLINOIS.

The bill (H. R. 26235) to authorize the city of Chicago to construct a bridge across the Little Calumet River, at Indiana Avenue, in said city, was read twice by its title.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask for the present consideration of the bill. There is a Senate bill like it on the calendar.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the bill (S. 7457) to authorize the city of Chicago to construct a bridge across the Little Calumet River, at Indiana Avenue, in said city, be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE IN AITKIN COUNTY, MINN.

The bill (H. R. 26099) authorizing the towns of Ball Bluff, Libby, and Cornish, in the county of Aitkin, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in Aitkin County, Minn., was read twice by its title.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. There is a similar Senate bill on the calendar, and if the House bill shall be passed I shall move the indefinite postponement of the Senate bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the bill (S. 7455) authorizing the towns of Ball Bluff, Libby, and Cornish, in the county of Aitkin, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi, in Aitkin County, Minn., be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

REDUCTION OF TARIFF DUTIES.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate concurrent resolution 29. Before asking it, I wish to make a statement.

I introduced the other day a resolution, which yesterday was turned into the concurrent resolution now lying on our desks, providing for the appointment of a committee by the Senate and one by the House to confer with the President of the United States with reference to the harmonizing of differences which exist as to the reduction of excessive duties. The two schedules with reference to which a reduction in excessive duties is entirely practicable are the wool schedule and the cotton schedule, important schedules, affecting the clothing of the entire people and affecting the cost of living throughout the country.

We have now been in session since December, a period of over seven months. In December the President of the United States presented to Congress the report of the Tariff Board, calling attention to the fact that the facts ascertained by that board justify a reduction in the duties both upon wool and cloths, a reduction which he has recently stated should amount to 20 per cent on wool and from 20 per cent to 50 per cent on cloth.

Later on he presented the report of the Tariff Board upon the cotton schedule, and called attention to the fact that the Tariff Board had made a report which warranted a very material reduction upon yarn, a material which enters into cotton cloth, and also a material reduction on many varieties of cotton cloth. In the message of December upon the wool schedule the President urged the immediate consideration of these reductions by Congress, and upon presenting the cotton report he renewed that recommendation, and in his veto of the wool bill he made the following statement:

I strongly desire to reduce duties, provided only the protection system be maintained, and that industries now established be not destroyed. It now appears from the Tariff Board's report, and from bills which have been introduced into the House and the Senate, that a bill may be drawn so as to be within the requirements of protection and still offer a reduction of 20 per cent on most wool and of from 20 per cent to 50 per cent on cloths. I can not act upon the assumption that the controlling majority in either House will refuse to pass a bill of this kind, if in fact it accomplishes so substantial a reduction, merely because members of the opposing party and the Executive unite in its approval. I, therefore, urge upon Congress that it do not adjourn without taking advantage of the plain opportunity thus substantially to reduce unnecessary existing duties. I appeal to Congress to reconsider the measure, which I now return without my approval, and to adopt a substitute therefor making substantial reductions below the rates of the present act, which the Tariff Board shows possible, without destroying any established industry or throwing any wage earners out of employment, and which I will promptly approve.

Mr. President, the question before Congress is as to whether our action regarding tariff reduction is to be a mere sham, or whether it is to represent the earnest purpose of all those in both Houses who have professed to be for a reduction of the tariff to join in securing any practicable reduction; and the issue before the American people is as to whether the American Congress is engaging in a sham performance regarding the reduction of the tariff or is really in earnest.

The President has differed with both Houses regarding the wool and the cotton schedules. The two Houses, though differing in their political color, have been able to agree upon certain reductions. The President alone disagrees, and stands for his justification upon the Republican platform, which declares for duties that will fairly represent the difference in the cost of production, with a fair profit to the manufacturer added; and his contention is that it is necessary to ascertain this difference by an inquiry into the facts; that, with the approval of Congress, he has organized a tariff board for that purpose; and that when the facts are presented, he is willing to act. The report of the Tariff Board was doubtless a surprise to him, as it was to many Republicans throughout the country, for a reduction of 20 per cent on wool and a reduction of 20 to 50 per cent on cloth are certainly material reductions. It has been the contention of the Democratic Party that the present tariff was in the main prohibitory; that it was established, not for the purpose of revenue, but for the purpose of protection; and that the wall was raised to such unnecessary height as not only to prevent adequate revenue, but also to enable domestic manufacturers behind the tariff wall, relieved of foreign competition, to combine in such a way as to raise prices to the domestic consumer, and thus oppress the entire consuming public. We have now an opportunity to take the top bricks off this wall and to reduce its height in a considerable degree, and the question is whether we will avail ourselves in a common-sense way of the opportunity which the President offers.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not want to interrupt the Senator from Nevada, but I hope he will remember that I consented to have laid aside the unfinished business only for morning business. Does the Senator seek action upon his resolution at this time?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do; but I will conclude my statement, I will say to the Senator, in a very few moments.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then, I ask, Is the resolution of the Senator from Nevada morning business?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I did not understand the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the resolution is morning business, then, of course, it is within the order; but if it is not morning business, I can not yield the joint resolution which is now under consideration for a long debate or for action upon any other matter.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that, of course, I would not take advantage of the courtesy which he has extended to unduly extend my remarks and prevent the consideration of the measure which he has in hand; but, if the Senator has no objection, I should like to hear some expression of sentiment——

Mr. HEYBURN. I call for the regular order; let us find out what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the unfinished business.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I ask whether the Senator has the right to take me off the floor by a point of that kind? I have the floor. I was about to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of this resolution; but if the other business is so pressing as to make it inconsiderate upon my part now to press the extension of my remarks, I am willing to waive that and to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understood the Senator from Iowa asked that the unfinished business he laid aside for business naturally coming up in the morning known as morning business. I understand that the resolution which the Senator from Nevada is discussing was introduced yesterday and comes up properly under this head, and it seems to me, under the circumstances, he is within the rule in discussing the resolution. I inquire whether that is not so?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the resolution had gone over subject to the call of the Senator, beyond question it would be in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand it did go over——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It seems it went to the table at the Senator's request.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not understand that the unfinished business was temporarily laid aside. That could only be done by a motion. The Senator said he would waive the unfinished business. That does not lay it aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the equivalent of a motion.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Has the Senator from Idaho any objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I would have serious objection to either its present or future consideration.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Idaho all object, I understand, to the consideration of this resolution, which simply enables the Republican Party, upon the recommendation of its President, to carry out the pledges which it has given to revise the tariff according to the rule established by it. Do I understand that to be the position of the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. If the unfinished business is before the Senate, then only a motion can dispense with it. I do not care to enter into the consideration suggested by the Senator from Nevada until I know whether the unfinished business is before the Senate. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for. The unfinished business is before the Senate. The Senator from Nevada has the right to discuss the unfinished business in any way he sees proper.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I concede that.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] was courteous enough to give way for the purpose of considering——

Mr. HEYBURN. I object.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I now continue, in which I have his consent——

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think I can participate in that. I object to the unfinished business being temporarily laid aside at this time.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, although that may have been the effect of what I said. I said I yielded for morning business. I am not one of those who are opposed to the resolution of the Senator from Nevada, but I can not allow it, if I can prevent it, to be taken up and thus prevent the consideration of the joint resolution. I would be very glad to secure the consent of the Senate to a time when it could be acted upon.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be taken up at the conclusion of the morning hour tomorrow and disposed of to-morrow by final vote.

Mr. CLAPP. There is already a unanimous-consent agreement covering the conclusion of the morning hour.

Mr. NEWLANDS. For what measure?

Mr. SMOOT. Senate bill 957.

Mr. CLAPP. The uniform bill of lading.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Is that likely to take the entire day, I will ask?

Mr. CLAPP. I do not know whether it will take more than a half hour, if it is reached.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask that this resolution be taken up immediately after the bill-of-lading bill is disposed of and that it be disposed of on the calendar day to-morrow by vote.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The regular order, Mr. President.

LAWTON RAILWAY & LIGHTING CO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 26236) conferring upon the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co. the privilege, rights, and conditions heretofore granted the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Co. to construct a railroad across certain lands in Comanche County, Okla., which was read the first and second times by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CLAPP subsequently said: I have authority from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which this subject belongs, to report the bill favorably, and I therefore ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD following the passage of the bill the report of the House Committee on Indian Affairs accompanying it.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 26236) conferring upon the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co. the privileges, rights, and conditions heretofore granted the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Co. to construct a railroad across certain lands in Comanche County, Okla., recommend that it be amended, and that as amended it do pass.

On page 2, line 2, after the word "Oklahoma," strike out the remainder of that line, all of line 4, and the word "mentioned" in line 5, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That no rights hereunder shall vest in the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co. until maps of location of the respective portions of the road through the Fort Sill Military Reservation and the lands reserved for Indian school purposes hereafter receive the approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior, respectively."

The bill as amended will read as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the privileges and grants heretofore conferred upon the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Railway Co., by virtue of the acts of March 28, 1910 (36 Stats., p. 268), and June 22, 1910 (36 Stats., p. 588), to construct and operate a railway, telegraph, telephone, and trolley lines through the Fort Sill Military Reservation and the public lands reserved for Indian school purposes, all in Comanche County, Okla., be, and the same are hereby, conferred upon the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co., a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Oklahoma: Provided, That no rights hereunder shall vest in the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co. until maps of location of the respective portions of the road through the Fort Sill Military Reservation and the lands reserved for Indian school purposes hereafter receive the approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior, respectively, subject, however, to all the limitations, restrictions, and conditions contained in the said acts: Provided, That said Lawton Railway & Lighting Co. shall complete the construction of that portion of its road between Lawton and Fort Sill within two years from the date of the passage of this act."

On March 28, 1910, Congress granted right of way to the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Railway Co. across certain lands, the act being as follows:

"PUBLIC, No. 111.

"[H. R. 19628.]

"An act to authorize the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Railway Co. to construct and operate railway, telegraph, telephone, and trolley lines through the Fort Sill Military Reservation, and for other purposes.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Railway Co., a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Oklahoma, be, and the same is hereby, empowered to survey, locate, construct, maintain, and operate railway, telegraph, telephone, and trolley lines through the Fort Sill Military Reservation, in Comanche County, State of Oklahoma, upon such terms and in such location as may be determined and approved by the Secretary of War.

"SEC. 2. That said corporation is authorized to occupy and use for all purposes of railway, telegraph, telephone, and trolley lines, and for no other purpose, a right of way 50 feet in width through said Fort Sill Military Reservation, with the right to use such additional ground where cuts and fills may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the roadbed, not exceeding 100 feet in width, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided, That no part of the land herein authorized to be occupied shall be used except in such manner and for such purposes as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railway, telegraph, telephone, and trolley lines; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used such portion shall revert to the United States: Provided further, That before the said railway company shall be permitted to enter upon any part of said military reservation a description by metes and bounds of the land herein authorized to be occupied or used shall be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the said railway company shall comply with such other regulations and conditions in the maintenance and operation of said road as may from time to time be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

"SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

"Approved, March 28, 1910."

On June 22, 1910, Congress granted to same company right of way across certain reserved public lands. The act is as follows:

"PUBLIC, No. 236.

"[H. R. 24939.]

"An act to authorize the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Railway Co. to construct and operate a railway through the public lands reserved for Indian school purposes, of township 2 north, range 11 west, Indian meridian, Comanche County, Okla., and for other purposes.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Railway Co., a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Oklahoma, be, and the same is hereby, empowered to survey, locate, construct, maintain, and operate a railway, telegraph, telephone, and trolley lines through the public lands of township 2 north, range 11 west, Indian meridian, in Comanche County, State of Oklahoma, upon such line or lines as may be determined and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

"SEC. 2. That said corporation is authorized to occupy and use for all purposes of railway, telegraph, telephone, and trolley lines, and for no other purpose, a right of way 50 feet in width through said public lands, reserved for Indian school purposes, with the right to use such additional ground where cuts and fills may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the roadbed, not exceeding 100 feet in width, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided, That no part of the land herein authorized to be occupied shall be used except in such manner and for such purposes as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railway, telegraph, telephone, and trolley lines; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used such portion shall revert to the United States: Provided further, That before the said railway company shall be permitted to enter upon any part of said public lands a description by metes and bounds of the land herein authorized to be occupied or used shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That the said railway company shall comply with such other regulations and conditions in the maintenance and operation of said road as may from time to time be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

"SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

"Approved, June 22, 1910."

The original company constructed a portion of the line, but on account of financial difficulties, consisting of lack of or exhaustion of funds, had their full rights terminated by an order of sale from the court.

The Lawton Railway & Lighting Co., a newly organized Oklahoma corporation, acquired the property and are now ready, able, and willing to complete the line. The two Government departments affected are both desirous of having the new company have the right of way, but hold they are technically without power to grant the right of substitution.

Both departments present to the committee strong letters of indorsement of the measure, the same being unanimously reported by the committee. It merely grants to the new company the right to do, subject to all conditions, the same thing the original company had power to do.

It is beneficial to the Indian school faculty and patrons, which is about halfway between Lawton and Fort Sill.

It is beneficial to the War Department, as it affords the fort people and Lawton people transportation back and forth, a distance of 6 miles.

It is, of course, beneficial to Lawton to have a car line, as the line will, in all probability, not be a paying proposition if it is confined to the city streets in a town of eight or ten thousand inhabitants.

The city has voted the required franchise, the new company on the ground and ready to build, the acts are safeguarded by every safeguard that the two departments and the committee could conceive. The enactment of the bill benefits all concerned and enables them to have car service that could not otherwise be acquired. The letters of the two departments are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, August 14, 1912.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your communication dated August 13, 1912, transmitting for report a copy of H. R. 26236, Sixty-second Congress, second session. The purpose of the bill is to confer upon the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co., a corporation of Oklahoma, all the privileges and grants heretofore conferred upon the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Railway Co. by the acts of March 28, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 268), and June 22, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 588).

The act of March 28, 1910, supra, granted the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Railway Co. the right of way across the Fort Sill Military Reservation, which is under the jurisdiction of the War Department, and you say in your letter of August 13 that a copy of H. R. 26236 has been referred to the Secretary of War for his report.

The act of June 22, 1910, supra, authorized the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Railway Co. to construct and operate a railway through certain public lands reserved for Indian-school purposes in T. 2 N., R. 11 W. It appears from the records in the case that the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Railway Co. became bankrupt and that its tangible property, with all its rights under the State law, passed by judicial sale to M. A. Wert, who proposed to sell and transfer to B. R. Stevens and associates, who, it is understood, represent the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co., and propose to convey such rights as they have acquired to that company. The Lawton Railway & Lighting Co. in last June requested that it be recognized as the successor to the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Railway Co. and filed maps in an attempt to comply with the provisions of the act of June 22, 1910, supra. The department concluded, after investigation of the matter, that no right could be recognized in the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co. to the franchise granted by Congress to the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Railway Co., and that as the grantee company had become insolvent and incapable of constructing and maintaining the road no action could be taken under the act.

The correspondence in the record shows that the construction of the proposed road would be of benefit to the public, and the department knows of no reason why the rights and privileges conferred upon the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Railway Co. should not be granted to the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co., the successor to the former company.

It is reported, however, that without previous departmental approval of location the old company proceeded to grade a line of road through the land reserved for Indian-school purposes. It may be, therefore, that without limitation approval of the present bill would commit the department to the location heretofore taken without departmental approval. To the end that there may be no misunderstanding and that the rights of the Government may be protected, I would suggest the addition of the following proviso:

"Provided further, That no rights hereunder shall vest in the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co. until maps of location of the respective portions of the road through the Fort Sill Military Reservation and the lands reserved for Indian-school purposes hereafter receive the approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior, respectively."

With this modification I recommend that the bill be passed.

Very respectfully,

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 13, 1912.

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith House bill 26236 (62d Cong., 2d sess.), being a bill to confer upon the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co. the privileges and grants heretofore conferred upon the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Co. by acts of March 28, 1910 (36 Stat., 368), and June 22, 1910 (36 Stat., 588), to construct and operate railway, telegraph and telephone, and trolley lines through the Fort Sill Military Reservation and the public lands reserved for Indian-school purposes in Comanche County, Okla.

The bill recites that the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co. is the successor in interest, through purchase under foreclosure sale, of the property and rights of the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Railway Co., and makes the confirmation of the rights granted by said acts subject "to all the limitations, restrictions, and conditions" contained therein, and provides further that the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co. "shall complete the construction of that portion of its road between Lawton and Fort Sill within two years from the date of the passage of this act."

The provisions of the bill are regarded as fully protecting the interests of the Government, and the road will benefit the Government by furnishing convenient means of transportation for the officers and enlisted men and other residents on the Fort Sill Military Reservation. The passage of the bill in its present shape is therefore recommended by this department.

Very respectfully,

HENRY L. STIMSON,
Secretary of War.

WITHDRAWALS OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5679) to amend section 2 of an act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawals of public lands in certain cases, approved June 25, 1910, which were on page 1, line 10, after the word "to" to insert "metalliferous"; on the same page, line 11, to strike out "other than coal, oil, gas, phosphates, potash, and nitrates"; and on page 3, line 1, after "of" to insert "California."

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to have an opportunity to examine the changes so as to determine the effect upon mineral lands——

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Idaho allow me to state them?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. I would be very glad to have the Senator state them.

Mr. SMOOT. The section as amended reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That all lands withdrawn under the provisions of this act shall at all times be open to exploration, discovery, occupation, and purchase, under the mining laws of the United States, so far as the same apply to metalliferous minerals—

Striking out these words:

Other than coal, oil, gas, phosphates, potash, and nitrates.

I understand the amendment inserting "metalliferous" was offered by Congressman MONDELL in the House and was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. That was stricken out. Is the word "metalliferous" a substitute—a new word?

Mr. SMOOT. A new word; and then the words stricken out are—other than coal, oil, gas, phosphates, potash, and nitrates.

So that the bill will read this way:

That all lands withdrawn under the provisions of this act shall at all times be open to exploration, discovery, occupation, and purchase under the mining laws of the United States, so far as the same apply to metalliferous minerals.

In other words, no matter what lands are withdrawn they are at all times open to exploration, discovery, occupation, and purchase under the mining laws of the United States, so far as they apply to metalliferous minerals; and I believe that is what the Senator desires.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I offered the amendment. But the word "metalliferous" is so indefinite and such an unusual word to use I presume the courts will have to deal with it. It should have been the usual language that we use—precious or valuable metals or minerals. But here is the term "metalliferous minerals." What other minerals are there than "metalliferous minerals"?

Mr SMOOT. Oil, for instance.

Mr. HEYBURN. Oil is not a mineral. It is a mineral oil.

Mr. SMOOT. It has been so held. So with gas. We simply strike out the words "other than coal, oil, gas, phosphates, potash, and nitrates" and put in "metalliferous minerals"; and I believe that is exactly what the Senator from Idaho wanted.

Mr. HEYBURN. It depends upon the construction that is put upon it. It is an involved, uncertain term. The language of the bill as we passed it was certain, definite. Of course, I am not going into a criticism of the intelligence of those who have undertaken to amend it.

Mr. SMOOT. There is another amendment to which I wish to call the Senator's attention. The bill reads:

And provided further, That hereafter no forest reserve shall be created, nor shall any additions be made to one heretofore created, within the limits of the States of—the States of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, or Wyoming, except by act of Congress.

Here is added "California"—

That is the present law, with California added.

Mr. HEYBURN. I congratulate California that it has entered into that limitation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah, that the amendments of the House of Representatives be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I hesitate to undertake the discussion of a matter of this importance at this late hour of the session. If I were voting favorably to the proposed amendment I should not do so. But as I am opposed to the joint resolution, and as it is said there is a widespread popular demand for it, the burden is perhaps upon those who vote against it to show some reasons for their vote.

I recognize the force of the argument of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], that such matters are entitled to submission, and that the people are entitled to vote on the question whether or not they desire to amend the Constitution. While I do not favor the resolution, I do not propose to longer delay the matter than to state some of the reasons why I can not favor it. I do not believe it the duty of a Senator who is opposed to a resolution of this nature to vote for it, but I do believe it is the duty to permit such things to come speedily to a vote, so that if the required vote can be had it may be submitted.

The joint resolution, Mr. President, presents but one question, and that is as to the eligibility of the Presidency to one term of service. The kindred question of a third term will naturally intrude itself into the discussion, and has already to some extent done so, but it really has no part in the consideration of the matter now before the Senate.

The sole and simple question is whether or not we will amend the Constitution so as to prevent a second term—so as to limit the eligibility to a single term. There is one respect, however, in which the two questions are allied in my conception of the situation.

One of the fundamental reasons for opposing the joint resolution on my part is that the people who could be trusted to determine whether or not they desire a President for the second term may also be trusted to determine whether or not they desire a President for a third term. I think they can be trusted to settle both questions in a way to best conserve the interest of the people and the Republic.

In other words, in so far as both these propositions rest upon the general proposition that the judgment of the voters must at last determine what is for the best interests of the Republic, in so far as that question inheres in both propositions they are allied, but I do not propose to follow the discussion of the latter proposition any further.

Mr. President, what does this resolution propose to do? It proposes that if a man is a dangerous President, a weak President, or pursuing a policy detrimental to our welfare, to continue the time in which he shall be an infliction, a detriment, to the country. If he is a wise President, one whose services are invaluable to his countrymen, it proposes to make his continuance in the service impossible. If he is a bad President, we are to have more of him than we have now. If he is a good and a great President, we are to have less of him than we have now. If he is a bad President, we are to be deprived of the power to condemn him. If he is a good President, we are to be prohibited from rewarding him. The faithful and the unfaithful servant have the same term of service, the same reward, and the same judgment at the hands of the people. Does this rule prevail anywhere else in the universe, in the realm of nature, or in the world of human endeavor? Is there anywhere to be found in the practical and everyday world such a principle as this? Does not the business world avail itself of experience, of honesty, of ability? Do the great business concerns provide in their charter that their presidents and managers shall not be subject to reelection on the theory that the stockholders may not know their worth? Why do we apply this rule in a Republic in government unless it be that in the last analysis we have arrived at the conclusion that the people possess not the wisdom to select the wise or condemn the unwise; unless it be that we have concluded the people are unable to know and unfit to determine when it is to the interests of the public to discontinue a man in the public service.

If we believe that the people have the capacity to judge of a man's worth, of his intelligence, of his integrity, of his ability, we will not be uneasy when they come to pass judgment. If we have a lingering belief that the people are unfit to perform this service, we will naturally be vigilant to guard against their performing it.

Now, we may argue to ourselves that business is the real reason for the lengthening of the term, but what has business to do with the question of ineligibility? There might be some argument from a business standpoint if we were willing to yield governmental interests to business which would justify the lengthening of the term, although in that I do not believe, yet that does not reach the proposition of ineligibility. Ineligibility, in my judgment, has its real foundation in the fear that the people may not act wisely and may not have the ability and courage to reject bad men.

At the basis of the proposition lies the question whether or not the majority of the voters of the United States are going to exercise this power in a way that we may conceive to be in the interest of the Republic. I know that there are many reasons which are stated, and strongly stated, why this amendment should prevail, but it seems to me at the basis of the entire argument rests at last the question of our faith in the judgment of the great tribunal which must always determine these matters.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] said upon yesterday that he would not be quite willing to accept the judgment of those who framed the Constitution as to what should at this time constitute a part of our fundamental law, because of the fact that the changes which have taken place are such changes as they could not have foreseen and against which they could not have guarded. For that reason the judgment of the present should be accepted as more conclusive than the judgment of those who framed the Constitution.

Generally speaking, there is a great deal in that statement, and I presume it has some element of truth in it under almost all conditions which may arise with reference to changes in the Constitution.

But there are certain general principles which were enunciated by those who framed this instrument with reference to this particular matter which are entitled to consideration, because conditions have not changed those principles.

Therefore, with some reluctance on account of time, I want to discuss briefly the views of the fathers upon this particular question. I think the reasons which actuated the fathers in framing this measure as they did have been misunderstood. I am led to that statement by reason of the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] yesterday to the effect that as Gen. Washington was expected to be the first President, it was thought that he would establish a precedent and that the future would follow the precedent; that therefore the question of the ineligibility was not incorporated into the Constitution. I do not read history in that way. In fact, I have never found any suggestion of that kind at any time in the history of those days.

I am not going into this extensively, but it could be easily shown some of those who now cite Gen. Washington's attitude as the proper one would not have in advance of his action considered him as the proper man to establish a precedent with reference to these matters. They looked upon him as monarchial in his tendencies and as disposed rather to take unto himself power than to reject the opportunity to exercise power.

Mr. Randolph submitted to the Constitutional Convention a proposition providing for a Presidency for a blank term of years, and that the President should be ineligible.

Mr. Pinckney submitted a proposition to the convention providing for a Presidency for a term of blank years and providing that the Presidency should be a reeligible office.

Mr. Patterson's proposition, which was nothing more than a proposition to enlarge and increase the powers of the Confederacy, did not cover the subject at all.

Mr. Hamilton submitted a proposition providing for a Presidency during good behavior. He afterwards, upon more mature reflection, changed his mind and came to be a powerful advocate of a short term, with power upon the part of the people to reelect.

We have, therefore, these three propositions which went into the convention and were discussed. There were few questions discussed more extensively than this very question. It came up repeatedly in the convention. At one time you will remember that they determined to have three Presidents selected from three portions of the country. At another time it was proposed that no President should succeed himself within the limit of 12 years. Finally the convention agreed upon the proposition that the term should be for seven years and the President should not be reeligible. This matter received the attention of the convention for a time, but at the time that this proposition was before the convention the method of electing the President was by the Congress of the United States or by the legislature. It is interesting to note that the argument against the reeligibility was based upon the fear of an intrigue possibly between the Legislature and the Presidency. It was thought that by or through intrigue between these two departments of government the President might be continued in office for an improper length of time.

At the time that this matter was under discussion in the convention and when they had agreed upon the proposition that the Presidency should not be a reeligible office, they had agreed, I say, upon the proposition of selecting the President through the Congress. It was believed that a combined intrigue between the legislative department and the Presidency might lead to the continuation of that office to an undue length of time, and without an opportunity for the intervening power of the people in regard to it. The matter went to the committee that was to give final form to the Constitution. This committee conceived the plan of selecting the President through the electoral college, taking it away from the Congress and leaving it indirectly to selection by the people, at least separating the legislative and the executive department with reference to the election.

I think I am perfectly safe in saying that, after the plan of the election of the President was determined upon as we finally found it in the Constitution—through electors—the proposition of limiting it to a single term no longer received any considerable support in the convention; that after they had eliminated the possibility of intrigue between the two departments it was not urged, and with the exception of two individuals in the convention, I have never been able to find that it was even discussed or mentioned thereafter. I believe that we must come to the conclusion from the convention proceedings that they never contemplated limiting it to a single term after the electoral college was planned. We find, therefore, from the proceedings of the convention that this question was thoroughly discussed, and that, after a full discussion and the electoral college was conceived of, it was finally rejected. Roger Sherman, in discussing the matter before the convention, said:

> If he behaves well he will be continued. If otherwise, he will be displaced on a succeeding election.

Gouverneur Morris, speaking on the same subject, said:

> To forbid reelection tended to destroy the great motive to good behavior—the hope of being rewarded by reappointment. It was to say to him, "Make hay while the sun shines."

We may hesitate to admit that ineligibility tends to destroy a great motive to good behavior, but it is truth worth observing, nevertheless. It is one of those great truths which will always be denied as applying to a particular individual, but does apply to all men with varying force and effect.

Mr. King said:

> He who has proved himself most fit for an office ought not to be excluded by the Constitution from holding it.

It seems that in that brief sentence there is a great deal worthy of our consideration. If a President has proved himself peculiarly capable of discharging the duties of this high office, has disclosed the judgment, the poise, and the patriotism which we are always anxious to note in the discharge of these duties, it would seem that there would be no necessity for making it impossible for him to continue in the service for such time as the judgment of the great mass of the people thought proper. It is not often that fitness and efficiency are condemned by laws and constitutions. It would seem that unless there be a fear that the people may be unable to determine the question of fitness and efficiency there could be no occasion for this amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of Michigan in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho a question.

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If this amendment were submitted to the people and if they adopted it would not that be the result of the judgment of the great mass of the people, and not only the result of the judgment of a majority but of the people in three-fourths of the States? In other words, does not the Senator think that it is a little bit unfair to argue this question as if some extraneous force was limiting the power of the people, instead of the people themselves limiting their own power, especially in view of the fact that all that is now sought is to submit the question to the people to see whether or not by the votes of a majority of the people of three-fourths of the States they are willing to bind their own hands in their own interest?

Mr. BORAH. Following the example of my illustrious friend, the Senator from Mississippi, who submitted a great many reasons why the people should adopt it, I am to-day submitting some reasons why they should not, both of us being perfectly willing to abide by that judgment when it shall have been rendered. I am quite willing, when I have expressed my views, that a vote of the Senate shall be had. I do not believe in resorting to any unreasonable methods to prevent submission. If the vote is here to submit it, well and good. I shall with confidence await the judgment of the people.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that perfectly. Nor does my question go to that nor does it go to any impugnment, of course, but, it seems to me, that the spirit of the Senator's argument is as if the people were being bound somehow not to exercise their will, and as if, in making that argument, he had forgotten to mention that the people could not be bound at all except by their own voices. You might say that the people were bound by the Bill of Rights in the Constitution, and they are; but it was a self-binding Bill of Rights, which they themselves adopted in order to keep themselves in moments of public excitement and passion and prejudice from doing things that they knew beforehand, in their cooler moments, would be unjust things to do. All we are asking here is that they should be given an opportunity to say beforehand that there is a given thing that they beforehand, in their cooler moments, would regard as a dangerous liberty for them themselves to have. They will be left the judges of it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is no question but that the people are at last to determine this matter, and the Senator from Idaho is quite willing that the people shall determine it. The Senator from Idaho has no disposition whatever to prevent the people passing upon this question, but this is the occasion and now is the time for the Senator from Idaho to express his views in regard to it. I do not understand that a Senator is expected to waive his convictions. He must vote his honest convictions. Any other theory would establish the fact that constitutional amendments are founded in the stultification of the Senate. The very fact that a certain vote is required implies that men will vote their views.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that, but I thought the Senator from Idaho to be arguing at one and the same time against the people adopting it and against the Congress submitting it.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Mississippi has not heard the Senator from Idaho state anything against the submission of it. I am arguing against the merits of the proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then the Senator from Idaho is for the passage of the joint resolution through the two Houses?

Mr. BORAH. I am for giving the people the opportunity to vote upon it when the plain terms of the Constitution have been complied with.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In other words, you would vote as a Senator to submit the amendment?

Mr. BORAH. No, I will not; because I would thereby indorse the resolution upon its merits. But I stand ready to consent that a vote be taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, but meanwhile by your individual vote you will vote against giving the people the opportunity to pass upon it?

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President, I am one of the people, and I am casting my vote against the joint resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But surely the Senator does not contend——

Mr. BORAH. I was sent here to exercise my judgment. If I make a mistake, the people will shortly send some one in my place, who will, according to the doctrine of the Senator from Mississippi, have no opinion and will exercise no judgment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, but naturally the Senator does not contend that when he casts a vote as a Senator he is merely casting a vote as one of the people. Surely the Senator will not contend that the fact that he is opposed to a certain amendment to the Constitution is a good, a sufficient, a valid reason why he should not submit it to the States to be voted upon.

Mr. BORAH. I am not willing, Mr. President, to appear to vote in favor of a proposed amendment in which I do not believe; but if the required number of the Senate are in favor of it, they are entitled to submit it, and I will not delay the submission of it longer than to submit a few remarks.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Except by one vote.

Mr. BORAH. Except by one vote, which represents my convictions with regard to it. We certainly have some duty to perform here in regard to it, because the Constitution of the United States makes it necessary to have a two-thirds vote. That assumes that the Senators will represent their views as to a proposed constitutional amendment. I do not believe that a Senator is to be charged with rejecting the proposition that the people should pass upon it simply because he can not bring himself to indorse the proposition which is included in the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, if the Senator will pardon me just once more——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BORAH. I am very glad to be interrupted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Undoubtedly, we have here a responsibility to discharge, a burden of public duty to carry, a question to ask ourselves and to answer, but that question is not the question as to whether or not the States should adopt a given amendment; it is a question as to whether or not we should submit to the States a given amendment.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator from Mississippi——

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the question with which we are faced.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator from Mississippi——

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, if I am not mistaken, he and I not long ago stood together upon a proposition in which that very distinction was made. I was very much opposed to the question of the recall of all officers, including even judges, but I was called upon to vote as to whether or not we should admit the State of Arizona with a constitution including that provision. I took the position that, while my own judgment was against it, it was a question for the people of Arizona to decide. And now, in this matter, unless I thought it of such magnitude and danger and vital importance morally and as affecting the independence of the Nation, I think I would solve every doubt in favor of permitting the people of the States in their conventions and assemblies to themselves pass upon the question.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator is quite correct when he says that the doubt should be resolved in their favor; but in view of the fact that the Constitution provides that a certain vote shall be required to submit a constitutional amendment, it must necessarily be considered that Senators will exercise their judgment upon that proposition. The remedy for the situation for which the Senator speaks is an easier method of amending the Constitution and not in the violation of the present Constitution and the compromise of your convictions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but upon the proposition of submission, not necessarily upon the merits of the proposition itself or the amendment itself.

Mr. BORAH. I said when I opened my argument that as the burden seemed to be upon me, as I was opposing what seemed to be a popular demand, I wanted to state my reasons for the position which I took. I agree with the Senator that no unnecessary delay nor no unnecessary obstacle should be put in the way of the people voting upon this matter, because they determine it at last, but I have never thought—I did not think so when I had charge in the Senate of the joint resolution with reference to the election of Senators by popular vote—that those who were opposed to it owed anything more than to permit it to come to a vote. I think to stand here and to object to a vote would be to disregard your duty, but I do not concede that it would be a disregard of your duty to announce your views and to vote in accordance with your views. I do not know of any other way to vote. The course which the Senator suggests would be weak if not cowardly.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the position which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] seems to take, and which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] seemed to take yesterday, to the effect that it was the duty of a Senator to vote to submit any proposed constitutional amendment to the people for them to determine is the correct one, why should there have been any limitation as to the number of votes required before it could be submitted? It takes a two-thirds vote to submit an amendment for ratification.

Mr. BORAH. Or why should it come here at all?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not want to be misunderstood in regard to the matter suggested by the Senator from Kansas. Undoubtedly the men who made the Constitution of the United States intended that no amendment should be submitted to the people of the country unless it received the approval of two-thirds of the Members of Congress; and it has been the practice for years and years that anywhere from 20 to 30 men in the Senate could prevent the submission of a proposed amendment to the Constitution to the people. As it is now, the negative votes of 33 Senators, if all Senators who are entitled to seats were in their seats, could prevent 20,000,000 men voting their wishes with regard to a constitutional amendment; and, as the Senate is now decimated, 20 men in the Senate can prevent these millions of people from expressing their views.

I agree with the Senator from Kansas that literally the Constitution requires what he says; but I have thought that the development of modern times had rather pointed to the conclusion that the real question was whether the amendment was one to be supported by so fair a proportion of the people that we ought to give them the opportunity to vote on it, and that 20 men here, if they knew that nine-tenths of the people of this country wanted a chance to vote upon a given proposition, ought not to interpose their adverse conclusions in regard to it.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. On the proposition that if 20 Senators believed that nine-tenths of the people wanted to vote on a constitutional amendment they would not be justified in preventing them, I entirely agree with the Senator from Iowa; but I do not believe that one-tenth of the people want to vote on this proposition.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator from Kansas puts his vote upon that belief, no man can quarrel with him. That is simply the ascertainment of a question of fact. I have believed that a very much larger proportion of the people desire a chance to vote upon this proposed amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. BORAH. I think the discussion which has just arisen may all be gathered around the question which is now being agitated of a more easy method of amending the Constitution; but the fact that we have the Constitution as we have it certainly puts upon a Senator the duty of examining for himself the question of whether or not he is in favor of a proposed constitutional amendment.

I am so far a believer in the doctrine which the Senator from Iowa states that, as I have said, I would not stand in the way for a moment of having a submission of a proposed amendment whenever the constitutional majority in Congress is to be found; but I do not know how a Senator could justify himself, under the Constitution, in voting in favor of the submission of a constitutional amendment in which he did not believe, for the reason that his vote not only carries with it the question of the mere submission, but it must necessarily carry with it the indorsement of the proposition. The most a Senator can do is to say that there shall be no opposition which extends further than the expression of his views and his vote.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I formerly was of the same opinion as the Senator from Idaho, but I want to give him an instance which arose in my State, and I should like to have his judgment with regard to the duty of a member of the legislature upon the problem presented.

In 1882 there was submitted to the people of Iowa a proposed amendment to the constitution establishing general prohibition against the sale of intoxicating liquors. It was carried by more than 30,000 majority. It was afterwards set aside by the supreme court of the State because it had not been adopted in accordance with all the forms required by the constitution. From that time until now there has been a constant endeavor to secure the submission of another amendment of a similar character. I think no one doubts that upon its submission it would be adopted.

Does the Senator from Idaho believe that if he were a member of the general assembly he ought to refuse to submit such an amendment for the action of the people if he himself did not believe in general constitutional prohibition?

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator asks how I would vote upon the proposition, I will say I would vote against the submission of it if I were against the proposition; but I would say to the people, "You made this constitution. The constitution of your State requires so many members of the legislature to agree to the submission of an amendment. That is necessarily a suggestion that those members are to exercise their judgment in regard to it. You can either change the constitution and take it in your own hands or limit the number necessary to vote for its submission." The people made this Constitution. They said there should be a certain vote. That necessarily implies that a Senator will exercise his judgment. Into that judgment will enter not only the question whether this is the proper time for such a measure, whether it is favored by a sufficient number, but the question whether or not it is a proposition in which the individual legislator believes.

But I look upon this as somewhat different from the ordinary measure. This is one of the cases in which the referendum has always been recognized as a fundamental principle, and I think there should be no obstruction whatever to a vote. I am in favor of taking a vote as soon as as we can express our views. I want to say, furthermore, that there is not the slightest indication that I have observed of preventing a vote.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Idaho is approaching a very interesting phase of this whole question, and that is the duty of a Senator in reference to the matter of the submission to the people of his own State of a constitutional amendment. I should like to have his view, and have it rather clearly, because his present view seems to me, if I may be allowed to say so, somewhat inconsistent with the argument at least that was made by the Senator upon the question of the submission of the amendment for the election of United States Senators by popular vote.

If I correctly understood the argument of the Senator, it was one of his chief propositions—and to me a very strong argument—that when any considerable portion of the people of the United States were in favor of the submission of that question to them, then, as representatives of the people, the Senators here ought to vote for what the people wanted; that they occupied a position not merely of exercising their own judgment, but the position of expressing the matured judgment of their own constituents; and if a subject had been so considered by the public, and after due consideration the public arrived at a conclusion, and that conclusion was in favor of the submission, it then became the duty of the Members of the Senate, representing those people, to submit it.

I was very much impressed with the Senator's argument upon the other proposition; in fact, I followed it, because I believed it was the correct proposition. I myself did not believe that the popular election of United States Senators would be beneficial in the long run to the people of the United States, but I did believe that for some 80 years nearly the people have been agitating the subject, and I believe that the vast majority of the people who had considered it were in favor of it, and I felt it was my duty, inasmuch as the people favored it, after proper consideration, to surrender my own views to their judgment and allow them to have the right to vote on it.

Now, getting this whole matter into one general proposition, it is this: Suppose the Senator believed that three-fourths of the people of the United States were in favor of a single term for President, but the Senator himself believed, representing his own conviction, that he should have as many terms as the people saw fit to elect him, would the Senator contend here that his duty under the Constitution would be to vote his own convictions and prevent such an amendment going to the people, even though he believed a vast majority of the people favored it?

Mr. BORAH. I am not conscious of any inconsistency between the position I now occupy and the one I occupied in reference to the submission of the joint resolution. There were, as the Senator well knows, some very strong manifestations of a filibuster against coming to a vote upon that question at all. I made no appeal to the Senate at any time for any Senator to waive his judgment when he came to cast his vote, but I did appeal to Senators to give me a vote upon the subject and to test the question whether or not we had the requisite number in this body to send it to the people. If we did have, I contended the people were entitled to it and entitled to pass upon it.

I think if the Senator will review the remarks I made he will find that I went no further than to ask for a vote upon the matter, and that is, I think, the full extent of any argument I have ever made here. At this time there is no delay that I know of. This matter is coming up at this late day, and there have been only one or two speeches made upon it and those were made by Senators who were in favor of it. Can it be said that those who have expressed their views upon the merits of the joint resolution and in favor of it are delaying it? The time has principally been occupied by those who are in favor of it.

Now, then, a word further.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Just a word further. If I understand correctly my duty here, if I believed that this constitutional amendment was not a thing which the Republic ought to have in its fundamental charter, I hope I would have courage enough to vote against it if every man, woman, and child in the United States was in favor of it. But I would turn about and assist those people in making it possible for them to get an easier method by which to submit such a proposition. But so long as they have written into their fundamental law that it shall require two-thirds, I assume that they intend that those men who represent them in the Senate shall exercise their judgment and, when two-thirds are required to submit it and that two-thirds are forthcoming, to submit it; and when not, not to submit it. I have never claimed that Senators should sacrifice their convictions. I do not I trust belong to that class of public servants, but did claim most earnestly that we were entitled to a vote. I hold now that the Senator in charge of this resolution is entitled to a vote.

Mr. McCUMBER. But the real answer I wish from the Senator, if he will allow me, is to the single proposition whether the Senator, as a progressive Republican, is in favor of allowing the people an opportunity to vote upon a proposition, if he believes a majority of the people want to vote upon it, notwithstanding the fact that he personally does not believe in it. In other words, as I put the question before, if the Senator believes that, say, three-fourths of the American people are in favor of having this matter submitted to them, that they may act upon it through their legislatures, though the Senator believes that they are not acting with the best judgment and that his own judgment is superior, would he vote their judgment or would he vote his own?

Mr. BORAH. Did the Senator have any difficulty in understanding my reply when I said that if all of the people of the United States were in favor of it and I was against it I would still exercise my judgment and my right to vote that way in the Senate? Is there any ambiguity about my answer? The difficulty seems not to be in the answer; it must be elsewhere.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think so, as the Senator now expresses it; but the Senator before expressed it in connection with the matter of delay, and I did not want his language to be construed as relating to the question whether or not we should vote, but how we should vote.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator referred to progressive Republicans. Let me say to the Senator that progressiveism, if you may call it such, does not imply the right to violate the Constitution of the United States. That is a right peculiar to the reactionaries. They are opposed generally to amending the Constitution because they pay no attention to it while it is in existence.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, not knowing to what reactionaries or who are the reactionaries, I can not reply directly to the statement of the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I assumed the Senator knew who are reactionaries when he assumed to know who are progressives.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can hardly say I know who is progressive when, under the term of progression, one argument is applied in one session of Congress and another argument directly in violation of it is applied in another Congress.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator from North Dakota had reference to myself, he has misstated the record.

Mr. McCUMBER. And again I might say it may be a question of judgment.

Mr. BORAH. Perhaps so, under some circumstances, but in this case I doubt it. The progressives believe in amending the Constitution when it is wrong, but I have never yet heard anyone advocate ignoring it while it is in existence.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have never heard of anybody advocating the ignoring of it at any time.

Mr. BORAH. How is that?

Mr. McCUMBER. I never heard of anyone, at least in the Senate or in the other branch of Congress, who advocated ignoring it at any time. If the Senator knows of such, of course he has knowledge that is entirely foreign to me.

Mr. BORAH. I think, Mr. President, we may dismiss this question of consistency and progressive Republicanism until the Senator from North Dakota refreshes his recollection about some things.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think I read the RECORD, perhaps, as thoroughly and understand it as thoroughly as does the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I hope so. I often wished I did understand it as thoroughly as does the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Thank you. I wish you did.

Mr. BORAH. Coming back to the subject which was under discussion, from which we have digressed for a time, the subject of one term for the President was referred to in the constitutional conventions which ratified the National Constitution. I believe Mr. Mason, of Virginia, referred to it in a very short paragraph. Mr. Henry, who spoke most earnestly against the ratification of the Constitution and spoke most earnestly upon the subject of the powers of the Executive, did not address himself to this section to any extent whatever. He did not regard it as one of the things which would make the Executive, as it was then created, dangerous to the Republic. It was referred to also in the New York convention. Mr. Parsons, in discussing the subject, said with reference to limiting it to one term:

> It deprives a man of honorable ambition whose highest reward is the applause of his fellow citizens of an efficient motive to great and patriotic exertions.

Chancellor Livingston said:

> Besides, it takes away the strongest stimulus to public virtue, the hope of honors and rewards. The acquisition of abilities is hardly worth the trouble unless one is to enjoy the satisfaction of employing them for the good of one's country.

I want to call attention to some excerpts also from the Federalist. This was, as we all know, a contemporaneous construction of the Constitution by the three men who were peculiarly fitted to construe it, and it has been a textbook ever since it was written. In one of these articles it is said:

> That magistrate is to be elected for four years and is to be reeligible as often as the people of the United States shall think him worthy of their confidence.

This is what the makers of the Constitution understood—that he should be reelected as often as the people thought he was worthy of their confidence, and they did not look forward to the fact that some great figure or character like Washington would amend the Constitution by a precedent or by custom. But they rested the proposition clearly upon the single principle that so long as a man commanded the support of a majority of his countrymen, so long as his acts and character called to his aid a majority of the votes of the people, it was perfectly safe to leave the question of tenure to them.

They had had some experience with this matter before in the confederation, not with reference to the presidency, but with reference to other officers, to which I will come a little later on.

It is further said in the Federalist:

> The ingredients which constitute safety in the Republican sense are, first, a due dependence on the people; secondly, a due responsibility.

The Senator from Iowa yesterday discussed at some length and very interestingly the proposition of the President looking to renomination and a reelection. What has the President to do in order to serve a second term in this country? He first submits his record to a review of his countrymen. He must next secure the nomination at the hands of his own party, and I may concede for the sake of the argument some of the arguments made by the Senator that he holds the advantage, if in office, in securing the renomination. He must not only secure the renomination, but the reelection at the hands of the people after four years' service, after a thorough presentation of his record, and after a thorough opposition on the part of the great parties as they will always exist in this country.

The judgment of the people taken under those circumstances must necessarily be, as the Federalist says, a safe guide, and he can be reelected as often as the people in their judgment think it wise to elect him. Again it is said:

> As, on the one hand, a duration of four years will contribute to the firmness of the Executive in a sufficient degree to render it a very valuable ingredient in the composition, so, on the other, it is not enough to justify any alarm for the public liberty.

> That experience is the parent of wisdom is an adage the truth of which is recognized by the wisest as well as the simplest of mankind. What more desirable or more essential than this quality in the governors of nations? Where more desirable or more essential than in the first magistrate of a nation? Can it be wise to put this desirable and essential quality under the ban of the Constitution and to declare that the moment it is acquired, its possessor shall be compelled to abandon the station in which it was acquired and to which it is adapted? This, nevertheless, is the precise import of all those regulations which exclude men from serving their country by the choice of their fellow citizens after they have, by a course of service, fitted themselves for doing it with a greater degree of utility.

> Even the love of fame, the ruling passion of the noblest minds, which would prompt a man to plan and undertake extensive and arduous enterprises for the public benefit, requiring considerable time to mature and perfect them, if he could flatter himself with the prospect of being allowed to finish what he had begun, would, on the contrary, deter him from the undertaking when he foresaw that he must quit the scene before he could accomplish the work and must commit that, together with his own reputation, to hands which might be unequal or unfriendly to the task. The most to be expected from the generality of men in such a situation is the negative merit of not doing harm instead of the positive merit of doing good.

I will not further trespass upon the time of the Senate, but these quotations from this work upon the Constitution, written at the time that the people adopted the Constitution, disclose the proposition which I wish to enforce upon the minds of the Senate, and that is that the fathers understood perfectly that this was not to be left to the precedent which might be established by Washington; that this was not to be left to this or that incident which might work against the proposition of a reelection, but they said plainly, "Here is the responsibility directly to the people. His term is short, and if at the end of that time he does well the people may reelect him. If he does ill, the people may reject him. But it rests at last upon the judgment of the masses of the American people as to who shall be their President."

We sometimes say in these days we have more faith in the masses of the people than did our fathers; that they were lately from those conditions which militated to some extent against their faith in popular government; that they looked upon the rule of the Republics of Greece and Venice and other foreign countries as republics which had been destroyed and passed into nothingness because of the fact that the people did not put upon themselves sufficient restraint. They therefore made a Constitution which put certain restraints upon the people.

But, Mr. President, I call attention to one thing which inheres in this Constitution to a remarkable degree. While the fathers placed in the Constitution such prohibitions as would compel the people to stop and consider before they acted, while they enforced deliberation and judgment, there is not to be found in the political side of the Constitution any prohibition upon the part of the people, after they have had time to consider, after they have had time for deliberation, after discussion has been had, and views have been interchanged. If I read the Constitution correctly, the fathers said the ultimate judgment of the people must obtain, and they builded this Government upon that faith. True, they said we want the sober second thought, but when the judgment of the people had been matured they doubted its wisdom not at all.

I believe when they said that the people shall elect a President as often as they desire to elect him, they gave a manifestation of their faith which we may do well to emulate.

Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] had printed as a Senate document a few days ago a document entitled "The real authorship of the Constitution of the United States explained." I do not know, and I have not undertaken to determine, to what extent the distinguished author referred to in this document had to do with the formation of the Constitution, but all must agree that here is a most interesting, instructive document. I quote from it an extract which seems to me has a bearing upon this particular subject. Pelatiah Webster said:

> I think that frequent elections are a sufficient security against the continuance of men in public office whose conduct is not approved, and there can be no reason for excluding those whose conduct is approved and who are allowed to be better qualified than any men who can be found to supply their places.

Discussing the Confederacy he said:

> I have no objection to the States electing and recalling their delegates as often as they please, but think it hard and very injurious both to them and the Commonwealth that they should be obliged to discontinue them after three years' service, if they find them on that trial to be men of sufficient integrity and abilities; a man of that experience is certainly much more qualified to serve in the place than a new member of equal good character can be; experience makes perfect in every kind of business—old, experienced statesmen of tried and approved integrity and abilities are a great blessing to a State—they acquire great authority and esteem as well as wisdom, and very much contribute to keep the system of government in good and salutary order; and this furnishes the strongest reason why they should be continued in the service, on Plato's great maxim that "the man best qualified to serve, ought to be appointed."

Mr. Webster thought if they are required to go back sufficiently often to the people for a recommendation to continue in their service that that was a sufficient safeguard. If we are to accept as the basic proposition of government that the people are capable of self-government, if we are to assume that the people have the intelligence to choose their Representatives, what possible harm can come from submitting a man with a record as a public servant against a man who has not a record as a public servant? Shall we say that we will put in as a basic principle of the Republic that the people shall not have the benefit of experience and patriotism if a majority of 90,000,000 people believe that it is worth their while to call him into service? I know that those who are advocating this joint resolution do not look at it as an impeachment of the judgment of the people; I know that they would not favor such a proposition; but when you analyze it and get down to the basic proposition, what is it but an impeachment of the ability of a majority of the voters of the United States to say whether a man has been of sufficient service to continue his service.

Mr. President, we have now looked briefly into the history of this question and referred to some extent to the views of the fathers. We may now examine the proposition upon original grounds and in the light of present conditions. What is there in the present situation which requires that we put into our Constitution a prohibition against a man serving his country so long as his acts and character command the support and approval of a majority of his countrymen? Is there anything in the nature of the powers exercised by the President which makes it dangerous to submit the record and fitness of a man for this high office to the judgment of the voters of the United States? Is there anything at this time to be asserted and sustained in the implied charge that the people of the United States are no longer fitted to say when a man's public service should cease and when his fitness for the obligation of the office no longer entitle him to the honor? Has anything yet transpired in these more than a hundred years experience indicating that our present plan is a defective plan, and most of all, are the supposed defects of the plan going to be eliminated by the proposed change? Have the people in the past exercised this power by selecting whom they would to the detriment of the country? Have there been changes in the political situation which make it necessary after a hundred years to take something from the power of the people to select their own Representatives?

If the simple but searching question were asked, Are the people of the United States capable of terminating a man's public service at a time when such services for the public good should be terminated, it would likely be answered in the affirmative. To answer in the negative would be to challenge the capacity of the people to select their Representatives at all. It requires no greater capacity upon the part of the voter to select or reject for a second term or a third term than for the first. In fact, the voter has a much better opportunity to pass judgment in an intelligent way, for the record is open before him. In the first instance, a great deal must be taken for granted. No one knows until a man has been an incumbent in that great office in what manner he will meet its great responsibilities or how wisely he may exercise its great powers. But at the end of four years the record lies open to all—the wisdom or want of wisdom, the poise or want of poise, the understanding or lack of understanding of the duties of the office, everything which a thoughtful and considerate people engaged in the grave task of choosing a Chief Magistrate need to know can be known. In view of our party system and the searching and widespread power of the press, all the facts will undoubtedly be given to the voter. We must certainly be prepared at all times to assert and successfully maintain that the strength and virtue of our individual citizenship is the measure of the strength and virtue of the Government itself. To assert to the contrary is to assert that representative government has an inherent and incurable defect. If the people in the exercise of the franchise can not reject a dangerous man or continue in office a desirable and useful man, then the selections in the first place are but the result of ignorance or chance. And in the end the whole affair must terminate in a wreck. No form of free government, no scheme of social polity can ever be devised by which you can make a strong and efficient and powerful Government out of incompetent and irresponsible citizens. The power which is to keep this Government going, which is to supply it with vitality and strength and durability, must be found outside of the mere technical forms of government, outside of the formal statutes and constitutions, must be found among the people; when it is not found there, there is no hope elsewhere.

When you elect a man to the office of the Presidency for the term of six years with no chance for reelection you place him in the same relation to the people for that length of time as a President would be who should be elected for life. He has his term of six years upon the same terms and conditions as a man would have whose term was for life. The time in each instance would be different, but the attitude, the responsibilities, the regard for public opinion would be the same in each instance.

If human nature were not weak there would be no occasion for these precautions and limitations. But it is weak, and weakest when tempted with power. We therefore prescribe the powers to be exercised, and limit the term within which the exercise of these powers is to be enjoyed. We have that now. If the powers are exercised wrongfully we recall him, if rightly we reward him. Second, we endeavor in a free government to so arrange matters that the mind and thought of the public servant will always be directed toward the people, and when I say the people I mean the whole Nation in the aggregate. I would not have a man the slave of public opinion, and no great President has ever been so. But if he is to be a slave at all I want his master to be the public and not the subtle, persistent, tireless forces which operate by night and by day about the sources of governmental power. In other words, I want his mental vision turned toward the broad horizon of public thought, that his ear may not be too successfully abused by the whispers of the silent, selfish influences always at work.

I know, sir, that now and then some rare soul, some strangely endowed and singularly gifted being is turned loose upon this planet, willing to toil in silence and unrewarded, solely for the benefit of mankind, that such beings need not the stimulus to public virtue which comes from the commendation of their fellows; commended or condemned, they work on. But these rare beings come too seldom to be available for Presidents or any other office. Even if they were more plentiful they would not be recognized in a political convention. Human sympathy and human fellowship, the desire to possess the commendation of your fellows, play a powerful part in the lives of the best of men. The Father of our Country was saddened and depressed in his last years because the turmoil which characterized the closing days of his administration seemed to estrange from him many of his countrymen. Mr. Jefferson relates how upon one occasion he seemed utterly disconcerted with personal grief. Who for a moment doubts that the shoulders of Lincoln were more stooped and his sad face still sadder because he felt the shafts of malice and hatred sent his way? The most powerful factor in public service to a right-minded man is the desire to so perform his work as to command the approval and judgment of his fellows. He wants that expression in a definite and concrete way, and for that he toils, and it does not make any difference how noble may be his purposes this feeling is never absent. Why divorce the public servant from this influence? Why put him in a position where this stimulus is removed? Why deny him the opportunity to know whether his people approve or disapprove? Why remove this powerful motive for exceptional exertions for the public good? I would not be charged with saying that this is the only motive for public service, but it is one of such powerful, persistent presence that it seems unnecessary to destroy it.

I repeat that I want the Chief Magistrate to feel and to know that there is a power which can intelligently commend and reward him if he does well and a power which will inevitably condemn him if he does ill. I do not want this influence destroyed while the other and sinister influence, which will always be at work, is left free to continue its exertions. The selfish, the special interests, the privileged, and those seeking privileges to direct and dominate an administration will be just as powerful as ever, while the power which can punish him if he yields to their influence is thwarted. The President is made to know in the beginning that the public can neither give nor take away. After he gets his certificate of office he is for all intents and purposes for six years an autocrat.

I grant you, Mr. President, my theory is all wrong if it be not conceded, to start with, that the general judgment of the voters is a safe basis for action. If it be thought that our people are becoming excitable, prone to passion, intemperate, fond of strife, unreliable, and unstable, then it is undoubtedly better if we have fewer elections. After awhile we may arrive at the point where it will not be necessary to elect anybody at all. If it is thought that ninety millions of people can be coerced or thrown into a frenzy or blinded as to usurpations, then let us have fewer elections. As soon as the people have gotten used to 6 years we can perhaps increase it to 10.

But, Mr. President, let us not be too easily discouraged by superficial and passing incidents. The great body of the people is not affected by these agitations upon the surface between individuals. Let us not listen too seriously to the cynic. He is an old and familiar friend. His drawn and pinched countenance has marred every heroic scene in the history of the world. His sepulchral wail has mingled with the strains of progress since time began. No superstition was ever compelled to take its fangs from the intellect of man, no cruel creed was ever rejected, no great law was ever written, no battle for human rights was ever fought that this croaking prophet of evil and chaos was not there to discourage the work. No man ever stood forth in a great cause that the people were not warned that the purpose was to destroy, not protect, their rights; but thus far the people have not been misled. They have judged aright and they will continue to do so.

It seems to me that it is neither necessary nor expedient to establish by the fundamental law that the people shall not be permitted to exercise their judgment as to who shall be their Chief Magistrate at a particular time or in a particular emergency. I can understand perfectly all these constitutional limitations which are calculated to enforce deliberation and consideration upon the part of the people before final action is taken. But I can not understand nor appreciate those limitations which challenge the capacity of the people to take action after full and free discussion of the subject. If I did not believe that the safest and soundest guarantee of free institutions was to be found in the final judgment of the voters of this country after full and intelligent discussion, I would not only distrust our system, but I would feel however much good fortune a new country and favorable economic conditions might postpone it for a season, that in the end our scheme of government would end in a miserable failure. It is not flattering the people, it is not demagoguery to urge that the judgment of the majority in such matters as these must always be regarded and accepted as safe and sane. It is a plea, sir, for the first and indispensable principle upon which our whole fabric of government is reared. It is a cardinal tenet of that faith which brought the fathers to Philadelphia in 1787 and under the inspiration of which every great disciple of free government has since lived and carried on his work. No one will ever charge Alexander Hamilton with having molded his views for popular favor. Superb and masterful in his intellectual dominancy, he stands amid that splendid group of men clean of every taint of the demagogue. In fact, the criticism has been that he was a royalist and distrusted too much the capacity of the people for self-government. I do not now stop to argue that charge, but certainly I may with propriety quote him as he spoke upon this particular question. "Nothing appears more plausible at first sight nor more ill founded upon close inspection than a scheme which in relation to the present point has some respectable advocates—I mean that of continuing the Chief Magistrate in office for a certain time and then excluding him from it either for a limited period or forever after. This exclusion, whether temporary or perpetual, would have nearly the same effects, and these effects would be for the most part rather pernicious than salutary."

No, Mr. President, the vital principle of representative government is that the representative, the political agent, shall return at stated periods for the approval or rejection of the people—the conclusive presumption being that in the forum of public conscience we have not only the highest but the wisest tribunal to which we can appeal in so grave a matter. If we can not rely upon the moderation, the wisdom of the majority of the whole people, where then shall we go for guidance? If the judgment of 90,000,000 of people expressed under the orderly forms of procedure are not to be accepted, to what arbiter shall we go? If it shall be charged that a man has become overambitious, that his plans seem to threaten the stability of our institutions, to whom can we submit that proposition with more complacence as to the result and more assurance of the correctness of the verdict than to those in whose keeping are all the institutions under the flag. On the other hand, if some great crisis is at hand, as when war is upon us, or if we are confronted with civic problems involving no less than the happiness of the whole people and the continuance of liberty, and the extended service of some individual who has earned the confidence and love of his countrymen seems desirable, can we not safely submit this question also to the voters, and having it submitted, who shall be found as a believer in our form of government to challenge that verdict? Shall the people under such circumstances and in such a crisis find that a ban has been placed upon ability for fear that the people would be unable to distinguish between a usurper and a patriot?

I concede that some of the arguments for a longer term seem, in the first instance, persuasive. The plea is for business tranquillity. The market place, they tell us, is disturbed by the too oft-recurring elections. The great growth of industrial affairs does not, after all, seem to sustain this contention. There is a dispute among the philosophers as to whether, intellectually and morally, the individual has progressed noticeably in these 3,000 years. Does our civilization produce greater intellects than that of Aristotle or Plato or greater statesmen than Pericles? But no one doubts the marvelous strides in the industrial world—business—business dominates and directs everything and everybody. The church, the State, politics, and religion are all influenced by its subtle, pervading, and persistent power.

And I am one who believes we can pay too high a price even for business tranquillity—the tranquillity under whose soothing shelter sprout and grow special privileges and governmental favors—a million times more menacing to the life of a republic than dictators; that business tranquillity which causes men to become indifferent to obligations of government and, what is more discouraging, sometimes unfits them for the sacrifices which every citizen is called upon to make for the general good.

Back of all forms and details of government, back of all statutes and constitutions, back of efficient democracy, back of successful representative government is the citizenship of the country. Let us shape our institutions and our laws, therefore, with a care for the building up of that citizenship and for the training for the sacrifices and obligations exacted and imposed by all who live rightly in a republic. Business will come, business will thrive, wherever may be found a people capable of orderly and wholesome self-government. France was one of the richest countries on the face of the earth just before the French Revolution, at a time when misery prevailed in almost every household among the middle classes and the peasants of the land. Our wealth and our business success depend upon the stature of our citizenship.

Our election campaigns constitutes the great university where the voter is trained for active and efficient citizenship. We can not measure the worth of an institution of government by temporary effects or conditions; we must view it as it works from decade to decade and through the sweep of the centuries. What effect does it have upon the character of the people—upon human progress as it works on through the years? If our people were called to the polls once in 20 years they would soon be incapable of discharging the duties imposed upon them. Men only grow to the full stature of citizenship when in the enjoyment and exercise of duties and obligations of citizenship. On the other hand, if we were to choose our Chief Magistrate every 30 days the element of unrest would predominate to the detriment of permanent growth and progress. Between these extremes, where on the one hand capacity and efficiency are sacrificed, and on the other turmoil and unrest prevails, lies the compromise ground, where ability and stability are joined in permanent wedlock.

This compromise ground the fathers found and a hundred years has demonstrated their wisdom. They said, first, we will provide for such a term in length as will insure the element of stability; second, we will not make it long enough to endanger the liberty of the people; third, we will at the end of the stated period send the faithful and the unfaithful back to the sovereign tribunal of the people for judgment; and, fourth, we will make it possible that there may accompany the Chief Magistrate through all his services the noblest ambition of exalted minds, the ambition to win and to hold the approval and commendation of a great and free people. The highest ambition of a public servant if he believes in the wisdom and patriotism of the people, if he believes in our theory of government, is to hear the pronouncement coming up from the millions of his countrymen, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." Why should we eliminate this powerful element, beneficent and wholesome, from public life; that element which has steadied and inspired, guided and accentuated the efforts of the best men who have ever presided over the destiny of the Republic?

Our Government will perhaps never again experience the strain through which it passed in 1864. A fratricidal war was dragging wearily along with no assurance at the beginning of this year that it would soon terminate. The frightful disaster at Fredericksburg, the carnage at Chancellorsville were ominous reminders of what might at any time occur again. Grant had crossed the Rapidan and was plunging into the wilderness of Virginia. Sherman was cutting his way through the heart of the gallant but desperate South. Constitutional government was utterly without a guardian save as the guardianship was to be found in the loyalty of the masses. Had the people lost heart, had they swung from their moorings for a season the dream of the fathers would have ended in hideous chaos.

Under such condition, sir, we were called upon to elect a Chief Magistrate. We will never elect one under more adverse circumstances or under conditions which will more thoroughly test the capacity of the people for self-government. It is difficult for us to realize now what took place, but a recurrence to history leaves us in no doubt. The man at the helm to whom all parties, all people, and all races now pay homage was utterly distrusted by the leaders of the day. There is a perfectly well-authenticated story that a friend of Abraham Lincoln journeying to Washington in his behalf asked Thad Stevens to introduce him to Lincoln's friends in Congress. Stevens took him over and introduced him to Arnold of Chicago and told him if there was any other who believed it to be wise to reelect Mr. Lincoln he did not know who he was.

The opposition declared that it was dangerous, especially under such circumstances as then prevailed, to choose a man for more than one term and pointed to the fact that no man since Jackson had been chosen for a second term. The convention which met at Cleveland and nominated Fremont declared for a single term and charged Lincoln with usurping the constitutional powers of the Government. Salmon P. Chase, afterwards Chief Justice of the United States, appointed by Lincoln, declared: "I doubt the expediency of reelecting anybody, and I think a man of differing qualities from those the President has will be needed for the next four years." In February, 1864, a large number of Congressmen and Senators at Washington joined in a circular to the people urging that the welfare of the country demanded a more vigorous and capable man than Lincoln. This is not the first time nor the last that we have ample proof that sane and wholesome public opinion does not seem to thrive in the atmosphere of the Capital.

Horace Greeley urged that it was unsafe to choose any man for a second term and suggested in the place of Abraham Lincoln Benjamin Butler, of Massachusetts. Stevens, of Pennsylvania, declared that Butler was undoubtedly the choice of the people. Henry Winter Davis, of Maryland, urged that the salvation of the country demanded a new man. Thurlow Weed advised Lincoln that he could not be elected. The opposition papers declared that Lincoln was interested in the profits of Government contracts. As late as September Horace Greeley insisted that Lincoln was already defeated and demanded that a new convention convene.

But, Mr. President, Lincoln's power rested elsewhere; the guaranty of constitutional government rested elsewhere; the love of country which selfish ends could not blind, the poise which adversity could not disturb, the discriminating judgment and searching insight which leaders could not warp were to be found elsewhere; and with a unity of voice seldom known in this country or any other country, coming up from the workingman and the lawyer, from the farmer and the mechanic, from the merchant and the banker, unanimously demanded the renomination of Lincoln and stood loyally by him to the close of the election. The people were not disturbed by second terms or dictators. They were not to be misled by the fears and agitations of envious and ambitious men. With a wisdom amounting to inspiration they stood by the grandest soul yet born under the American flag. Oh, Mr. President, unless we are all wrong in our theory of government, unless every step we have taken from Bunker Hill to this hour has been in the wrong direction, we can afford to trust the voters of this country, whatever the crisis may be, to choose whom they would have as their President. "A second term," said Lincoln in a letter to a friend, "would be a great honor." Why take out of the moral economy of this Republic the aspiration, the ambition which could stir to action and guide the footsteps of Abraham Lincoln?

A renowned political philosopher once said: "A great statesman is he who knows when to depart from traditions as well as when to adhere to them." That is true. The human family will not be fettered by traditions or unnecessarily bound by constitutional provisions. It reserves the right to reject the one and to amend the other. "A state without the means of some change is without the means of its conservation." But changes to command my support must harmonize with the principle that these things which, in their nature are subject to determination by the people in their popular judgment, must be left alone for them in such way to determine.

The centripetal tendencies of society and of government are tremendous. The concentration and centralization of wealth, social exclusiveness, centralization of government, these are the tendencies of the times, menacing and momentous. The power now lodged in the bureaus of this Government removed from control or sympathy of the people no framer of our Constitution ever contemplated. I will not, in addition, give my indorsement to these tendencies by consenting to have incorporated for the first time in the fundamental charter a provision which may render the Chief Magistrate less responsible to public demands, less anxious for public commendation, or which carries with it the equally obnoxious thought that those who first selected the Chief Magistrate have not the discrimination or wisdom to reward the faithful, reject the incompetent, or condemn the recreant.

I point to the record of a hundred and twenty-five years and ask, What serious mistakes have been made in the choosing of Presidents for more than one term? Call the roll. Washington and Jefferson and Madison and Monroe and Jackson and Lincoln and Grant and McKinley and Cleveland. Show me another line of chief magistrates or rulers with which to compare this long line of American statesmen and patriots. No line of rulers or chief magistrates, whether of hereditary sovereigns coming down through successive generations or the freely chosen of a free people, can compare with this line of American Presidents. Will you weigh as against this record of efficiency and honor the doubts and fears and anticipations of the hour? Will you place over against this record nothing more than some possible advantages of the market place?

When Cæsar comes, when the man on horseback enters the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue, it will be after the question of terms of office, whether for four years or six years, for eligibility or noneligibility, shall have ceased to be considered; it will be after the Constitution shall have been discredited, its terms forgotten. It will be when the people shall have ceased to consider whether it provides one thing or another. So long as we are making constitutions or amending them we do so upon the basis that that Constitution is to serve a free people, who love their Government, who are intelligent and patriotic, who shall jealously guard its interests. For such people there can be no justification in taking away their rights to select whom they would for their Chief Magistrate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I listened with some interest to the argument of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

I listened a year ago, and I may say with an equal degree of interest, to the argument of the same Senator upon a similar proposition. That proposition was the submission to the people of an important constitutional amendment. The Senator says in his argument to-day that after due deliberation the judgment of the people should prevail. I agree with the Senator entirely upon that, but I believe it should prevail whether I agree with them or not. The position of the Senator from Idaho is that the judgment of the people shall prevail provided a sufficient number of Senators here will vote the same way they believe; but if I understand the position of the Senator from Idaho, the judgment of the people shall prevail when it agrees with his judgment; that it shall not prevail, so far as his vote can prevent it from prevailing, if it does not conform to his judgment; and the Senator considers me a reactionary because I will not agree with that philosophy.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] both made strong arguments about a year ago, and both made practically the same argument in favor of the constitutional amendment; and if not the words of the argument, at least the spirit of the argument was that after the people have duly deliberated upon any question and have formed a conviction upon it, it then becomes the duty of the Senate of the United States to present the matter before the people in such a way that they themselves register their judgment in accordance with their conviction.

That is the attitude of the Senator from Iowa to-day upon this question. That is not the attitude of the Senator from Idaho upon the same question. If the argument of the Senator from Iowa is consistent, then the argument of the Senator from Idaho is not consistent, because they both can not be consistent.

Mr. President, those who oppose the submission of this question to the people of the United States oppose it, I will admit, upon principle, but they oppose it upon what I conceive to be a wrong principle. They oppose it upon a theory to which I have never yet given my consent, the theory that the moment a man accepts a public position he usually loses his innate honesty, and he needs, in order to hold to a strict performance of his duty, the allurements of another term ahead of him—that he needs the inducement to hold him to a course of strict integrity. I do not accept that proposition. My own conviction—and I think I have perhaps as fair a knowledge of humanity in general as my friend the Senator from Idaho—is that men are generally honest; that other things being equal they will act honestly, they will act fairly. I will admit that while nearly all men are by impulse honest, nearly all men have a weakness, but the weakness is not dishonesty, though it may lead in that direction. Leave a man to operate according to his own convictions of right and wrong and he will generally follow the right path. If you hold a temptation before him he is more liable to desert that path.

Mr. President, one of the great sentences in our Lord's Prayer is "Lead us not into temptation." It is not to make our impulses honest and fair—they are naturally that way—but to "Lead us not into temptation"—to abandon them. We will be more liable to follow the natural impulse of human character, to do right by ourselves and right by the public, if we have no temptation before us.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is following the argument once made by Alexander Hamilton in favor of a life term for the Presidency. That it is perfectly consistent with the train of reasoning and the thought of the Senator I have no doubt.

Mr. McCUMBER. Nothing in the world is further from my thought or from my training. On the contrary, I would be in favor of a single term, the shortest term—that is, a term of four years rather than a term of six years.

Mr. President, I admire the sagacity, I admire the wisdom of Alexander Hamilton as I do of Thomas Jefferson, and as I do of all the great men who had to do with the building of our Constitution. But I am not a hero worshiper, and I do not quote those authorities to sustain me in my own judgment whenever they happen to agree with my judgment and to disavow their arguments whenever they do not agree with my judgment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I said the Senator was following the argument of Mr. Hamilton. Mr. Hamilton's idea at one time was when a man was once in office, his own innate disposition to do right was all that was necessary, and that was the basis of his contention in the first instance in regard to it. I was not reflecting upon the Senator except to say that the argument he advances is one which leads to life service in everything.

Mr. McCUMBER. It does not lead to life service by any means.

Mr. BORAH. A man elected for six years to the Presidency with no chance for reelection is placed in the same attitude for that length of time as a man elected for life.

Mr. McCUMBER. The American people, like all people, may make a mistake, but I would not put them in the position where they could not retrieve themselves from any error. I think they made a mistake in the election of 1892, and I would have given them the very first opportunity to extricate themselves from the condition in which they placed themselves. That opportunity came in four years.

Mr. BORAH. The position of the Senator now is that he would so arrange matters that such a mistake, if mistake it was, as took place in 1892, might continue two years longer.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no.

The Senator made a statement a short time ago that I sometimes made an argument upon a wrong assumption of fact, and then when less than three minutes ago I said I would be in favor of a single term and the shortest term, four years, I am surprised that the Senator asserts that I am in favor of a six-year term, or increasing the present term two years.

Mr. BORAH. I understood the Senator to say he was in favor of this resolution, and the resolution provides for a term of six years.

Mr. McCUMBER. I said what I was in favor of. I said I favored the amendment offered which would limit the term to four years rather than six years, but I am in favor of a limitation of the term.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] expressed my views more eloquently than it would be possible for me to express them when he said that the duty of the President in that high office was the duty to attend wholly and solely to his official functions, and he ought not to be hampered in the performance of that duty by being compelled so to conduct himself either toward the people generally or toward anyone else that he can not exercise his whole attention, his best judgment and best impulses, for the benefit of the people whom he represents.

Mr. BORAH. Is the duty of the President in that respect any different from the duty of a Senator?

Mr. McCUMBER. The duty of the President is a different duty from that of a Senator or a Representative. It differs both in its nature and its degree.

Mr. BORAH. But the obligation of a Senator is to perform the duties of his office regardless of everything except the rightful discharge of the duties.

Mr. McCUMBER. Finish the sentence.

Mr. BORAH. I did finish it. That is precisely what the President should do. He should perform the duties of his office for the benefit of the public, whether he is to be reelected or not. So should a Senator. Is the Senator from North Dakota in favor of one term for Senators?

Mr. McCUMBER. The importance of the great office of President of the United States overshadows so much the importance of the other, in the mind of both the holder of the position and of the public in general, that the same rule would not necessarily apply to each.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. We see to-day one who has occupied the presidential chair practically two terms, who has tasted power, who seems to still long for the sensation of power, for public approval, and all the notoriety that surrounds the Presidency, and when we observe this powerful influence controlling a single individual we can easily understand that the rules which apply to that position are not the same as those which might apply to a Senator, a Representative, a governor, or any State official.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota further yield?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator will agree with me that if all the Senators were elected for one term the Senate as a whole would be almost as influential a body as the President. It is not a question whether one Senator shall be elected for a single term, but do you believe in electing all Senators for a single term, and do you say that the Presidency of the United States is overpowering as against the Senate of the United States as a whole?

Mr. McCUMBER. No, Mr. President. The President of the United States occupies a position in which his power is greater than that of the greatest potentate in the world.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment. Senators are simply lawmakers, and that is the limit of their function.

Mr. BORAH. And that is the most important function in the Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. The President has a hundredfold greater powers than those exercised by any Senator. His power is greater than king and, therefore, may well be limited in its duration.

Mr. BORAH. But the Senator says now he thinks the President has such power that it is dangerous for him to have it without restraint. A few moments ago he said that the rule for exercising that power was simply the man's innate sense of what was right or what was wrong. If that is true, what is the difference whether you elect him for a shorter or for a longer term? You concede by your argument and admit the fact that there is, after all, to be a restraining influence against this power, that it should be limited, either limited by the Constitution or limited by the people. I would limit it by the judgment of the people. If he has done well, reward him. If he has done ill, condemn him. You will never put into the Constitution a principle which will be so restraining in its influence as that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know the Senator's position. He has repeated it again and again. The Senator's position is that a President's character, his human nature, is such that he needs the allurement of a succeeding office to bring about the best results of his administration. I deny that. I say he needs the removal of the temptation of another term in order that he may better exercise the innate honesty that is a part of his human nature.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. A few days before Mr. Lincoln was reelected he wrote a letter to a friend in which he said that "a second election would be a great honor, and I should like to have it." Does the Senator think that it is necessary to take out of the moral economy of the Republic that honorable ambition and that desire for the commendation of his fellows which directed the footsteps and guided the purposes of Abraham Lincoln?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I might take exceptional cases again and again to prove a rule. Is the Senator prepared to say that the Government would have gone down to perdition if there had been no second term for Mr. Lincoln?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think so for a single moment.

Mr. BORAH. I have never had a doubt but that the failure to reelect Abraham Lincoln would have been a greater calamity than to have lost the Battle of Gettysburg. He was peculiarly, singularly, if not divinely endowed for this work.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator from Idaho a question? Does he think that Abraham Lincoln would have been less wise, less patriotic, less upright if the proposed amendment had been then in the Constitution?

Mr. BORAH. No; and neither was he less wise, just, and patriotic because he could have two terms. But the people would have been deprived of the great benefit of his experience and his patriotism and his judgment at a most critical period in the history of the Republic. There are two parties interested here, the President himself and the people; and if the people want a great leader in a crisis when the Republic is in danger, who will say the people should not exercise their judgment and continue him in service until the Republic is taken care of?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I never knew of a great crisis where the people did not rise to the occasion and its requirements. I am not one of those who believe for a single moment that there were not thousands of men in the United States at that time who were capable of following Lincoln's footsteps. I am not conceding for one single moment that with the temper of the people as it was at that time they would not have elected a patriot and one who was equally determined to sustain the Constitution and the Government of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. You can take the reconstruction period itself, the reconstruction work after Mr. Lincoln's death, and it proves how essential he was to the welfare of the Republic and the people of the United States. His influence was of such a nature that it was almost indispensable in the extraordinary crisis in which the Republic found itself. The strength of the argument here lies in the fact that almost every leader was against him, while these people who are now to be denied the right to elect their magistrate a second time were his friends and loyal to the last.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the position of the Senator is this: At one moment the Senator from Idaho is for the approval of the views of those who made the Constitution. The next moment he dubs as reactionary those who still reverence that Constitution. On one day he pleads for the right of the people to make their Constitution. The next day he declares in substance that he would violate the Constitution if he dared to allow the dear people an opportunity to vote upon an amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. That, Mr. President, is the position of the Senator. The argument of the Senator from Iowa, as I said, is consistent. The argument of the Senator from Idaho seems to me to be lacking entirely in that quality.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when I was advocating the election of Senators by popular vote I was giving more power to the people and giving it more directly to the people. The Senator from North Dakota was opposed in principle to that resolution, because it was extending the power more directly to the masses of the people. Now, we have a resolution which takes away from the masses of the people the right to select their Representatives as they might choose to do, and the Senator from North Dakota, consistent with his entire life, is favoring the proposition.

Mr. McCUMBER. Now, Mr. President, the Senate can readily see how consistent is the Senator when a short time ago he accused me of making an address upon a subject that I had not studied. If the Senator would go back and study the RECORD, he would find that I not only spoke in favor of the constitutional amendment, but I voted for it. Yet the Senator, forgetting what took place here in the Senate Chamber but a very short time ago, is now making an argument that I was not only opposed to it, but that I acted in opposition to it.

Mr. BORAH. I remember very well the speech of the Senator from North Dakota. He was yielding, he said, to a public demand, he was yielding to the opinion of the people, but he did not believe it was wise, and he did not believe it would prove to be wise, because, I presume, the people could not perform the duty or discharge the obligation to be imposed upon them.

Mr. McCUMBER. Therein, Mr. President, lies the difference between the Senator's position and mine, and I will leave it to any sensible man to say who is progressive and who is reactionary. I believe that this Government derives all its powers from the hands of a governing people; that that is the basis of all just government. I believe that when, after due deliberation, a great majority of the people of the United States think that they ought to change their Constitution it is my duty to give them the opportunity to do it and not obstruct them. I believe in the right of the people to form their own Constitution, although the form of a Constitution which they might adopt does not harmonize with my views. They have the last and final say on the subject.

The Senator, on the other hand, believes that the people should have that right so long as they agree with him, but the moment that they do not agree with him he will stand here and vote, if he is the only man in the Chamber, to prevent them from having an opportunity to express themselves upon that question.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, I yield for as long as the Senator wants on that proposition.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator seems to be getting a little excited.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; not at all. The Senator is not justified in that assumption.

Mr. BORAH. And that is not conducive to clear reasoning. I want to say to the Senator that I am in favor of the people making their Constitution. Is the Senator in favor of the plank in the Progressive platform which requires only a majority vote of the Senate to submit a constitutional amendment? If the Senator wants to make it easier for the people will he not tell me that he is in favor of that plank in the Progressive platform?

Mr. McCUMBER. I believe, Mr. President, in making it rather difficult to amend the Constitution——

Mr. BORAH. That is what I thought.

Mr. McCUMBER. So that in all instances we may have careful and full deliberation upon it. If that is what the Senator thinks, the Senator thinks somewhat as I do. I do not believe we should amend the Constitution as easily as we make a law. If we are to have no restraint, then, in heaven's name, what is the use of a Constitution?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. But answer that question. If we are to make and unmake a Constitution as we make and unmake a law, tell me what use there is of having a Constitution.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator will rest his soul in peace for just a minute——

Mr. McCUMBER. It is always at peace.

Mr. BORAH. I hope it may continue to be.

Mr. McCUMBER. It will.

Mr. BORAH. I have my fears about that hope of the Senator, but I hope so.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator need not have any fear at all.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator says we should have a Constitution which enforces deliberation before amendment. What is the use of deliberation if you are going to cast a vote against your judgment?

Mr. McCUMBER. Go ahead.

Mr. BORAH. I have finished.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator not only abandons his own argument, but he closes his eyes to mine. I have said again and again that after the people, upon due deliberation, not under the first impulse of a majority but after due and proper deliberation of the subject, have come to the conclusion that they want a change in the Constitution, it is far from my duty to prevent them from having an opportunity to vote on such change. I do not say it is for me to make it, but I say it is my duty to give them the opportunity to make it.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from North Dakota says that he wants deliberation and that the Constitution should not be the same as a law, and so forth. Now, what is the difference whether we have two-thirds here or a majority if at the moment the resolution comes into the Senate everybody is going to submit without any further deliberation or without exercising his own judgment? Why not go to the Progressive platform at once and say that a majority shall control?

Mr. McCUMBER. Why does the Senator again use the phrase "without deliberation" when I say the vote should be with deliberation and after much deliberation?

Mr. BORAH. If I am not permitted to exercise my judgment there is no reason why I should deliberate except as a mere matter of pretense, which I am sure the Senator would not be guilty of.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is a reason why every Senator who represents the people, and who is properly intrusted to represent them upon the presumption the he will study those questions, should give them the benefit of his labors, should attempt to convert them to his belief if he thinks he is right, but if finally they do not agree with him he should at least give them an opportunity to act upon their own judgment.

Mr. BORAH. I want to ask the Senator——

Mr. McCUMBER. That proposition is very far, indeed, from the proposition presented by the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator in favor of the resolution introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] providing that a majority may submit an amendment to the Constitution?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I will not express my opinion upon that to-day, because I will cross that bridge when I come to it. The Senator will have my views at that time undoubtedly, and I will be free to express them. I am not in the habit of prophesying what my vote will be upon a subject not under consideration.

Mr. BORAH. That is wise.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am still subject to enlightenment upon a great many subjects.

Mr. BORAH. That is a good policy.

Mr. McCUMBER. I presume that I might probably vote for it.

Now, Mr. President, my own conviction is that instead of spending our time in quoting Thomas Jefferson and Alexander Hamilton, whom we follow to the extent that they agree with our views and whose views we abandon the moment they are found to be discordant with our own, we should use our own judgment in this year of our Lord 1912. I think we have perhaps as great an opportunity to determine what our duty is upon a great fundamental question to-day as any of these leaders were able to tell us what we should do more than a hundred years ago.

Mr. President, I am in favor of changing the Constitution wherever I believe that that change will conduce to the greatest happiness and prosperity of the people, but I do not believe we need the restraining power of a Constitution as much or more than we did a hundred years ago. But in these days we are not dealing with the Americans of the days of Thomas Jefferson. I am sorry to say that I believe as a people we are traveling, and rapidly traveling, into the field of emotionalism and that we act less deliberately upon some subjects than we did years ago; that we lack some of the staid qualities of our fathers.

As a justification for this statement let me ask the Senator what would Thomas Jefferson or George Washington or Alexander Hamilton have thought of a convention in which were gathered 800 or 1,000 representative American citizens for the purpose of choosing an Executive of this great Government, what would they have thought of bringing in a queen of the footlights for the purpose of producing a stampede of deliberative men at some supposed psychological moment?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not entirely familiar with all the history of Jefferson and Hamilton as to such things, but my opinion is, from what I have read, that they would have enjoyed it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Possibly so, Mr. President; but I do not think they would have entirely approved of it as a method to be adopted in a deliberative body of American citizens.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator ought to reflect a moment before he speaks of the lady as——

Mr. McCUMBER. Queen of the footlights?

Mr. BORAH. Queen of the footlights, in the sense in which the Senator seemed to use it.

Mr. McCUMBER. If that should be construed in any sense other than that of a fair fame, I certainly would not use it, but, not intending to imply anything but an honorable career, I still am disposed to criticize the method adopted.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not know of any reason why the women should not run the conventions of this country as well as the men.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not going to be led into that. God knows, if they do, I hope they will not try to do it in that manner.

Mr. BORAH. It came very near being a success, which would have made some of us happy.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope, Mr. President, that if we do submit the question of this kind to the grand and noble women of the country their power will be exercised in their calmest deliberation, and not in an attempt to stampede a lot of men by feminine charm.

Mr. President, I simply rose to defend my own position upon this joint resolution. I am in favor of the joint resolution as I would propose to amend it. If I can not amend it in that way, then I would be in favor of the joint resolution as introduced and as supported by the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa if he intends to press the joint resolution to a vote at this session? I know of a number of Senators who desire to speak upon it. There is, of course, a very great mental and physical lethargy over the Senate at this time. Many of us who desire to discuss it feel physically incapacitated for a thorough examination for that discussion of the measure which it deserves before it is finally voted upon by the Senate. There is now scarcely a majority of Senators in the city. It seems to me that it should not be pressed to a vote at the present session.

Mr. CUMMINS. I feel that the question propounded by the Senator from Kansas is not one for me to answer. It is for the Senate to decide whether there shall be a vote upon the joint resolution at this session. I was directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report it. I am not its author. It was introduced by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS]. I can best answer possibly, so far as I am concerned, by suggesting to the Senator from Kansas that I had intended before we adjourned this evening to ask for unanimous consent that we vote upon the joint resolution at 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to say that, from information I have, that would be impossible unless a number of Senators who want to speak were denied the opportunity. I do not think that a question of this importance should be unduly hastened. I believe that a vote should be reached upon the measure, but I do think that full opportunity ought to be given to discuss it, so that both sides of the question might be fairly presented to the Senate before it finally goes to the people for their judgment. I should have to object to a unanimous-consent agreement of the kind suggested by the Senator from Iowa, because it would deprive a number, who I know desire to speak, of the opportunity of discussing the matter as fully as they desire to do.

Mr. CUMMINS. In that event, Mr. President, it is for the Senate to say what shall be done with the joint resolutian. I do not feel that I have any right to control. It is not a measure that ought to be committed to the hands of any one man. Whenever the Senate desires to displace it with any other business, I shall bow to the will of the Senate in that regard; but I can not do otherwise than to hold it where it is until the Senate sees fit to displace it.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, as the author of this joint resolution as it was first introduced, I am, of course, anxious to have it determined at as early a day as will give Senators an ample opportunity to discuss it. I recognize the fact that it is a very important question, a fundamental question, going to the amendment of the Constitution of the United States. I feel that every Senator here should be given full opportunity to express his views upon it, whether they agree with mine or not. I therefore stated to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] who is in charge of the joint resolution, that he could take his own course with respect to it, in accordance with his own judgment; that I should not press it for a hearing if, in his judgment, it should not be determined at the present session, and I am perfectly willing to leave the matter to the Senate to determine whether it shall be disposed of now or at a later time. I shall certainly not complain of any action that the Senate may take with respect to it.

I appreciate the position of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], who, I know, is entirely opposed to my views upon this question; but he desires to be heard, and I should not desire to have him deprived of that right to the fullest extent. Therefore I am willing to leave the matter to the consideration of the Senate. It is out of my hands. I am not in charge of the joint resolution, and have not been at any time. It was considered by the Judiciary Committee, and one of its members is in charge of the joint resolution. I am perfectly content to leave it in his hands.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I very much hope that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] will not urge the joint resolution to a vote in the closing days of the session. I do not believe that there is any emergency involved in the joint resolution which would justify insisting upon the disposition of it without the very fullest debate and discussion. One of the most vital questions involved in the joint resolution, if the Constitution should be amended in this way, providing that the Chief Magistrate of the Nation should be ineligible for reelection, is that his term might expire at a most critical period in the Nation's history and the circumstances be such as to involve the country in the gravest danger on account of having to choose a new man as his successor. There are a great many other vital principles involved in the joint resolution which ought to be discussed.

As the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] has stated, there are a number of Senators who desire to be heard upon the proposition. I, myself, should like, if convenient to the Senate, to be heard upon some phases of the question which have occurred to me, and it would be impossible for all of the Senators who desire to discuss the joint resolution to discuss it properly if it is to come to a vote in the last days of an expiring session.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I realize the force of what has been said, but I can not take the responsibility of postponing a vote upon this measure until the next session; that is for the Senate to determine. I want it determined in a way that meets the views of a majority of the Members of the Senate. I know that it has been customary at times to permit one who is in charge of a measure to do this thing; but it is not right. The joint resolution, I repeat, is in the possession of the Senate, and I shall be entirely satisfied with whatever it sees fit to do.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. POINDEXTER addressed the Chair.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want to say one further word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from Kansas yield?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the majority of the Members of the Senate here do not want to vote upon the joint resolution at this session, then I think it ought to be displaced, and it ought to be displaced now. I do not intend consciously or intentionally to permit it to remain as the unfinished business simply that some other measure may not be brought before the Senate; but, with that statement, it is with the Senate to determine what it shall do with the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], it being now 5.30 o'clock, if he would not allow the unfinished business to be laid aside and let the Senate take up the calendar, under Rule VIII, to consider unobjected bills? There are a number of Senators who have left the Chamber with the understanding that there would be no final disposition of the joint resolution to-day.

Mr. CUMMINS. I had never thought of any final disposition of the joint resolution to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Iowa would merely consent to the laying aside of the unfinished business we should then have a half hour in which some bills which have been reported to the Senate could be passed.

Mr. CUMMINS. I feel that good faith to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] requires me to refer that question to him. He has a very important bill, which is to be taken up immediately after the disposition of this measure. I do not want, by any act of mine, to postpone the disposition of the joint resolution, and in that way make it impossible for the Senate to consider the bill, in which the Senator from Vermont, and indeed all of us, have a great interest.

Mr. SMOOT. I had supposed that the Senator from Vermont would not care to take up his bill at this time of the day, and if the unfinished business could be temporarily laid aside we could proceed with the consideration of bills on the calendar, under Rule VIII, until 6 o'clock, and dispose of a number of bills in which Senators are interested. There are quite a number of House bills which perhaps will have to go to conference, and if they are to become laws at this session they should be passed now.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah, if that is done, would he be willing that my bill then be made the unfinished business of the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. That is not for the Senator from Utah to say. If the Senator wants to make his bill the unfinished business to-morrow all that is necessary to do is for the Senate to vote to take it up, as the Senator from Iowa has suggested. That could be done at any time when the unfinished business comes up. If the Senate desires to displace the present unfinished business, well and good; we would go right on, and the Senator's bill would be the unfinished business.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senate I shall be very glad to move that my bill be made the unfinished business and then ask that it be temporarily laid aside in order that the bills on the calendar may be taken up.

Mr. SMOOT. That can not be done, of course, under the rule, because we already have an unfinished business. The only way the Senator could do it would be to move to take up his bill and displace the unfinished business.

Mr. PAGE. If that is agreeable to the Senator from Iowa, I will make that motion at this time.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have stated my view of it fully, Mr. President. I should like a vote upon the pending joint resolution at this session, but if the majority of the Senate think that there ought to be no vote upon it at this session, then I think that same majority ought to displace it with some other measure that can be acted upon at this session. I decline, however, to assume the responsibility of taking away from the consideration of the Senate the unfinished business, and inasmuch as the Senator from Vermont has not objected, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

Mr. BORAH submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21094) to create a commission on industrial relations, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 4, line 10, after the word "thereof," insert the following: "Provided, That the commission may expend not to exceed $5,000 per annum for the employment of experts at such rate of compensation as may be fixed by the commission, but no other person employed hereunder by the commission, except stenographers temporarily employed for the purpose of taking testimony, shall be paid compensation at a rate in excess of $3,000 per annum"; and the Senate agree to the same.

WILLIAM E. BORAH,
BOIES PENROSE,
J. H. BANKHEAD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

W. B. WILSON,
W. L. HENSLEY,
J. J. GARDNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, Mr. CARTER, and Mr. BURKE of South Dakota managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 4753. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved April 26, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 137);

S. 5882. An act to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Yankton, S. Dak., by the Winnipeg, Yankton & Gulf Railroad Co.;

S. 6688. An act to repeal section 13 of the act approved March 2, 1907, entitled "An act amending an act entitled 'An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes'";

S. 6763. An act to authorize the cities of Bangor and Brewer, Me., to construct or reconstruct, wholly or in part, and maintain and operate a bridge across the Penobscot River, between said cities, without a draw;

S. 7157. An act to make uniform charges for furnishing copies of records of the Department of the Interior and of its several bureaus; and

H. R. 16571. An act to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the North Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington July 7, 1911.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and that order is made. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

The bill (S. 2493) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make an examination of certain claims of the State of Missouri was announced as first in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, who asked to have that bill go over?

Mr. SMOOT. I suggested that it go over, because of the fact that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] requested me to ask that it go over in his absence.

Mr. STONE. I wish just a moment or two, and only a moment or two, to say something about this bill. I have not been nicely treated about this bill; I think I have been badly treated, and I am getting to a point where I can not avoid having some little feeling about it. I am not in the habit of objecting to measures in which Senators are interested nor obstructing them.

All this bill proposes to do is to require the proper officers of the Treasury Department to make an examination of certain documents and papers sent to that department and to report their findings to Congress for the future action of Congress. There are a number of claims which citizens of Missouri have against the Government growing out of the Civil War. They have been heard under State authority and sent here to the War Department, and are in the archives there now. I have not any doubt, Mr. President, that there are a large number of those claims that are bad—I will go even further and say fraudulent—and they ought not under any circumstances to be paid; but, on the other hand, there are a number of them that are just and right and fair, which ought to be paid.

The only thing we ask is that an examination into these cases may be made by competent authority in the War Department and a report made to Congress. I do not think that ought to be denied to any State.

This bill has twice passed the Senate. It has been reported again, favorably, from the Committee on Claims and has been here on the calendar since January 16. The Senator from Utah has told me on several occasions that he would like to have it lie over, and I have obligingly yielded to his wish, he telling me he wished to show me something. Well, being from Missouri, I have been perfectly willing to be shown, but he has never yet shown me.

Now, if he has any reason for saying the bill ought not to be passed, let him say it. He now says the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] wishes him to object to the consideration of the bill. The Senator from Ohio came to me here in the Chamber about 3 or 4 o'clock of the afternoon he was leaving on a voyage, as I understood, to Europe, not to return this session, and asked if this bill could not go over until next session, as he desired to be heard. That was the first time I knew or heard that he cared anything about it or knew anything about it.

I told him I thought it was an unreasonable request to wait within 10 days or 2 weeks of the adjournment of Congress, especially when the Senator from Utah had practically assured me in our conversations that in due time he would not stand obstinately in the way of the taking up and passing of the bill. I did not think it was right for the Senator from Ohio, going away on a voyage across the sea, to ask that this bill be kept here on the calendar. I do not think I am being treated right about it. It is a fair bill, and it ought to be heard, and I do not think the Senator from Utah ought to persist in preventing its consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senate that perhaps I have been derelict in showing the Senator from Missouri the report I have from the department upon this bill. I have the papers at my desk now, but it would take a long time to-night to present them to the Senate. But, as I told the Senator, all I desired was to present them to him and let him see what the department says in relation to these claims, and I thought myself he then would not push the claims.

But I knew nothing until the other day about the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] taking an interest in it at all or having any papers that he desired to present to the Senate. He came to me, saying he was compelled to leave, and asked me if I would not object to the consideration of the bill at this session of Congress. I said, "I did not know you were interested in it at all. I never heard you say a word about it. I did not know that you knew anything about it. I suggest that you speak to the Senator from Missouri about it." The Senator from Ohio later said he spoke to the Senator from Missouri about it.

Mr. STONE. I have just detailed that.

Mr. SMOOT. I was merely undertaking to tell just how it came about.

Mr. STONE. I do not want to retain the floor any longer. I said I would be through in a moment. Of course the bill goes over under the objection, but I am going to insist, in my talk with the Senator from Utah, privately and personally as well as publicly, on having this bill considered the next time we go to the calendar, if we ever go to it again during this session. I think that is due to me as a matter of common fairness and courtesy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN RETIRED NAVAL OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 1505) for the relief of certain officers on the retired list of the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. CULBERSON. What is the calendar number?

The SECRETARY. Calendar No. 238.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let it go over.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask if the calendar is being considered under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Rule VIII; unobjected cases.

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, August 21, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, August 20, 1912.

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, continue, we beseech Thee, Thy blessings unto us, and guide us through the remaining hours of this day by the highest conceptions of manhood illustrated and exemplified in the life and character of the Jesus of Nazareth, that at its close we may be in harmony with Thee in obedience to the laws which Thou hast ordained; and Thine be the praise forever. Amen.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the Journal.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] moves that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. MANN. I will have to object to that.

The Clerk completed the reading of the Journal and it was approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THAYER. Under permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert the following letter from the Springfield Daily Republican, Saturday, August 17, 1912:

QUESTIONS FOR ROOSEVELT—THE WOOL-TARIFF ISSUE PLACED BEFORE HIM BY MANUFACTURERS.

The following open letter on the tariff question has been addressed to Mr. Roosevelt by Secretary Arthur Wheelock, of the Carded Woolen Manufacturers' Association:

DEAR SIR: You are to begin your campaign for election as President of the United States by speaking this week to the people of New England. I ask you to define your position on tariff revision, the leading issue before the people, in terms so plain that no voter can be in doubt where you stand.

In your confession of faith at Chicago 10 days ago you said that you believed in a protective tariff, were opposed to tariff preferences, favored a tariff based on the difference between foreign and domestic cost, condemned protection that did not reach the pay envelope of the wage earner, favored revision schedule by schedule, and declared in favor of an expert tariff commission as the only way to get a reasonably quick revision.

This confession of faith regarding the tariff question is not satisfactory, because it is exactly like the faith that for four years has been confessed by the dominant stand-pat element in the party from which you have just bolted. I do not question your sincerity, but merely point out that so far as tariff revision is concerned your confession of faith does not mark by so much as a hair's breadth any progress from the policy under which an unjust tariff on wool and wool goods has been maintained and appeals for relief have been denied.

At Chicago, when you were interrupted by a questioner, you are reported to have said: "Any respectful request for information I shall always have an answer for, and during my administration I never did anything I was afraid to be questioned about, and I shall not begin in the Progressive Party." That assurance encourages me to ask you to reply to the following questions in the speeches you are to deliver in New England:

1. The contest over tariff revision at Washington is between a tariff in which the rates are based wholly on value, and one in which the rates are based on the unit of weight or measure or the piece. Ad valorem rates bear equally on all classes of producers and consumers. Specific rates bear heaviest on the low-priced goods and lightest on the high-priced goods. This issue between specific and ad valorem rates is fundamental. Which system of duties do you favor? Do you advocate the specific system by which special privileges of great value are granted to one class of manufacturers and burdens placed on other manufacturers? Do you favor specific duties under which the tariff, as in the case of wool, rises to three or four times the foreign value of low-priced wools, and drops to a small fraction of the value of high-priced wools? Do you favor specific duties which cause such inequalities regardless of whether the commodity is wool, watches, clothing, foodstuffs, or other product? Or do you favor an ad valorem tariff under which the rates would necessarily bear equally on all classes of producers and consumers?

2. In your confession of faith at Chicago you indorsed a tariff based on the difference between the foreign and the American cost. Do you believe that such a difference can be determined? If not, then is not the principle unsound, and is not its promulgation at Chicago in 1908 and by you in 1912 calculated to deceive the people?

3. At Chicago you stated that an expert tariff commission is the only means of getting a reasonably quick revision of the tariff. You condemned the present Tariff Board and described a model tariff commission having enlarged powers and exceedingly complicated duties. Do you believe that a reference of the tariff question to such a commission for extended investigation would be a quicker way to get the tariff revised than by having it revised immediately by Congress as provided by the Constitution? Is it not a fact that the standpatters who want the Payne tariff unchanged are desirous of having the question referred to a board, commission, or any other body except Congress?

4. In order to make your position perfectly clear regarding the revision of the woolen schedule, which is of special interest in New England, will you state what you would do if you were President now? Would you, like President Taft, favor the Hill bill or the Penrose-Lippitt bill with their specific duties? Would you favor the Underwood bill or the La Follette bill or the Underwood-La Follette bill with their ad valorem duties? Or if you favor none of these, what kind of a bill would you advocate? Would you favor the enactment of a bill with exclusively ad valorem rates affording adequate protection?

5. In your confession of faith at Chicago you advocated protection that would reach the pay envelope of the wage earner. Have you any definite idea in mind by which this result can be accomplished? If so, will you describe it in order that it may be compared with the tariffs of the past?

In hearings on my antitrust bills there were intimations that the United Shoe Machinery Co., as well as other concerns, attempted by underhand methods to obtain the business secrets of their rivals and to injure them by various means. As a sample of these methods of "Big business," I append the following declaration in the suit of Frank Morrison against The United Shoe Machinery Co.:

Suffolk County—Superior Court.

(Filed sometime in August, 1912. No. 68375.)

FRANK MORRISON AGAINST THE UNITED SHOE MACHINERY CO.

The plaintiff says that on or about June 1, 1910, he was employed by the United Shoe Machinery Co., the defendant herein, for the purpose of obtaining information regarding the design and working of certain machines installed in the factory of Thomas G. Plant Co., and the number of pairs of shoes produced daily by said machines, and also concerning other devices used in said factory, together with the methods employed in connection with the operation thereof, so that said information might be used in connection with the business of the defendant if deemed of value, and for the further purpose of using his best efforts to establish a union in said factory, and for his said services the defendant promised to pay him the sum of $2,000, together with such cash disbursements as he might make in connection with the said work, and that said disbursements for the summer and fall of 1910 amounted to $1,397.13, according to the account hereto annexed marked "A." That the plaintiff did obtain the desired information and reported on the machinery, the output, and the business methods employed in said factory, and did attempt to establish a union therein, and did all other acts and things required of him under his agreement of employment, and that he reported regularly to said company, wherefore the defendant owes him a sum of $3,397.13, together with interest thereon from January 1, 1911, on or before which date payment was duly demanded by the plaintiff of the defendant.

United Shoe Machinery Co. to Frank Morrison, Dr.

To cash paid out for services and expenses during the summer and fall of 1910, as follows:

June 1, cash paid out for hall	$20.00
June 1, cash paid out for meeting	215.00
June 2, cash paid out for hall	5.00
June 2, cash paid out for meeting	50.00
June 3, cash paid out for hall and meeting	53.00
June 4, cash paid out for taking 125 members to picnic	275.35
Cash paid Peter Rastnin, one month's expenses	40.00
Cash paid W. Tonise, one month's expenses	25.00
Cash paid G. Hupus, one month's expenses	25.00
Cash paid C. Ponson, one month's expenses	25.00

WATER-POWER LEGISLATION.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] is recognized for 54 minutes, after which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] will be recognized for the same length of time.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss this morning some phases of the water-power conservation movement in the United States with particular reference to the omnibus dam bill (H. R. 25882). Mr. Harry A. Slattery, secretary of the National Conservation Association, has prepared for me, at my request, an article which he calls "Water power and the future," and in which he discusses water-power possibilities in the years to come. I have his article here, and I would like to print it in the RECORD.

I also desire to make some references to other provisions in the omnibus dam bill than the provisions affecting the State of Tennessee, and I therefore ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to print as an appendix to my speech the excellent article which Mr. Slattery has prepared for me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, on the 22d day of July, 1912, the bill known as the omnibus dam bill was reported out with a favorable recommendation from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It contains provisions for the construction of 17 dams across navigable rivers in the United States. From 1789 down to the present time 100 franchises of this character have been granted by Congress. Over 50 per cent of the franchises so granted can now be found under the control of some one of the six great water-power groups now operating in the United States. The omnibus dam bill which is now pending before this House provides, therefore, for the construction of almost one-fifth as many dams as this Congress has authorized to be constructed in the last 125 years. No hearings were had as to any of these proposed projects. No member of the committee knows what the Government is asked to give away. The water-power possibilities in the rivers embraced in this bill have not received the slightest consideration at the hands of this committee. They have made absolutely no investigation as to the good faith or the solvency of the persons or corporations asking for these franchises. They do not know even the post-office addresses of the men to whom with lavish hands they have given away so much of the assets of our National Government. In order to get a franchise worth millions of dollars at the present time in our rivers, it is only necessary for some person or corporation to persuade a Member of Congress to introduce a bill for that purpose, and if the Member asks the committee to report out the bill the present policy of this committee seems to be to report it out at once.

No king or emperor in feudal days ever gave away as much of the resources of his country as this committee seems to be willing to do. None of these bills provide for tolls to the National Government. None of them provide for protection to the consumers. Fortunately, an awakened public conscience on the subject of water-power conservation makes it apparently now impossible that any more gifts of this character can be made to private individuals or corporations unless there is connected with them a provision for protection to consumers against exorbitant charges and for tolls to the National Government.

The bill we are considering gives to the Ozark Power & Water Co., a Missouri corporation, the right to construct and operate a dam across the White River in the State of Missouri. This company was incorporated under the laws of Missouri on January 7, 1911, with an authorized capital stock of $5,000. There were 50 shares, 48 of them being held by Chester E. Burg, of St. Louis, Mo., and the other two shares were also held in St. Louis. Six months later the capital stock of this company was increased to $875,000, and on March 1 of this year the capital stock was increased to $2,000,000. This corporation is now engaged in absorbing all the other power companies operating in the rivers in that section of the country. The bill also gives to B. E. Debler, or his assigns, when authorized by the State of Missouri, the right to build as many dams as he or they may desire to construct across the Current River in three counties in Missouri. The bill also gives to Carl J. Keifer and Laurent Lowenburg, when authorized by the State of Tennessee, the right to build two dams across the Duck River in Hickman County, Tenn. The bill also gives to the Great Northern Development Co., a Maine corporation, the right to dam up the Mississippi River whenever it is authorized to do so by the laws of Iowa or Illinois.

The bill also gives to Ralph Morrison, when authorized by the State of Missouri, the right to construct and operate a dam at any point that suits him or his assigns on the Osage River in Missouri. The bill gives to the Kootenai Power Construction Co., a Delaware corporation, the right to dam up the Kootenai River whenever the laws of Montana authorize this company to do so. In other words, this bill gives to these several gentlemen, whoever they are, and to these corporations the exclusive right to control these several rivers, provided the legislatures of the several States affected thereby grant to them a similar privilege. This bill, therefore, if it becomes a law, will prevent absolutely any other individuals or corporations from obtaining these valuable franchises during the period of the life of the franchises granted by this bill, or of any extensions thereof, even if they do nothing at all toward developing their projects. The various States affected thereby are not allowed any discretion in the matter. They must grant permits to these several gentlemen or their assigns or to these corporations and their assigns and to none others as long as these gentlemen and these corporations are able to keep this franchise alive, provided this Congress grants it.

Such a bill as this is made possible only by the fact that this great committee of this House gives not the slightest attention to the subject matter of this bill. Water-power concentration in the hands of a few companies is going on now at a rate unheard of heretofore in our history as a Nation, and the whole country is to-day awakening to the power of this new factor in our civilization which is engaged in consolidating the water-power possibilities of the country.

To indicate the alarming progress being made in the country at the present time in the matter of water-power consolidation it is only necessary to call attention to the Pennsylvania situation. All of her water-power possibilities have now been taken up. This great State has granted, in all, 1,856 charters to water-power companies, 969 of which are now in active operation. In this State 133 cities and towns control their own water supply. The balance of these charters are owned by corporations; 787 of them are not operating, but are being held at the present time simply to prevent competition or to be exploited at some time in the future. All of the water-power projects now in operation are being consolidated, and soon will be completely owned and manipulated by four great monopolies in that State. Pennsylvania has a law providing for the annulment of water charters not used or put into active operation within two years after they are granted. Pennsylvania has, however, another law to the effect that no charter can be surrendered and no corporation can be dissolved until back taxes are paid. The water companies holding these charters for exploitation in the future insist, and so far the courts of Pennsylvania have agreed with them, that they have never operated, and therefore have no assets, and therefore can not be taxed, and inasmuch as they can not pay taxes, it is therefore held that their charters can not be annulled, and the great State of Pennsylvania has in this way been delivered over to be exploited by water-power combinations. One-half of the water-power resources of the State have been grabbed off within the last five years. Other States are having similar experiences.

I have mentioned conditions in Pennsylvania to show that a greater degree of care should be exercised by this House in granting away indiscriminately valuable national water-power assets than has heretofore been exercised by this body. The bill we are considering provides for the construction of a number of dams in the Clinch and the Powell Rivers in Tennessee.

I desire now to consider the Tennessee situation. The omnibus bill so vigorously championed in this House by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] provides for 17 dams. Seven of these are in the Clinch River in Tennessee and one of them is in the Powell River. Bills for the granting of these Powell and Clinch River franchises were all introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN]. Two at least of these dams are not to be constructed within his congressional district, but are in the district represented in this House by his colleague, Mr. SELLS, who knew nothing of the introduction of the bills until after the subject had been discussed on this floor. The gentleman from Tennessee has stated upon this floor that he could conceive of no bill or measure of more importance to the people he represented than the propositions embraced in the bills introduced by him providing for the damming of these rivers. He also stated that the men interested in the corporations asking for these franchises were Tennessee men, a majority of them, and were his constituents. He also refers to his bills as being of a purely local character, in which I, representing a district eight hundred or a thousand miles away, ought not to have the slightest interest.

I propose now to discuss the projects in which the gentleman from Tennessee apparently is so vitally and violently interested. Not long ago on this floor I had occasion to refer to the fact that I did not know how much power could be develped in the "navigable river in which the gentleman is interested," whereupon I was most vigorously interrupted by the gentleman from Tennessee, who demanded to know what I meant by saying that he was interested in a river. Later on I referred to the gentleman's "company," and I was again most vigorously interrupted by the gentleman from Tennessee, who protested that it was not his company, and that he wanted me to stick to the truth, and he also stated that he was only interested in these rivers as a Member of Congress. Therefore, in my discussion of these projects, in order to avoid controversy with the gentleman from Tennessee on this subject, I desire to preface my remarks with the statement that at the outset I want it understood that I am ready to concede that the gentleman is interested "as a Member of Congress" in all the water-power enterprises in Tennessee to which I shall call attention. The evident disappointment of the gentleman on account of his failure to get his bills through led him in the first place to assert upon the floor of this House that it would be a long time before

I would be able to get any private bills through this House. Later on he characterized me as a dreamer, then as a man who was simply blocking great enterprises until I have time to make up my mind as to the proper policy to be adopted, and finally concluded by characterizing me as a demagogue, and asking the House not to be driven from the great undertakings in Tennessee embraced in the omnibus dam bill by "the demagogue of the House."

I therefore presume that I ought to consider myself to be so sufficiently and absolutely crushed and discredited as to be completely incapacitated from further discussion of this matter. I have discussed these subjects in a parliamentary way and in order, and I propose to continue the discussion in the same way. If the gentleman is not interested in the rivers of Tennessee, I assure him I am interested in the navigable rivers of Tennessee as a Member of this body, and in the navigable rivers of all the States, and I propose, so far as I can, to protect these rivers from the encroachments of the Water Power Trust, whether my course meets with the approval of the gentleman from Tennessee or not. I had occasion at one time during these discussions to refer to the gentleman as a representative of the Water Power Trust. This he most vigorously denied and demanded that I produce the proof. At that time I was willing to accept his denial; I am not willing to do so now. In my investigation of the water-power question, so far as it relates to the rivers of Tennessee, I find a well-trodden trail leading directly from the congressional office of the gentleman from Tennessee in the House Office Building to the representatives of the Water Power Trust, and for the benefit of the gentleman from Tennessee, and of others who may be interested in this subject, I propose now to call attention to the evidence he heretofore so vigorously demanded that I produce. I am not discussing this subject from a personal standpoint. Personally I care nothing about the gentleman from Tennessee, nor his references to me on this floor, but I propose, if I can, to make it odious hereafter for any Member of this body to introduce and to promote in this House a water-power bill which does not provide for the protection of consumers, and which does not provide for tolls to the National Government. What has happened in Pennsylvania is about to happen in the State of Tennessee, and will happen in a short time if the gentleman from Tennessee has his way about things. None of the bills he has introduced provides for the regulation of the cost of hydroelectric power to consumers in his State. None of them provides for tolls to the General Government.

In the city of Knoxville, where the gentleman lives, they are planning a city beautiful, and in all this broad land no city is more splendidly located than Knoxville, Tenn. Down from the mountains come rushing splendid rivers of water, running on forever, prepared to furnish to the city of Knoxville hydroelectric power through all the years to come. No city is better located for manufacturing purposes, and no city in the land is capable of being made more beautiful, but the gentleman from Tennessee is planning, so far as he can, to deliver over the city in which he lives and all his constituents in the splendid district to which he refers so feelingly, bound and gagged, to the Water Power Trust. The price of hydroelectric power can be regulated only by the price of steam power. There is no other competitive agency. The owners of hydroelectric power, those who control its development, invariably in all the States fix the price of power to consumers just a little below the cost of producing and distributing steam power. This is all they are compelled to do in order to secure customers, and when steam power is driven out, as it must soon be in a city like Knoxville, there is nothing in the world to restrain the trusts which control the hydroelectric power that can be developed there from raising their prices and fixing the selling price to consumers as high as a grasping corporation sees fit to demand. There is, therefore, no other way by which the cost to the consumer of hydroelectric power can be regulated and made reasonable than by the State or the National Government. That Representative who deliberately plans to harness up the rivers of his section without protecting the consumers in that section is not, in my judgment, discharging his full duty to the people who have sent him here.

Under the bills introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee and embraced in the omnibus dam bill, the Tennessee Hydro-Electric Co. is to be given a franchise to erect four dams in the Clinch River in Tennessee, and one dam in the Powell River. The Clinch River Power Co. is authorized to erect another dam in the Clinch River, and five citizens of Morristown, Tenn., are to be authorized, if this bill goes through, to erect two dams in the Clinch River in Tennessee. The remarkable harmony with which these three aggregations proceed is enough of itself to excite suspicion.

I have, therefore, tried to find out something about the persons who are apparently interested in these dams. I find that the Tennessee Hydro-Electric Co. is incorporated under the laws of Tennessee. This seems to be about as far as that corporation has yet succeeded in going. The incorporators I find are J. R. Paul, James B. Cox, Francis M. Butler, J. R. Cox, and J. H. Wallace. Under the laws of Tennessee it does not appear to be necessary to give even the post-office address of the incorporators of Tennessee companies, and the secretary of state in Tennessee was unable to give me any information as to the post-office address of any of the above gentlemen. I have, however, conducted some investigations, and I find that J. R. Paul, who heads the list of incorporators of this purely "local" company, is a banker at 316 Fourth Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa. I find that James B. Cox is a United States district attorney at Knoxville, Tenn., who is supposed to hold his position through the favor of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN]. I find that J. R. Cox is a son of James B. Cox. I find that J. H. Wallace is a lawyer at Clinton, Tenn., the county judge at that place, and an enthusiastic political supporter of the gentleman from Tennessee. I am unable to find out anything about Francis M. Butler, and the city directories of the principal towns in Tennessee do not show that he lives in any of those towns. If the gentleman from Tennessee will put in the RECORD the post-office address of Mr. Butler, I will feel under obligations. I have, however, secured enough evidence, as the House will see, to show that the Tennessee Hydro-Electric Co., so far as it has proceeded in its career, is under the complete personal control and domination of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

The incorporators of the Clinch River Power Co. are Henry A. Mansfield, Frederick H. Burnett, Ormin H. Sielken, John L. Baker, and William J. Condry. I am unable to find out the post-office address of any of them, and the persons to whom I have written in Tennessee can tell me nothing at all about them. I know, however, that their names can not be found in the city directories of Knoxville, Nashville, or Chattanooga, Tenn. I can find that none of the incorporators in either of these companies are of sufficient importance in the business world to be rated either in Dun's or Bradstreet's agencies, except, perhaps, J. R. Paul, the banker, who lives in Pittsburgh, Pa.

The other bill introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee, and incorporated now in the omnibus dam bill, provides for two dams in the Clinch River, to be built by five citizens of Morristown, Tenn. I find that their names are all given in the Morristown, Tenn., directory. W. C. Hale is a livery-stable keeper, and is rated in Bradstreet's at $5,000. John Loop is engaged in the dry-goods business, and is rated in Bradstreet's at $10,000. E. M. Grant is a retail hardware merchant, and is rated at $5,000. The other two—M. C. McCanless and W. H. Mullins—are not rated either in Bradstreet's or in Dun's. We are called upon to believe that these five men are expected to expend some millions of dollars in this enterprise and to act in good faith and protect the consumers of the hydroelectric power that may be generated in that part of the river which is to be turned over to them. I think I have called attention to enough facts to show the absolute bad faith of all of these Tennessee enterprises, and I am representing the people of the second district of Tennessee better than the gentleman from Tennessee is representing them when I insist that none of these bills should go through unless they contain a provision protecting consumers from exorbitant charges.

I know of no better illustration as to what unscrupulous water-power manipulators can do with a water-power proposition than the illustration furnished by the career of the Knoxville Power Co., of Tennessee. This company, I find, was organized under the laws of Tennessee in 1901 for the purpose of constructing a dam in the Little Tennessee River, near Knoxville, Tenn. In its career we have the first attempt to deliver the city of Knoxville and all of that territory to the Water Power Trust without any effort to protect the rights of consumers. A law authorizing the construction of this dam was approved by the governor of the State on March 15, 1901, and contained the provision that it shall be null and void if actual construction be not commenced within two years and completed within five years. This looked fair enough on its face. It became necessary, however, for this organization to employ attorneys, who succeeded in persuading the Tennessee Legislature to extend the franchise. Eleven years have passed since then, and the possibilities of the development of power in this river have been tied up, awaiting the pleasure of the Water Power Trust. Construction work is not even yet in progress under this franchise. The company now owning the franchise, however, has prepared plans, which have been rejected by the War Department, and are now engaged in preparing other plans.

At the time of the incorporation of the Knoxville Power Co. the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] was United States marshal for the eastern district of Tennessee. Prior to that time he had been Assistant Doorkeeper here in the House of Representatives. Therefore, in order to avoid wounding the sensibilities of the gentleman from Tennessee, I think I ought to state that if the gentleman from Tennessee exhibited any interest in this enterprise while he held that official position in Tennessee, the interest exhibited was not personal, but he was only interested in this river as United States marshal for the eastern district of Tennessee.

In 1906 the gentleman from Tennessee was appointed consul general of the United States at Glasgow, Scotland, and held that position for over a year, and resigned, as he tells us himself in the Congressional Directory, in 1907 to become a candidate for Congress in the second district of Tennessee. He was elected in the ensuing election and has been here representing that district ever since. If he exhibited any interest in the Knoxville Power Co. while he was consul general at Glasgow, Scotland, in order to avoid annoying the gentleman from Tennessee I think I ought, perhaps, to say that during that time he was not personally interested in this enterprise, but interested only as consul general at Glasgow, Scotland, and, of course after his election to Congress we have his own statement to the effect that he had no personal interest in the rivers of Tennessee and was only interested in them as a Member of Congress. Therefore, if I have made this matter sufficiently plain and have avoided unduly annoying the gentleman from Tennessee, after having made these concessions I think I ought to be permitted to proceed with a discussion of the activities of the Knoxville Power Co.

The Knoxville Power Co. had five incorporators. The records of the secretary of state of Tennessee do not give the post-office address of any of them, but the records of that office show that RICHARD W. AUSTIN was one of them, and unless the gentleman cares to deny it, I take it that it is the same RICHARD W. AUSTIN who now represents in this body the second district of Tennessee. The Knoxville Power Co. was conducted according to the most approved methods adopted by the greatest of our Wall Street financiers. The franchise granted by the State of Tennessee was obtained by the gentlemen interested in that company simply as a speculative venture.

They secured it for the purpose of turning it over to some great water-power corporation unscrupulously at a profit to themselves, paying no regard whatever to the vital interests of the people living in that part of Tennessee, and they finally succeeded in doing it. It is a singular fact in this connection that while the activities of the gentleman from Tennessee were limited to the State of Tennessee, and while he was there discharging his official duties as marshal for the eastern district of Tennessee, it was not possible to dispose of this franchise, and during the period of time that the gentleman from Tennessee officiated as United States consul at Glasgow, Scotland, 3,000 miles away from the Water Power Trust, it was not possible to accomplish anything in the matter of turning over these franchises to the Water Power Trust. But after the time in 1907 when the gentleman resigned his position in Scotland and came back to this country to become a candidate for Congress, the real and profitable activities of the Knoxville Power Co. commenced, and after the election of the gentleman to the Congress of the United States, and after he became interested as a Member of Congress in the rivers of Tennessee, it is a singular coincidence that the efforts to turn over this valuable franchise to the Water Power Trust, at considerable profit to its promoters, were crowned with complete success. This purely "local" enterprise was, during the years of the activities of the gentleman from Tennessee as United States marshal for the eastern district of Tennessee, given over into the control of Charles H. Treat, of Delaware and New York, Treasurer of the United States, who was during his lifetime prominently connected with large interests in New York City. He was assisted in his efforts by George H. Sullivan, who had been selected secretary and treasurer of the Knoxville Power Co.

Mr. Sullivan is a lawyer at 49 Wall Street, New York, and is a member of the firm of Cromwell & Sullivan. William Nelson Cromwell, Panama revolutionist, manipulator and manager of the French Panama Canal enterprise in the United States, was the other member of this firm. William Nelson Cromwell and George H. Sullivan will have nothing to do with things unless they are big things. Panama Canals and Water Power Trusts, national in their operation, come within the field of activities of this firm. Cromwell's direct affiliation with water-power interests is through the North American Co., of which he is a director. It will therefore be easily understood that prior to the commencement of Mr. Austin's membership of this body this purely local enterprise had been turned over to manipulators and managers of international reputation. Power was given to the Treasurer of the United States and to George H. Sullivan to sell this franchise. The sale, however, was not completed by them. Probably Panama Canals and other and larger enterprises kept the firm of Cromwell & Sullivan busy, and they had little time to attend to franchises in the Little Tennessee River. Although they claimed they tried to sell, they did not succeed in doing it, and no sale was made until after the election of the gentleman from Tennessee to this body. Just about that time, with the larger opportunities for usefulness presenting themselves, Charles H. Treat, George H. Sullivan, and RICHARD W. AUSTIN, who were already the directors of the Knoxville Power Co., were appointed an executive committee to dispose of the franchise of the power company to the very best advantage.

It is possible to produce at any time the admissions of the gentleman from Tennessee to the effect that he had been authorized to assist Charles H. Treat in disposing of this franchise, and it is possible also to produce evidence that Charles H. Treat—at the time he was being assisted by the gentleman from Tennessee—enlisted in this enterprise the firm of J. S. Kums & W. S. Kums, who are water-power bankers at Pittsburgh, Pa., and the gentleman from Tennessee will not deny this statement. It does not appear that the firm of Kums & Kums, of Pittsburgh, were able to accomplish definite results. But on the 4th day of May, 1910, long after the service in this body of the gentleman from Tennessee commenced, F. R. Weller, of Washington, D. C., a water-power lobbyist and promoter, became interested in this enterprise, and from that time on the matter progressed smoothly. The firm of Cromwell & Sullivan in New York do not appear to have been particularly successful. The water-power bankers of Pittsburgh do not appear to have accomplished much, but a Washington lobbyist and promoter, with the opportunities that a residence in Washington gives to lobbyists and promoters, was able to accomplish much, and in his efforts he was splendidly assisted by the gentleman from Tennessee, who, according to his own statement, at that time was interested in the rivers of his State, not personally but only as a Member of Congress. On the 4th day of May, 1910, Charles H. Treat, George H. Sullivan, and RICHARD W. AUSTIN gave to F. R. Weller an option to dispose of the holdings of the Knoxville Power Co. for $160,000. On the 29th day of August, 1910, the option was accepted by the Aluminum Co. of America, closely allied with the General Electric Co., the very largest of the six water-power groups in the United States, the same company which attempted recently in the State of New York to absorb the tremendous water-power possibilities of the rivers of northern New York, the history of whose operations is familiar to all students of water-power questions.

At a later date, on account of the misrepresentations made by the committee, of whom RICHARD W. AUSTIN was one, as to the title of the power company to certain lands along the Little Tennessee River, necessary for the development of this proposition, the option was modified and the selling price to the Aluminum Co. of America was reduced to $150,000, and the sale was finally consummated at that price.

It becomes interesting to know in this connection what the Representative from the second district of Tennessee, who is interested in the rivers of Tennessee only as a Member of Congress, got out of this enterprise, and I am able to furnish the proof as to how much he got out of this purely local enterprise, and to furnish proof that can not be contradicted.

Before the sale was completed Charles H. Treat, one of the executive committee making this sale, died, but the sale was completed by George H. Sullivan and RICHARD W. AUSTIN. After the money was turned over there was a disagreement between Mr. Sullivan and Mr. AUSTIN with Jerome Templeton, a lawyer of excellent standing in Knoxville, Tenn., as to the amount Mr. Templeton was entitled to receive on account of services rendered. Mr. Templeton appears to have been the attorney who procured, by methods that were perfectly proper, so far as I know, the extension of the franchise of the Knoxville Power Co. at the hands of the Legislature of Tennessee. His fees amounted to $7,500, and he accepted in payment part cash and enough class B bonds of the corporation to make up that amount, provided class B bonds were paid off at 60 cents on the dollar.

RICHARD W. AUSTIN represented to Mr. Templeton that class B bonds were paid off at 40 cents on the dollar, and having confidence in that statement Mr. Templeton turned over his bonds and accepted 40 cents on the dollar; and relying upon the statements of the gentleman from Tennessee Mr. Templeton receipted for his claim in full, although he received $1,500 less than the amount that was due him under his contract with the company. Later on it was ascertained that Mr. AUSTIN had misrepresented the matter to Mr. Templeton and that class B bonds were really paid off at 60 cents on the dollar. Mr. Templeton thereupon brought suit against the Knoxville Power Co., George H. Sullivan, and RICHARD W. AUSTIN to recover the amount to which he was justly entitled and which he would have received except for the misrepresentations of the gentleman from Tennessee. This suit reached the Supreme Court of Tennessee and was on the docket at the September term, 1911, of that court at Knoxville, Tenn., and the matter was determined in the Supreme Court of Tennessee in favor of Mr. Templeton. Out of deference to Mr. AUSTIN's public position the suit was so managed that no opinion was rendered in the Supreme Court of Tennessee, but the decree was merely modified so as to direct the payment to Mr. Templeton of the money of which he had been defrauded by the executive committee for the stockholders and the bondholders, of which RICHARD W. AUSTIN, of Tennessee, was a member, and was the active member so far as Mr. Templeton was concerned, as disclosed by the evidence in that case. After Mr. Templeton's fee and the interest on it and the costs were secured, Mr. AUSTIN's attorney was permitted to prepare the modified decree in any way he saw fit, but the record in this case is on file in the Supreme Court of Tennessee at Knoxville, Tenn., and it discloses the facts I am about to relate.

A reference to page 179 of the transcript of evidence in that case will show that on the 9th day of September, 1910, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] was at the Victoria Hotel, in the city of New York, requesting holders of bonds to send their bonds to George H. Sullivan, of 49 Wall Street, New York, of the firm of Cromwell & Sullivan, and that page of the record and prior and subsequent pages show how successful Mr. AUSTIN was in getting stock and bonds assembled in New York at the office of this great Wall Street firm of lawyers and promoters. Page 376 of the transcript of the evidence in this case contains a letter written by the Aluminum Co. of America to George H. Sullivan, notifying Mr. Sullivan and the other members of the executive committee that they had on the 29th day of August, 1910, deposited with their agents and attorneys, Strong & Cadwallader, at 40 Wall Street, New York, the sum of $160,000, to be turned over to Mr. Sullivan upon the delivery of the entire stock and bond issue of the Knoxville Power Co. The firm of Strong & Cadwallader have also an international reputation and do not deal with small things. This is the firm to whose Sugar Trust activities I have had occasion to call attention more than once on this floor. I have also had occasion to mention many times on this floor and before the great committees of this House the firm of Cromwell & Sullivan, and I regret exceedingly that the mention I have been able to make of these two great firms of promoters and lawyers has not been at all complimentary to either firm. I have never had occasion to take back anything I have ever said about either firm.

On page 45 of the transcript of the evidence in this case will be found admissions of record in the answer of Mr. AUSTIN that he was authorized to assist Charles H. Treat in making sale of this property at the time Charles H. Treat was trying to sell to the Pittsburgh (Pa.) water-power bankers. Mr. Sullivan admits the same thing.

I have called attention to enough facts easily substantiated to show that no Member of this House is on closer terms of business relationship with the representatives of the great Water Power Trust than the gentleman from Tennessee. The trail from his congressional office here in Washington, as disclosed by the record in this Tennessee case, leads to the office of F. R. Weller, of Washington, D. C., water-power lobbyist and promoter; to the office of Charles H. Treat, Treasurer of the United States, who during his lifetime was a water-power promoter; to the firm of Cromwell & Sullivan, dealers in interoceanic canals and water-power properties; to the banking firm of the Kums in Pittsburgh, Pa., water-power bankers; and to the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., of New York City—the bank of the General Electric Co.

The transcript of the record of this case now on file in the Supreme Court of Tennessee will even show that Mr. AUSTIN conducted a part at least of his correspondence in this matter on the stationery furnished to him free from the stationery room of the House of Representatives. I have reached now the question as to how much the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] profited from this enterprise. The record in the case shows that he at all times insisted that the unsecured creditors should be paid in full, and his reason for insisting so strenuously upon this is due to the fact that he was an unsecured creditor himself.

In his answer in this case, as appears from page 50 of the transcript of the record, he admitted that the Knoxville Power Co. was indebted to him in the sum of $10,000. I think I might read now from an abstract of what the evidence discloses, printed for the use of the judges of the supreme court by Mr. Templeton in his suit against the Knoxville Power Co. I quote from the transcript furnished by Mr. Templeton in this case:

We refer again to the transcript, page 158, where the minutes of the stockholders' meeting of September 12, 1907, showed that series B bonds, then being authorized, shall be used in settlement of all other indebtedness of this company now existing or which may hereafter be incurred. (Transcript, p. 158.)
Mr. AUSTIN got $12,000 of that stock. (Transcript, p. 159.)
He got $5,000 of class B bonds. (Transcript, p. 142.)
His investment in this enterprise was the large sum of $21.50. (Transcript, pp. 349, 350–351.)

Again I quote from the summary prepared by Mr. Templeton in this case, showing the distribution of the $150,000 finally received from the Aluminum Co. of America.

A true statement would be as follows:

Total purchase money	$150,000.00
Deduct commission paid Weller	7,125.00
Balance	142,875.00
Deduct expenses of sale	6,149.92
Balance	136,725.08
Total amount paid out of first-mortgage bonds and class A bonds, which were paid in full, and the pro rata paid on class B bonds, according to Sullivan's testimony and exhibits put up	97,192.00
Leaving a net balance of	38,533.08

Which Sullivan and AUSTIN have divided between them, except that Sullivan shows that he has placed on special deposit, to cover any recovery in this case, the sum of $1,500; and he has a balance in bank of $1,160.39, making a total of $2,660.39, out of the purchase price of these securities, which has not yet been distributed.

I ought in justice, however, to Mr. AUSTIN to say that he did not receive the sum of $10,000, which he claimed was due him on account of his services, but on account of that item he does not appear to have received over $8,025. On the $5,000 worth of class B bonds held by him, and which the record shows were given him as a bonus, he collected 60 cents on the dollar, or $3,000 in all.

I have called attention to sufficient evidence, none of which can be contradicted or denied, to show that a Member of Congress, who is interested only as a Member of Congress in rivers, can, if his conscience permits him to do so, derive some considerable profit from a connection with an enterprise of this kind. Of course, the enterprises embraced in the bills introduced by Mr. AUSTIN, and now incorporated in this omnibus measure, are as yet only in a formative condition. The profits the promoters of these enterprises would be able to get from the water-power trust will depend largely upon whether or not this House requires tolls to the Government and provides for the regulation of prices to consumers. The promoters of these enterprises, whoever they are, and I am sorry it is impossible to find out even where many if them live, will not make as much out of these projects if the conditions we are insisting upon are attached to this bill. I submit that this body is interested not in the possible profits these promoters may get, but is interested in the protection of those citizens of the United States who may be consumers of the hydroelectric power generated by these companies, and this body ought also to be interested in protecting the Treasury of the United States. I think I can safely say, from the evidence I have so far been able to obtain, that these enterprises embraced in the bills of the gentleman from Tennessee are at least in the hands of and controlled by the friends of the gentleman from Tennessee. Speaking in this House in a carefully prepared address on the 19th day of July, the gentleman from Tennessee made this statement:

Mr. Speaker, if I am here as a Representative favoring a water-power trust which is seeking to take an unfair advantage of the American people, I have violated my oath of office. Not only that, but I have disgraced myself and am no longer worthy to be a Member of the House of Representatives. If I am guilty of this charge, and the gentleman from Illinois will produce his proof, I will tender my resignation as a Member of this House, for I will no longer be worthy of companionship or association with the honorable membership of this body. Neither would I be the kind or character of man who would be a fit Representative of the splendid people who sent me to Congress.

I do not ask the gentleman to resign from this body. He holds his commission from the electors of the second congressional district of Tennessee. I do not think, however, the cause of water-power conservation in Tennessee would suffer if the gentleman's connection with this House should cease.

If he should determine to resign I can assure him that those who remain in this body will be able to take care of the water-power problems presenting themselves for solution in a way that will be equitable and fair to the communities affected thereby, with due regard also to the Treasury of the United States. I am quite sure the rivers of Tennessee can be saved for the people of Tennessee without the assistance of the gentleman who now represents the Knoxville district here, and who, with so much energy and with a generalship worthy of a better cause, is preparing to feed the towns and cities of his congressional district, bound and gagged, to that great Moloch of trusts, the growing water-power combination of the United States.

APPENDIX.

WATER POWER AND THE FUTURE.

[A paper prepared by Harry A. Slattery, secretary of the National Conservation Association.]

The water-power problem will sooner or later be brought home to every man, woman, and child and home in the Nation. As was said by a remarkable man many years ago, "Electric power will more intimately touch our domestic and industrial life than any factor known in all history." With the rapid development of electric transmission, the price of power will soon be "a controlling factor in transportation, in manufacture, and in household lighting and heating." And within a few short years the use of power will become a daily problem to the man on the farm, the woman in the home, and to the workman in the shop. It does not take vision or imagination of great length to see the day when the farmer will use power as his handy man. No better illustration of how intimately it will affect the farmer and even his product is shown than in the recent successful experiments in the manufacture of nitrate of fertilizer by electricity. In this country today, in South Carolina and in New York, plants with millions of capital have been built for this purpose. The relation of electric power to the household will grow closer with the coming years, and at no distant future electricity will be a telling factor in each household. The electric kitchen at West Point is wonderful, and is also an indicator of the future. In the industrial world, however, will come the most striking illustration of the revolutionary power of "white coal." Today we accept the statement of Edison that "canned power" will soon be a factor in the industrial world, and we do not question the statement of Tesla that at no distant date will come the transmission of electricity via wireless.

The whole country is to-day awakening to the terrible force of this unseen and unknown factor. Upon this question of the conservation of water power in the interest of the people and of the shadow of monopolization of water powers, the Nation has awakened. In the control of the agency of power has rested in every age the problems of humanity. The question of power—whether in wind, fire, or water—has intimately affected the relationship of man to man. As Kipling has shown in one of his graphic pictures, power has been the humanitarian problem of every age. As Mr. Bryan has tersely phrased it: "One who has not visited the Old World can not understand the landlord system there."

If you ask me what I regard as the greatest burden of the people of Europe, I reply "landlordism." In some of those countries the people are so situated that those who till the soil transmit from generation to generation the right to pay rent, with no possibility of ownership, while a few families transmit from child to child the right to collect rent, with no disposition to till the soil. I regard that as the greatest burden of Europe, and one of the blessings that we enjoy in this country is freedom from such landlordism as they have in the Old World. I know of nothing that nearer approaches the system of landlordism in Europe than the proposed giving away of these mountain streams in perpetuity to great syndicates, that through the years and generations to come could exact their toll from a toiling people. Therefore, when we consider the use of these mountain streams the first thing we must decide is that there shall be no perpetual grant of a water power. Who can tell what that right will be worth a hundred years from now? Look back 25 years. Who could have estimated then the value of water power to-day? Within the last quarter of a century we have had a development of electricity that makes it possible to carry for hundreds of miles power generated by falling water. If you visit Canada, you will find in the Province of Ontario great towers, carrying to the various cities the power generated at Niagara Falls. We are now in the very beginning of the use of electricity. No human being can measure the value of one of these waterfalls. What criminal folly, then, for this generation to barter away the sacred rights of posterity to syndicates and corporations. So it seems to me that one of the important questions to be decided in the conservation of our natural resources is that the principle of monopoly shall not be permitted in this country under a guise or in any form.

Let us insist that wherever and whenever a franchise is granted it shall be granted for a term of years, and that that term shall not be so long but that we can reasonably estimate to-day the value of it at the end of the term. No other principle is tenable in the discussion of this subject.

THE RAILROAD CONTROL OF POWER.

The statement that the railroads of the country are opposed to development of water power and fight efforts made to utilize streams of the country may bear serious questioning. In the report of the Commissioner of Corporations on the Water Power Trusts, on page 17, he states that the General Electric Co. has the widest influence in the sphere of electric development. On the board of directors of this company are several prominent railroad magnates, and no influence is greater in this company than that of the Morgan interests. J. Pierpont Morgan, Charles Steele, E. T. Stotesbury, of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., are directors of this company. Again on the directorates of the three large bonding companies who bond these water-power projects are found several prominent railroad magnates.

The Pennsylvania Railroad in the State of Pennsylvania alone, through water charters and water-power rights, have monopolized the powers in 15 counties operating through the American Pipe & Construction Co., a subsidiary corporation, and in 12 additional counties through direct control. It controls a total of about 100 companies, 69 incorporated and 37 unincorporated.

On page 171 of the Bureau of Corporations Report is shown that the Gould interests monopolize the Virginia field, controlling at present about 60,000 horsepower. Their commercial developed power is about 75 per cent of the State.

The New York, New Haven & Hartford road controls large power interests in New England. This company is rapidly electrifying its steam roads, and the New York, Westchester & Boston road, which is one of the great arteries into New York City, is operated by power controlled by this road.

Near all the great cities of the country, the railroads are securing power sites to operate their yard tonnage by electricity. This is true of this city, since a subsidiary company of the Pennsylvania Railroad has recently taken over several of the suburban trolley lines.

MONOPOLIES.

The statement has been made that there is no reason for fear of a water-power monopoly, and that the States in any event are able to take care of corporations within their borders. A reading of a letter of submittal by Commissioner Smith of his water-power report will convince any doubting Thomas that "our remaining water powers are fast passing into private control, making regulation thereafter very difficult." He shows very clearly that six great power corporations already control about 60 per cent of the total commercial water power (1,821,000 horsepower), and also a large portion of the undeveloped horsepower. These companies, by interlocking directors and interlocking interests, are clearly members of one family. This great water-power interest has been growing steadily for many years, and some of its growth is certainly due to congressional legislation. Of about 100 dam sites authorized by Congress since 1789 no less than 50 per cent can now be found under the control of the great water-power interests. In recent years Congress has granted sites which within a few months find their way into the hands of the water-power people.

But while this is true of national legislation in the granting of authority, the States have been the most flagrant violaters of disposal of water-power rights. As an example, Pennsylvania to-day awakens to the fact that her water powers have all been taken up, and by methods that are certainly questionable, to say the least.

Pennsylvania has granted charters to 1,856 water-supply and water-power companies; 969 are in active operation; 133 cities and towns of the State control their own water supply. The balance of the charters—1,623—are owned by corporations; 787 are not operated, now held to prevent competition or for future exploitation. Of the 836 owned by corporations and in operation the most valuable have been consolidated into 93 merger corporations, with 4 giant monopolies. Water rights in 13 counties of Pennsylvania have been secured by the coal companies on the plea that they needed the water for mining purposes, hiding their real reason—fear of the development of a cheaper power than coal. The Lehigh Valley Railroad and its subsidiary coal company controls 9 incorporated and 22 unincorporated water companies. Pennsylvania has a law to annul all water charters not used and put into actual operation within two years after they are granted. Unfortunately, Pennsylvania has another law, which says no charter shall be surrendered and no corporations dissolved until all back taxes owed to the State have been paid. The water companies holding charters for future exploitation say since they never operated they never acquired any assets, and therefore can not pay their taxes. Thanks to this conflict in the law, the State can not take back the 787 charters now being held for future exploitation or to prevent competition.

Half of the State's resources have been grabbed within the last five years, and some of the methods are interesting. A newborn water-power company would leave its swaddling clothes of $1,000 capital the day after the charter was granted to appear the next day grown to the size of a million-dollar company. For instance, the Green Tree Water Co. grew from a corporation of $5,000 in May, 1904, to a corporation of $8,000,000 in August of the same year. A few months afterwards this huge Allegheny corporation was made a subsidiary company of the American Water Powers & Guaranty Co. The South Pittsburg Water Co.'s charter of July 15, 1904, under the guise of supplying water to various towns in Pennsylvania, capital $50,000, developed on August 17, 1904, into a $5,000,000 corporation. This company also a few months later became a subsidiary corporation of the American Water Powers & Guaranty Co. In this State alone the fight of the residents in Chester and Montgomery Counties, in Johnstown, in Cambria, and in Blair Counties for a reduction of rates shows what can be expected of monopoly. It is interesting to note that President Roosevelt's veto message of January 15, 1908, covering the first report of the Bureau of Corporations, showed that 13 water-power companies controlled 33 per cent of the water powers of the country, whereas the recent report of March 14, 1912, of the Bureau of Corporations shows that six companies control 60 per cent. This is certainly concentration and centralization of a most unheard-of rapidity.

NECESSITY FOR WATER-POWER LEGISLATION.

The report of the Interstate Commerce Commission stating that the general dam act gives the Secretary of War authority to charge compensation, and the inference that must be drawn therefrom that no legislation is required on the subject is not the opinion of others who are somewhat familiar with the subject.

The Attorney General in his opinion of July 13, 1909, has handed down the ruling that the act of June 21, 1906 (34 Stat., 386), stating stipulations and conditions which may be imposed by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers "are those which relate to navigation of the stream and the regulation of commerce therein and * * * that Congress did not by this act mean to authorize those officials to require as a condition to the license the payment of a sum or sums by way of compensation for the privilege granted * * *." It is also very evident the belief of the National Waterway Commission that the Secretary of War has no such authority. (S. Doc. 469.) On page 38 it states: "Present laws are inadequate because * * * [they are] in 'a most crude and unsatisfactory condition,' not being adequate either for proper Government control of these enterprises or adapted to encourage water-power development * * *." "Likewise in the case of navigable streams outside the public domain the lack of a fixed policy has left uncertain the extent and nature of the control which the Government intends to exercise * * *." Also on page 53 of the report, under "special recommendations," amendments are suggested to the general dam act.

MAY CONGRESS EXACT COMPENSATION FOR PRIVILEGES GRANTED?

The right of the Federal Government to require payment for the privilege of damming a navigable river to develop water power may be sustained on two grounds. The first was stated by Representative JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS on March 28, 1909, President Roosevelt's veto of the Rainy River bill was being discussed. "It is admitted that this power to erect dams in navigable streams can not be exercised by anybody except by act of Congress." Now, then, if it requires an act of Congress to permit any man to put a dam in a navigable stream, then two things follow: (1) Congress should so exercise the power in making that grant as first to prevent any harm to the navigability of the stream itself; and (2), so as to prevent corporations from securing through an act of Congress any advantage of private profit. Second, in his report of April 17, 1908, Secretary of War Taft moved, "In the execution of any project and as incidental to any inseparably connected with the improvements of navigation and power Congress stands for the regulation of the use and development of the waters for the purposes subsidiary to navigation." If Congress can impose conditions in a permit to build a bridge across navigable waters (permit bill to bridge over Arthur Kill River between New Jersey and Staten Island) it can impose the same for dam sites. (Stockton v. Baltimore Co., 32 Fed., 9; Clinton Bridge, 1 Woolworth, 150; Canadian Southern Railway Co. v. International Bridge Co., 8 Fed., 190.)

It is not possible to distinguish between the condition contained in these grants and conditions requiring compensation for water power. It may be said that the distinction is between those relating to interstate commerce and otherwise. The price the Government would pay for the transportation of mails or troops is fixed by agreement and not by promise, and is in no sense a regulation of commerce. Many other cases and illustrations present themselves, which do not concern navigation—overflow, fish sites, pollution of streams, and bridges.

That this is the opinion of the present Secretary of War is conclusive from his report. Secretary Fisher, in hearings before the National Waterways Commission, states: "* * * But I think that if any principle is established in our law now as a fundamental principle it is this: That where a governmental agency, not wholly ministerial, is given the right to grant or withhold its assent to the doing of a particular thing, it has the right to attach such conditions to that assent as it sees fit in the public interest. I think that is a broad principle which is established now by the decision of the courts. Applying that to the navigable waters, it is my opinion, as a legal proposition, that the Federal Government, having the right to grant or to withhold its consent to the construction of a dam or other means of creating hydro-electric power in that stream, has the right to attach conditions and any conditions that it thinks are in the public interest. I think it is not confined to conditions in the interest of navigation."

The veto message of President Roosevelt on the James River Dam, transmitting the opinion about the Solicitor General, which asserts the constitutional power of the Federal Government to impose a charge for licenses to dam navigable rivers for power purposes. This opinion is admirable and unanswerable. (H. Doc. 1350, 60th Cong., 2d sess.)

On page 43 of the National Waterways Commission Report (1912) the constitutional power of Congress to control water courses goes thoroughly into the question, and is of the opinion that the Federal Government has the authority.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Nineteen minutes.

Mr. RAINEY. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] is recognized for 54 minutes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, no other character of speech could have been delivered by the Member from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] in this House, because he long since established his reputation as a defamer of public men. Not only in my case, but months ago upon the floor of this House he was daring enough and reckless enough to assail the brother of the President of the United States, Hon. Charles P. Taft, and other public men and high officials, and later on was unable to furnish the proof. And, true to his instincts and his reputation, as shown in my case, he was too unmanly to make a retraction after failing to sustain his charges.

I am sorry that, quoting at the close of his speech from a recent address of mine, he stopped short and did not read the following:

> A brave, honest, and manly man, one worthy of a place in this House, one entitled to the respect and confidence of his congressional associates, will not misrepresent or slander a fellow Member. This is no place for a corrupt or unfaithful Representative, nor is this a suitable place for a man who is the author of a slander or of falsehood against one of his colleagues.

This controversy between the Member from Illinois and myself commenced more than a month ago, when the Unanimous Consent Calendar was called and when a purely local bill, with a unanimous report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, every member of which is a peer of the Member from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], was reached on that calendar. The Member from Illinois objected. I asked him in a courteous way to withhold his objection until I could make an explanation, and that courtesy was denied me by the Member from Illinois. I have been here only a brief time—three years—but I have never known in this House before a fellow Member to deny that courtesy or right of a colleague to explain a local bill. And I do not envy the Member from Illinois for being the only Member in this House that would withhold such a courtesy from a colleague.

Later on he said, when I objected to his publishing certain articles in the RECORD in answer to the speech of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BERGER] that he did not object to a man objecting to his request who spoke for a Water Power Trust. And, displaying his usual recklessness, he now makes the false and baseless charge that the trail from my congressional office here leads to the office of F. R. Weller, of Washington, to the office of Chas. H. Treat, Cromwell & Sullivan, Kuhns, of Pittsburgh, J. P. Morgan & Co. In reply I will say that Mr. Weller has absolutely no interest in any Tennessee dam bill, that Col. Treat has been dead about three years, that I never in my life had any dealings with J. P. Morgan & Co., or the Kuhns, of Pittsburgh, of any character; never met them or ever heard from them and never had a word or a line with Sullivan & Cromwell or the General Electric Co. about any water-power bill or other measure pending in Congress.

Now, let us see. There are three bills in reference to damming the Clinch River. One is in the interest of the Tennessee Hydro-Electric Co., a Tennessee chartered company, and the Member from Illinois says that one of the charter members is the United States district attorney, who holds his position by virtue of my will and indorsement. The district attorney, Mr. Cox, hails from the first congressional district of Tennessee, and owes his appointment to my late colleague, the Hon. Walter P. Brownlow.

The Tennessee Hydro-Electric Co., with John R. Paull, of Pittsburgh, at the head, asked me to introduce this bill. That request was not only backed up by the United States district attorney at Knoxville, Tenn., but Judge J. H. Wallace, of Anderson County, Tenn. I requested Mr. Paull to give me references, for he was a nonresident and a stranger, and he gave me the two Representatives in Congress from his city or home, namely, Mr. DALZELL and Mr. BURKE, and Senator OLIVER, of Pittsburgh. I did not introduce that bill until I had consulted those gentlemen about Mr. Paull's reliability and standing and ability to carry forward his enterprise. I did more, Mr. Speaker. I asked the direct question of the Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. OLIVER, if Mr. Paull had any alliance or connection with a water-power trust, and his answer was in the negative. I thought, Mr. Speaker, I could safely take the word of my worthy colleagues in this House, Mr. DALZELL and Mr. BURKE, and the honored Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. OLIVER. The local men in Tennessee have standing and reputations as men equal to the standing and reputation of the defamer from Illinois in his district just beyond Springfield.

This company proposed to save the Government of the United States the expense of improving the Clinch River for navigation, a project already recommended by the district engineer and approved by the Board of Army Engineers, whose duty it is to pass upon the reports of the local or district engineer. Ten years ago the district engineer was directed by Congress to survey that river for the purpose of looking to its practical improvement, and the survey and report provide for a lock-and-dam system, slack-water navigation for 75 miles, and at an expense of $1,400,000, not counting the cost for overflowed and destroyed farming lands.

Labor and material have greatly advanced since that report was made. The valuation of the bottom lands along the Clinch River have also enhanced. This company has proposed to construct those dams, not as recommended by the district engineer, as cheap or cribbed dams, but as concrete dams. They propose to expend over $2,000,000 on the construction of concrete locks and dams and to pay for all overflowed lands, and maintain at their own expense the operation at all times of the locks and dams and relieve the Government of that expense.

I believe that would be a fair consideration for the right to use the water power on 75 miles of that river. Practically every business organization in that congressional district for more than 20 years has clamored here before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for the improvement of that river, and this private company, under the general dam act, would have been required within three years to complete the work and provide slack-water navigation of that river.

What would it do or accomplish? It would tap the great coal fields of east Tennessee and place our mines upon cheap water navigation and open to our coal operators and miners that new and valuable coal field along the lower Tennessee River and the Mississippi River. The coal field of my district is 300 miles nearer New Orleans than are the coal fields of western Pennsylvania, and yet Pennsylvania supplies that market with coal, and the district I represent is entirely shut out, because the railroad transportation is $2.25 per ton.

Now, here was an enterprise which not only meant a new and valuable field for the sale of our coal, but for the shipment of pig iron from the district I represent to St. Louis, Cincinnati, Louisville, and other points by cheap water navigation. It meant the development of a new and promising zinc field along that river. What else? The gentleman from Illinois talks about the interest of the city of Knoxville. Knoxville is paying and has paid since the opening of our coal mines, beginning with a dollar a ton, down to transportation charges of 50 cents a ton to-day for every ton of coal used in its manufacturing plants, hauled 30 miles; and with the development of this river it means a reduction of 25 cents a ton on every ton of steam coal from the coal fields, and more than 30 cents on every ton of domestic coal used by rich and poor alike in that city.

Now, what was the other or second bill? The gentleman who represents the Indianapolis, Ind., district here, Mr. KORBLY, sent me the second bill in the interest of one or more of his constituents, with the request that I introduce that bill, known as the Clinch River Power Co. bill. I asked Mr. KORBLY about the character and reputation of the men back of that bill, and when I received his favorable and satisfactory indorsement of them I introduced the bill. If that bill is in the interest of a Water Power Trust, then the Representative of the Indianapolis district misled me. But I would much rather believe that the Member from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], as usual, misrepresented and traduced the gentleman from the Indianapolis district. That bill proposed to give Mr. KORBLY'S constituents, who, he said were worthy and deserving and not in touch with the Water Power Trust, permission to build a dam above and beyond that portion of the river where the district engineer states it would not pay the Government, and he would not recommend that it be improved for navigation purposes.

Now, what is the third, or last, bill that the gentleman complains about being introduced in the absence of my colleague, Mr. SELLS. It is a bill to give certain citizens in the town of Morristown, Tenn., the right to build a dam across the Clinch River. Every man mentioned in the bill is a leading and reputable citizen. One is the mayor and president of one of the leading banks of Morristown. They decided they could build a dam on the Clinch River and erect a power plant and reduce the cost of light, heat, and power, and bring relief to the people of the enterprising town of Morristown. Yet the gentleman says they are all interested in a Water Power Trust. Now, when one of those gentleman, W. C. Hale, with his attorney, Col. John P. Holloway, interviewed me, my colleague Mr. SELLS, was absent in Chicago, looking after his contest before the Republican national committee. I said, "Gentlemen, this dam will be located in Mr. SELLS'S district, and in his absence I can not introduce it." I suggested that they should wait and see Mr. SELLS on his return from Chicago.

Being personal friends of Representative SELLS, they said if I would introduce the bill, for they were in a hurry about the matter, and desired action before Congress adjourns, they would make it all right with Mr. SELLS. With that understanding I introduced the bill; but when I found that my colleague [Mr. SELLS] was opposed to it, because he thought it would injure him in his district to permit another Representative from an adjoining district to secure this water power, located in his district, for men who were not his constituents, but were mine, I told him I would not attempt to pass it, and so notified the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

And yet the Member from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], who is trained in the school of vituperation and misrepresentation, and who seems to glory in making a reputation for slander, suspicion, and innuendo against men in high or official life, sees in it a great Water Power Trust.

Those are the three bills that the gentleman talks and rants about. Now, what else? Why, the gentleman has published his speech in pamphlet form, sending thousands of copies throughout his district. It contained only the first speeches he and myself made; but he did not publish all of the controversy that took place on the floor of the House with reference to these water-power bills. He omitted my last reply. And he was so proud of what he had said about these so-called "water-power steals" that he published on the first page these words:

> If I have succeeded in making it odious upon the floor for any man to represent any of these water-power steals.

Now, there are 11 of these bills, and the gentleman was referring to them; not to mine alone, but all of them as "water-power steals." Well, who are the other great criminals besides the Representative from the second district of Tennessee who would father and urge a water-power steal? Here is the roll: Representative RUSSELL, from Missouri; his colleague, Mr. SHACKLEFORD, from the same State; the eloquent and brilliant leader on that side, Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN, of Alabama. Then there is good, steady, honest FLOYD of Arkansas, and the able and popular chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, from my own State, Mr. PADGETT. There is a recent addition to this House from a Republican district in Iowa in the person of Mr. PEPPER. He is back of one of these "steals." JOHN W. WEEKS, of Massachusetts, and myself. There are six Democrats and two Republicans. We are all either innocent or all guilty of Mr. RAINEY'S charge. This House is composed of almost 400 Members. There is not a man on the floor of this House who would attempt to impeach the honor and integrity of these men, except you—except you, and I do not envy you for standing out alone and believing all men are dishonest but yourself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that he must not use the personal pronoun "you."

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, the Member from Illinois who represents a district almost within the shadow of the home of the great Abraham Lincoln.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman talks about my room being headquarters for the Water Power Trust. Mr. Pauli has been in my room. These two men who came from Morristown, Tenn., also called to see me. Who else? Why, a man the Member from Illinois in one of his speeches here denominated as a "lobbyist" for the Water Power Trust called. I did not invite him, and I did not insult him. He was the same man that Mr. RAINEY dined with at Harvey's the night before he voted for this man's water-power bill in the House on July 25, 1912. What was that bill? It was the White River bill, the Dixie Power bill. You voted for it. Before voting for it you denominated him in your speech as a "lobbyist." What else did you do? You corrected your speech and published in the RECORD not that he was a "lobbyist," but "a very pleasant gentleman."

The SPEAKER. The Chair has admonished the gentleman that he must not use the pronoun "you"; that is against the rule.

Mr. AUSTIN. I mean the Member from Illinois. Now, what was the White River, or Dixie Power, bill? I voted for it because it meant the development of Arkansas. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the leader on this side, who was for many years chairman of the committee having before it this character of legislation, denominated that bill worse than any of these bills which Mr. RAINEY has denounced. The Member from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] voted for it. He did not vote for it until after he had spent an evening with a "water-power lobbyist."

Now, the President in his veto of the White River, or Dixie Power, bill said that the bill did not propose to spend any money for a lock and dam that would improve navigation as my bill provided. It proposed to give the Dixie Power Co. the right to build a dam above where the Government had already constructed a number of dams without any compensation at all, and yet the Member from Illinois has repeatedly said that he would stand in this House and object to every one of these bills and not a one should pass until compensation was provided for to the National Government; and the White River, or Dixie Power, bill that the Member from Illinois stood up and voted for—for I saw him—did not provide for the payment of a farthing to the National Government or the State of Arkansas. The President of the United States gave as one of his reasons for vetoing that bill, as contained in his message, the following:

> The bill also fails to reserve to the Federal Government any right to receive from the grantee of this privilege any compensation therefor.

Why did the great defender of conservation legislation in this House fail, when we were considering the White River, or Dixie Power, proposition, to vote against it when he knew it carried no compensation for the Government?

The Member from Illinois made a speech on my bill and other bills in which he stated that we ought to know in advance how much power is to be generated and how valuable the franchise is we are about to give away to private companies—to the so-called Water Power Trust. Did he stop to make this same inquiry before he cast his vote for the White River, or Dixie Power, proposition? No; he did not need or care for that information. Why, when the Member from Illinois objected to the consideration for unanimous consent on five or six of these bills he said:

> I had no feeling against the gentleman and have none now, nor have I against his bill or against any gentlemen who present any of these bills and who appear here as the proponents of any of them, but I blocked every one of them, and in blocking them on that day I saved the Government at least $25,000,000. I want to serve notice on the gentleman from Tennessee and upon everybody else who is interested in these private power bills, or rather whose friends are interested in them, that I propose to block on this floor every one of them as fast as they come up and to fight every one of them until some policy is adopted by this Government whereby a portion of these revenues can be saved for the Government and used for the purpose of developing these rivers and protecting the adjacent lands from overflow.

That speech was made on the 19th day of July. On the 25th of July, six days later, the Member from Illinois did not attempt to block the White River or Dixie power proposition, which carried no compensation to the United States Government. In the speech preceding his vote he made an ingenious argument to show that the Ozark Power Co. of Arkansas had already acquired a number of these power propositions, and that it might be possible that they would acquire the Dixie Power Co. proposition and form an Arkansas power trust. If he believed that danger to the people of Arkansas was lurking in that legislation, why did he not rise in his wrath and power and protest, fight, and vote against it? Let him answer.

Let us see about conservation. Why, the gentleman complains about the dam at Keokuk, Iowa. Some of the 28 mining companies in his district had been shipping coal to St. Louis, and the Keokuk Co. was granted the right to construct a lock and dam on the Mississippi River when the gentleman was in this House, and it went through without objection. The Keokuk Power Co. has entered into a contract to furnish 66,000 horsepower to the city of St. Louis, where 80 per cent of the present coal for making steam comes from the State of Illinois and some of it from the gentleman's district. The Keokuk Power Co. has entered into a contract to furnish the said 66,000 horsepower at a cost of $18.75 per horsepower. What does it cost to make power in St. Louis from coal from the gentleman's State? It costs $49.60 per horsepower. There is an actual saving per horsepower of $30.85, or a total saving of $2,036,000 a year to the people of St. Louis.

Is it not worth something on the lines of progressive legislation to save the people of a great interior city like St. Louis $2,000,000 annually? What else, Mr. Speaker? There are two or three different classes of people in this country who are blocking legislation for the development of water power. First the political demagogues and muckrakers. Second, those that honestly believe in conservation. I give the latter credit for their honest belief and opinions, but I think they are wrong in some respects. Why? If the Tennessee Hydro-Electric Co. develops 10,000 horsepower on the Clinch River and sells it in Knoxville and you impose a Government tax of $1 per horsepower, you are fastening a tax upon the people I represent of $20,000 a year, and under the general dam act, the lifetime of the franchise being 50 years, in 50 years you have made the people of my district pay into the National Treasury $1,000,000, and the Representative from Illinois wants that million dollars put into the National Treasury to be used and divided among all of the States of the Union, and the ninety-odd millions of people.

In other words, people in a city of 85,000 inhabitants in Tennessee must pay a tribute into the National Treasury of $1,000,000, to be placed to the credit of everybody in the Republic. The Member from Illinois does not require the coal men of his district to pay tribute or a tax to the State or the National Government for every ton of coal that creates power. You do not by law of Congress or of the State of Illinois say to the people who sell steam coal, "You can not sell it without paying the State or the Government a tax of $1 per horsepower," and you do not regulate or fix by law the price of steam power. How much coal would be saved by the construction of this dam at Keokuk, Iowa, and in filling its St. Louis contract? One million five hundred and eighteen thousand tons every year saved by the construction of one dam on one order or contract alone! There would be that much in coal saved and $2,000,000 saved annually to the people of St. Louis. Yet there are men in this House who are blocking and preventing water-power development every day. They claim to be progressives. They claim to be working and laboring in the interest of the people, and yet they are preventing the duplication all over this country of what we have at Keokuk, Iowa. By the construction and development of water-power plants in this country we can duplicate in the saving of coal and money all over this country what we are doing at St. Louis. The gentleman's colleague from Chicago, Mr. GALLAGHER, made an elaborate speech here about the water-power development of the Illinois River, and in it he stated that as a result of that development power was being sold much cheaper in Chicago. Shall we by our action block the development of the water-power interests of this country and continue to pay exorbitant prices for coal in Illinois and exhaust our coal supply, when we could save it for the domestic users in years to come?

Mr. Speaker, Congress gave to that company 200,000 horsepower for nothing, except to improve the river. How will a company in my district compete in furnishing power to a manufacturing plant if you are going to impose a dollar tax on every horsepower developed at or near Knoxville, Tenn., and make no charge at Keokuk, Iowa, or at Hales Bar, on the Tennessee River below Chattanooga, where Congress gave certain power companies the right to build the locks and dams without compensation to the National or State governments?

Mr. Speaker, now permit me to get down to a personal matter. The gentleman has represented his district in Congress for about 10 years. He has read to the House something in connection with the Knoxville Power Co. He wants to weave a web of suspicion about me because I resented the action of the gentleman in unjustly and untruthfully charging me with representing the Water Power Trust. He says in discussing the Knoxville Power Co. that I was unfaithful to the interests of Knoxville and wished to bottle up that city with a Water Power Trust. Why, after all of that litigation, which is a personal matter that the gentleman drags in here, seeking to injure me with my colleagues; after it was thrashed out in the courts and used in the campaign by my political enemies the city of Knoxville, ordinarily with a Democratic majority of 600, gave me a majority of 1,000 in the last election, and I carried 9 of the 10 counties in the district, and if the gentleman will canvass my district and make this same speech he has just delivered to the people that I know, and among whom I have lived since boyhood, if my majority is not 10,000 I will return the certificate of election.

The Member from Illinois makes addresses in the Chautauqua course, and a gentleman from Iowa stated a few days ago, after hearing one of those speeches, he felt humiliated that such bad and corrupt men were in Congress as were depicted or described by the Member from Illinois. There is as much honor here as anywhere on the face of this earth. I will compare the standing and incorruptibility of every Member of this House with that of a like number in any State in this Union, in any country in the world, in any deliberative or legislative body. With all these splendid Representatives of the American people, I am sorry to admit that there is one among them who can see suspicion and wrong and evil doing among those with whom he has associated here in the House of Representatives for the past 10 years. Mr. Speaker, I was one of the incorporators of the Knoxville Power Co., and had the gentleman come to me or sent to me I would have given him every particle of information about it. My life is an open book, and I have repeatedly said in every campaign I have made that if my enemies would point to a single dishonorable deed or act, I would quit the campaign and retire to private life.

If they would name where I had ever broken faith or promise with a friend or betrayed a trust, I would quit for all time. No man has ever yet accepted that challenge, and I made that statement in 150 speeches in one campaign, and I believe I can live and be happy whether the Member from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] believes in my honor or not. The Knoxville Power Co., Mr. Speaker, was organized more than 12 years ago. I found through a local engineer that there was a magnificent water power on the Little Tennessee River. Congress, under the law, had nothing to do with that river. The Secretary of War stated that the right to dam that river vested with the State of Tennessee. The law at that time was to this effect, that if a navigable portion of a river was in more than one State then Congress had exclusive jurisdiction to say whether a dam should be constructed upon it, but if the navigable portion of a river was wholly within the boundaries of a single State the State legislature alone had the right to say whether a dam should be constructed upon it. And with that decision of the Secretary of War and a copy of the Federal statute itself we went to the Tennessee Legislature and obtained the right to put a dam across that river. That law said after we obtained this consent of the State of Tennessee, before we could actually begin the construction of the dam, we must have plans, maps, and specifications submitted to the Secretary of War for approval. We bought up the lands upon both sides of the river for seven and a half miles. The gentleman says I put $21 into it. Oh, I was very poor in those days and expect to be poor as long as I am in Congress, but if these hands ever touched a dishonest dollar, God knows that I was unconscious of it.

I worked for 10 years on that proposition, and as a resident director and attorney I purchased the lands and examined titles, made any number of trips to enlist eastern or foreign capital, for we were too poor and our people of wealth did not understand the value of that proposed development. That is how I spent 10 years trying to put that proposition through. Well, finally, after my election to Congress, Mr. Francis R. Weller, a civil engineer and a reputable citizen of this city, with an office in the Hibbs Building, called to see me. I never heard until to-day that he was a water-power lobbyist, but I did not have on the spectacles through which the gentleman from Illinois looks. However, he was an engineer and wanted an option on the property of the Knoxville Power Co. at $160,000. We gave it to him. The property was sold to the Aluminum Co. of America. That is not a water-power trust; that is a great industry owning thousands of acres of aluminum ore in Georgia, Alabama, South Carolina, and Arkansas. They had shipped their bauxite or ore from the South to the St. Lawrence River to have it treated. They desired water power in the South and they examined a number of others and finally bought ours. They purchased it for $150,000, and out of the 10 years' service the directors of the company who owned a controlling interest agreed at a meeting I was entitled for my services to $10,000. I happened to be an indorser for Charles H. Treat, president of the company, formerly United States Treasurer, who had died before the deal was made. I was, unfortunately, an indorser on his paper, and, if the gentleman wants to know more of my personal affairs, every month after meeting my necessary expenses I turn the balance of my salary over to meet those Treat notes. Deducting my loss as Treat's indorser, I came out ahead $5,000 after working on this enterprise 10 years.

I am bringing into the district I represent the largest aluminum plant in the world. They are going to expend over $20,000,000 and give constant employment to over 1,000 men and build on the banks of the Little Tennessee River a great manufacturing city. Now, there is one county—Blount—in the district I represent which has been against me, and that is the county in which this plant is to be located. That was one of my banner counties in the last election because the people of that county believed I had performed a great act for the development of that section in locating the aluminum company in said county, but yet, in the eyes of the Member from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], I have committed a great and grievous wrong against the people whom I represent. Why, he says I misrepresented and attempted to delude the aluminum company in the sale of the Knoxville Power Co.'s property. I am an awful man in his opinion. He says one tract of land we had an option on that we included at $10,000 the aluminum company discovered we did not own. Col. Treat, the president of our company, died, and we did not know until after his death, when we came to examine the title papers in his custody, that he had failed or neglected to secure an extension of the option. Under the terms of the sale we guaranteed title to all the lands, and when we discovered that on this one tract we could not pass title a satisfactory adjustment was made, and this is the first intimation of a deception or fraud, and the officers of the aluminum company will, if called up, in my opinion, repudiate and denounce the false charge of the Member from Illinois that any attempt or effort was made to mislead or deceive them by me or anyone else in this matter. And yet a great crime was committed, and "the gentleman from Tennessee should resign or be retired from Congress."

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Seven minutes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I reserve seven minutes, Mr. Speaker. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] is recognized for 19 minutes.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee has taken up considerable time on this floor defending himself along perfectly immaterial lines. He refers to the fact that on this floor I once characterized these attempts to grab off water power in these States as "water-power steals." And he calls attention to the gentleman from Tennessee and to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER], authors of these bills, and to other gentlemen who have introduced these bills in this House, and then asks this House to say whether or not they would steal anything. He then defends his position and his connection with these bills by calling attention to these gentlemen and saying they will not steal. Why, of course, they would not steal.

Over here in the State of Pennsylvania the legislature has given away every available water-power site—1,688 of them in all. One hundred and thirty-three of them are owned by towns and cities, and the rest of them by corporations, and those corporations are holding inactive about half of them. These Pennsylvania charters all the way through provide that if work upon those propositions is not commenced within a year and finished within three years, and power delivered within three years, the charters shall be forfeited and the corporations dissolved. But they have there another law in Pennsylvania which provides that you can not dissolve a corporation until it pays the taxes due the State, and when they try to dissolve those corporations the corporations say, "You can not dissolve us under this law, for the reason that we have not paid taxes; and we have not paid taxes because we have no assets; and we have no assets because we have not developed these properties." Therefore, in this great State you can not dissolve these corporations and forfeit these charters. And so for future exploitation they hold over there in that State nearly one-half of all the water-power possibilities of the State, and the State is delivered over absolutely, bound hand and foot, to the Water Power Trust.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. RAINEY. I prefer not to do so. I have only a short time remaining.

Mr. OLMSTED. I wish to say that any company there that does not begin its work in one year and does not complete its work in three years forfeits its charter.

Mr. RAINEY. So I stated, but you do not forfeit it because they do not pay taxes. I do not understand the law of Pennsylvania as well as the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but I think if the gentleman will look it up he will find I have correctly stated the situation in his State. Is not that a steal? All operations of that character are, from a standpoint of good morals, wrong, and when I refer to these matters as steals I do not say any of these gentlemen would commit larceny under any circumstances. Why, of course, they would not. The gentleman occupies a very large part of his time here defending the moral standing of the incorporators of these two companies in Tennessee for which he has introduced these bills, and the moral standing of the gentlemen from Morristown, Tenn., for whom he has introduced that bill. Those gentlemen are all of the very highest standing in their respective communities. I have not the slightest doubt about it, but that does not protect the State of Tennessee or the National Treasury. The heads of all the great law-defying trusts in this country are law-abiding men. Their character is the very best. Why, some of them officiate as teachers in Sunday school classes, some of them give away libraries, and yet they are engaged in robbing the people of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I discussed his schemes down there, not from the standpoint of the personal morality of the incorporators of those companies; I did not question that. I examined those Tennessee projects from the standpoint of the solvency of the men who are asking for these franchises. And I examined them in that connection in order to call the attention of this House to the fact that they were speculative, and that these men, who are worth almost nothing at all, according to Dun and Bradstreet, none of them over $10,000, except the banker who lives in Pittsburgh—these men could not finance a thing of this kind.

These attempts are speculative, and the gentleman knows it. They obtain these franchises for the purpose of selling out, just as in 1901 the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] and his associates obtained the franchise to dam the Little Tennessee River for the purpose of selling it out and for no other purpose, and they did it. It was speculative; they sold it out to the Aluminum Co. of America, which is engaged in manufacturing, as the gentleman states. The General Electric Co. is also engaged in manufacturing, and it is the greatest water-power trust in the United States. The Aluminum Co. of America was trying recently to acquire the right to absorb the water-power possibilities of the St. Lawrence River, but the State of New York would not permit it. The Aluminum Co. is a $30,000,000 corporation, the largest single holder of water-power possibilities in the United States, and it is closely allied with the General Electric Co. The deposit of these bonds, the activity of the firm of Strong & Cadwallader, the assistance of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co.—the bankers of the General Electric Co. in the Knoxville Power Co. matters—all these facts show the close alliance of the Aluminum Co. of America with the General Electric Co. I called attention to these facts, and the gentleman, in his reply, touches lightly upon that phase of the question. I reviewed the history of the Knoxville Power Co. for the purpose of showing the possibilities of speculation in these propositions. I proved—and the gentleman himself in his answer has not denied—that he had a claim against thatcompany of $10,000 and that he afterwards obtained on that account $8,025. I called attention to a court record to show that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] and Mr. Sullivan, of the firm of Cromwell & Sullivan, divided a little over $38,000 as their share of the profits, and that the gentleman from Tennessee held in that company $5,000 worth of class B bonds given him as a bonus, and he got 60 cents on the dollar on this $5,000 of bonds when the settlement was made.

During all this time the gentleman has not been practicing law. He was United States marshal for the eastern district of Tennessee and consul of the United States at the city of Glasgow, and then a Representative in this body.

The service rendered to the Knoxville Power Co. by Mr. Sullivan and the gentleman from Tennessee consisted in this, and nothing else: In the attempt to sell out that company to some great financial institution or concern, and finally the attempt was successful, to the tremendous profit of both of these gentlemen. And I undertake to say that there is no Member of this House who, during his membership in this body, has had better opportunities, as disclosed by this record, to get into close personal touch with representatives of the Water Power Trust. I do not seek to weave any web of suspicion about the gentleman from Tennessee. I have only stated the facts as disclosed by a court record, and I called attention to it on this floor to show how a private company can profit out of these water-power franchises.

Now, in order to throw discredit upon me the gentleman states that I voted in this House for the Dixie power proposition over there in the White River country in Missouri. I did not vote for it. On the contrary, the record of this House will show that for nearly all one afternoon my colleague from Illinois, Dr. FOSTER, and myself fought on this floor the Dixie Dam proposition because it did not contain these two features—protection to the consumers and tolls to the Government—and finally when the time came to vote on the proposition my colleague from Illinois and myself consulted here upon this floor, and we said the amendments put on that bill by the Senate made it a better bill than the House bill. We said, "We do not want to defeat them." The proposition came on here on a report from the conferees, and the report of the conferees made it a better bill than it was, in our judgment, when it left the House. The question was whether we would defeat the report of the conferees or stand for the bill as it left this House, and all of us on this side of the House voted, as nearly as I can tell—those who voted at all—for the report of the conferees on the Dixie power bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to his colleague?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that he and our colleague, Dr. FOSTER, fought all the afternoon against that bill.

Mr. RAINEY. We discussed it for a long time here, I will say to my colleague, and——

Mr. MANN. Not the original bill.

Mr. RAINEY. The contest was over the report of the conferees.

Mr. MANN. Only when the report of the conferees came back. I think the gentleman inadvertently said he and his colleague voted against the bill. When I called for a division—and that was the only time it was discussed—there were no negative votes cast against the bill.

Mr. RAINEY. The vote was on the report of the conferees.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman said he and our colleague, Dr. FOSTER, fought against it all afternoon. Certainly the gentleman would not fight it all afternoon and then not vote against it.

Mr. RAINEY. If I said that, I was mistaken, of course. I thank my colleague for calling my attention to it. The bill was not before the House at all, as my colleague, who is always so correct in his facts, has stated. It was the report of the conferees. There was no opportunity that afternoon to vote for or against the bill. The vote was on the report of the conferees, and, as my colleague has stated, every man in this House who voted, voted for the report.

Now, the gentleman makes the further statement that in the discussion of this White River proposition—perhaps in this very discussion upon the report of those conferees—I referred to the fact that a lobbyist from St. Louis was here promoting the schemes of the Ozark Power Co. I did so state upon this floor, and I left the statement out of the RECORD because I was visited upon this floor, before the speech was revised, by two members of the Arkansas delegation, and they said to me in effect this: "Do not use the word 'lobbyist' in commenting upon this gentleman. It will injure us in our districts." And they will corroborate me when I say that, and if they will permit me I will put their names in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I want to say as the author of the bill that I did not visit you.

Mr. RAINEY. No; you did not. They asked me to leave out that reference to this gentleman as a lobbyist, and in their presence I wrote the words "a very pleasant gentleman" in place of the word "lobbyist," and that term used sarcastically, as I used it, I thought made my characterization of that particular lobbyist much more objectionable than the word "lobbyist," but it satisfied this gentleman from Arkansas, and I made that change.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] refers to a dinner I had at Harvey's the night before this matter came up for discussion upon this floor. I was there. I went there with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] as his guest. On the way there we met the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD], who was accompanied by this gentleman whom I the next day characterized as a lobbyist; I think his name is Mr. Powell. I do not even remember his name now. Mr. Powell has interests in the district of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD], and they were acquainted on that account. Mr. SISSON invited Mr. OLDFIELD to accompany us, and his friend being with him, Mr. SISSON invited him also. We went over to Harvey's and had dinner there that evening. It was the day before the Dixie power question came up here on this report of the conferees, and that evening was the first intimation I ever had that any gentleman was here in this city representing the Dixie Power Co., and the gentleman himself told me when he sat down with us at the table: "You are fighting these power schemes in these States, and it is only fair for me to say to you, before I sit down, that I am here representing one of them." I think he said he represented the Ozark Power Co. We said to him, "That makes no difference," and he sat down and had dinner with us. Mr. SISSON paid the bill for that dinner. He did not pay it.

Now, that is the fact about that. Yet the gentleman tries to weave his webs of suspicion over a fact of that kind. The very next day I came here into this House opposing this bill, denouncing this gentleman as a lobbyist, and calling attention to the fact that the Ozark Power Co. would soon absorb the franchise of the Dixie Power Co., and that these companies were represented here by him. Now, he had lots of influence over me, did he not? I was influenced a great deal, was I not, by the fact that the night before, as Mr. SISSON's guest, at Harvey's restaurant, that gentleman also sat down at the table?

I will say that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] and myself take dinner together two or three times every week, we both have rooms at the same hotel, our families have gone home, and we take our meals at the House restaurant, and at various other restaurants and hotels in the city. No Member of this House is more violently opposed to these attempts to absorb water power than the gentleman from Mississippi, and he contributed to this discussion the most valuable argument made yet against these bills when he discussed the constitutionality of our position, and I think clearly established the right of the National Government to levy tolls and protect consumers, and this argument was made after the dinner at this restaurant to which the gentleman from Tennessee refers. There are not enough lobbyists and there is not enough money in this country to influence the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], or the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD], and the gentleman from Tennessee goes far out of his way to cast slurs upon incorruptible men of the very highest standing.

The gentleman refers to the little pamphlet I had printed which contains my controversy with him when he rose to a question of personal privilege here in the House. I was compelled to have that printed. I think when a Member of Congress receives demands from any section of the country for speeches delivered by him upon this floor he ought, so far as he can, to comply with those requests. I received so many demands for copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing that colloquy that I was compelled to print copies of those speeches. I do not know whether the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] received many demands or not, but I will say that the most of the demands I received came from his own State. I do not think there was anything wrong about having those copies printed. I paid for them with my own money, as all Members of this House must pay when they have speeches printed over here in the Government Printing Office. I printed all of that colloquy. If the gentleman had some other speech in the RECORD it was made at some later time. That is all there was to that. I printed it to meet demands from the gentleman's own State.

I agree with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] as to the importance of developing these properties in Tennessee and everywhere else. I have not failed on any occasion to say that I am in favor of developing all of these rivers in their power possibilities as soon as possible; but I have tried to make my position plain in this House, and I say now, as I have always said, that I am opposed to developing these power projects when the franchise we are asked to grant means turning over to these great companies our rivers without any protection to consumers and without any tolls to the Government.

The gentleman refers to me as being willing at all times to slander public men. I deny the gentleman's statement. I have for years on this floor fought not men, but improper attempts to exploit this Government. If I have mentioned the names of men high in the financial world, it has been necessary for me to do so, and I have done it fearlessly. I denounced the Sugar Trust. Its directors admitted that by a system of false weights they had stolen millions from the Treasury. The gentleman says I did not prove it. Why, they admitted it. The gentleman states that I said the brother of the President was one of the attorneys for the Sugar Trust and that I did not prove it. On the contrary, I did prove it, and I produced here on this floor the evidence of it—his name signed to briefs filed for the Sugar Trust in the Federal courts. He refers to the fact that I first exposed on this floor the Panama Canal scandal. I did; and before a Democratic committee of this House the charges I made are being investigated, a large amount of evidence has been taken and more will be taken in the future, and if the gentleman will get the volumes entitled "The Story of Panama—Hearings on the Rainey resolution," as these publications are called, he will find that my charges are being thoroughly investigated and are being fully sustained by the evidence. I have at no time on this floor made any charges that I have not been able to sustain by the proof, and the gentleman from Tennessee is probably beginning to find that out.

The statement can not truthfully be made that at any time I voted for the Dixie power bill nor for any of these bills, but I am ready to vote for all of them whenever they contain clauses providing for the protection of consumers and for tolls to the National Treasury. The Keokuk Dam bill was the first of these bills carrying considerable value to pass this House. It passed without opposition. That was nine years ago, when I was a new Member of this body. None of us knew anything then about water-power possibilities. The bill came out from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce without any minority report, and went through this House without any opposition upon representations that the company asking for the franchise was rendering a great public service in improving navigation in the Mississippi River, and the gentleman from Tennessee is now championing this same character of bills and for the same reason—improvement of navigation in rivers. But I think he will admit that there is opposition now to these bills and to these efforts to "grab off" valuable franchises. The country is thoroughly aroused, and it will be a long time before any more bills of this character pass the Congress. A way may yet be found to compel the Keokuk company to pay tolls to the Government, and a way may yet be found to regulate the charges that company may make to consumers.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman closes his speech with the statement that he is opposed to bills conferring water-power rights without compensation, and yet on the 25th day of July last he voted to give one of these power propositions away without any compensation to the Dixie Power Co., on the White River, in the State of Arkansas.

Now, he speaks about his reason for changing the record and discovering that the representative of the Dixie Power Co. was not a "lobbyist," but was a "very pleasant gentleman." My understanding of that matter is that the gentleman received a message or information that the representative of the Dixie Power Co. was looking for him and intended to settle with him for calling him a "lobbyist."

Mr. RAINEY. I denounce that as absolutely false. I received no such message.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois should not interrupt without asking permission. That applies to both gentlemen.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, a person that can save the Government of the United States $25,000,000 in the twinkling of an eye can interrupt me without permission.

The SPEAKER. All right, if the gentleman wants to be interrupted.

Mr. AUSTIN. My information is from Mr. Powell himself, who spent a very pleasant evening with the gentleman from Illinois, who is fighting every power bill except Mr. Powell's, of the Dixie Power Co.

Now, I want to close the discussion with a few statements in answer to what the gentleman has said in his main or first speech, that I wanted or attempted to bottle up the town in which I live—Knoxville—and place the consumers of power at the mercy of the water-power trust. The Knoxville Power Co. had to submit in advance, to the mayor and board of aldermen, the schedule of charges for power to the consumer, and that schedule had to be satisfactory to the mayor and board of aldermen before the company could get permission to string their wires or enter the city. So the controlling question of rates was not within the power of a so-called water-power trust or the Knoxville Power Co., but alone in the mayor and board of aldermen of the city of Knoxville.

The gentleman says that Mr. Sullivan and myself had $38,000 that we divided. Mr. Sullivan put over $40,000 of money into the Knoxville Power Co. and kept it there eight years before he had any return on his investment, yet the gentleman's statement is that he furnished nothing to promote the company or enterprise and cashed out $38,000. I did not divide any $38,000 with Sullivan, or any other part with Sullivan. Sullivan held so many bonds in this company. He had advanced forty-odd thousand dollars, and under the terms of the sale his money was returned with a certain per cent on his bonds. I received a certain per cent on my bonds and a compromise for my legal services extending over a period of 10 years, and payment of a security debt of the president of that company.

Now, I sent no telegram to the holders of the Knoxville Power Co. bonds from the Victoria Hotel in New York. The chancery court of Knoxville, Tenn., decided the case against Mr. Templeton, and the supreme court, composed of Democrats, in modifying that decree, held that Sullivan was liable to Jerome Templeton, and not Mr. Austin. So I got out of the litigation with clean hands and a vindication not only by the chancery court, but by a Democratic supreme court, and in a few weeks after that I was elected by an increased majority to this House, five times greater than my first majority, and a majority in the city of Knoxville, where I had lived 30 years, of over 1,000, carrying 10 wards out of the 11, and in the district I carried 9 of the 10 counties.

Now, if the gentleman will extend the circulation of his speech made this morning in my district and accept my invitation to canvass the district, I will pay his expenses, and as much as the Chautauqua circle pays him for delivering speeches. [Applause of the Republican side.]

Now, with reference to the representative of the Dixie Power Co. being out the night before his bill was voted upon in the House with the Member from Illinois, I mentioned that event solely because the gentleman in opening his speech here charged that the so-called representative of the Power Trust was visiting my office. He visited my office once, and he accompanied the Member from Illinois to Harvey's restaurant once, and so honors are just about even between the Member from Illinois and myself as to the representative of the Dixie Power Co., or Water-Power Trust.

The Member from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] says the statement can not truthfully be made that at any time he voted for the Dixie Power bill For proof that he voted for said bill see the RECORD of July 25, 1912, page 9663. The bill passed by a unanimous vote. The gentleman was present, and we all saw him stand up and vote for the bill.

Mr. RAINEY. I did not know that it was in the gentleman's own office, and did not so state.

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman has stated that my office was the headquarters of the representatives of the Water Power Trust.

Mr. RAINEY. I made no such statement as that.

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman said my office was headquarters, or that there was a beaten trail between it and the agents or promoters of the Water Power Trust, and the gentleman knew that statement to be false when he made it.

Mr. RAINEY. I got my information from the record of the court in the Templeton case.

Mr. AUSTIN. That lawsuit has nothing to do with confirming, proving, or justifying the untruthful statement that my office was the headquarters for the representatives of the Water Power Trust, or that there was a trail from my office to the headquarters of the Water Power Trust. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 15181. An act for the relief of Harry S. Wade;

H. R. 24016. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 24458. An act authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to deliver to certain cities and towns condemned bronze or brass cannon, with their carriages and outfit of cannon balls, etc.; and

H. R. 25713. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bills of the following titles:

H. R. 25166. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 24996. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 24602. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 24322. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7160. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 7378. An act for the relief of James E. C. Corvel;

S. 7427. An act for the relief of Edgar Allan, jr.; and

S. J. Res. 134. Joint resolution appropriating money for the payment of certain claims on account of labor, supplies, materials, and cash furnished in the construction of the Corbett Tunnel.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles:

H. R. 20362. An act granting a pension to Catherine Wise; and

H. R. 24224. An act to amend sections 5, 11, and 25 of an act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyrights," approved March 4, 1909.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 26321. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes;

H. R. 20498. An act for the relief of certain homesteaders in Nebraska;

H. R. 21708. An act to authorize the lighting of Piney Branch Road from Georgia Avenue to Butternut Street; and

H. R. 24224. An act to amend sections 5, 11, and 25 of an act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyrights," approved March 4, 1909.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 7424. An act to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled "An act to authorize Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River."

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 21708. An act to authorize the lighting of Piney Branch Road from Georgia Avenue to Butternut Street;

H. R. 20498. An act for the relief of certain homesteaders in Nebraska; and

H. R. 26321. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 21969. An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 7427. An act for the relief of Edgar Allan, jr.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 7160. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 24016) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and agree to the Senate amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri and all other gentlemen that there are three conference reports on the Speaker's desk that it is very desirable to get out of the way.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I will state that I have spoken to the leader upon this side, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], before I addressed myself to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 24016, a pension bill, with Senate amendments thereto and agree to the Senate amendments. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I believe it to be entirely proper at this time and to the interest of the people of the country to review briefly the work of the Democratic House of this the Sixty-second Congress. The Democratic Party went into power in the House on the 4th day of April, 1911, after having been called into special session by the President of the United States, with certain platform pledges made to the people in 1908, which it proposed, contrary to Republican example, to carry into effect.

It had specifically promised the people to abolish Cannonism, or the "Czar rule" of the Speaker, in the House of Representatives; to provide for the direct election of United States Senators by the people; to levy a tax upon incomes of individuals and corporations, that wealth may bear its proportionate share in the burdens of the Federal Government; to require the publicity of campaign expenses, so that the people might know who are behind the several candidates; to take care, generously, of all soldiers wounded in or disabled by participation in the Civil War; to admit Arizona and New Mexico as separate States; to provide a Territorial form of government for Alaska; to give Federal aid to the construction and maintenance of post roads; and to protect American citizens at home and abroad; and to practice economy in the matter of all Government expenditures.

Each of these promises has been kept inviolate and they have all been made good, as I propose to disclose in this brief summary:

Every Member of the House now has his original right to participate in all debate and all legislation on the floor of the House.

A bill for the direct election of United States Senators has been passed.

A bill to prevent improper use of money in primary and general elections and to require publicity of campaign funds and expenses has been passed; also a bill limiting the amount that any candidate for membership in the House of Representatives can expend in a campaign to the sum of $5,000.

A bill placing a tax of 1 per cent, and known as the excise bill, on the excess of net incomes over $5,000, thus requiring wealth to bear a just, proportionate share of the burden of expenses of the Government has been passed.

We have provided, by proper legislation, for the opening of the Panama Canal, exempting ships flying the American flag from the payment of tolls. The Panama Canal cost the American people $400,000,000. It was built so that freer and cheaper transportation should be given to American coastwise vessels, and the passage of the free-ship canal bill carried out the pledges to our people.

A bill providing governmental aid to 1,000,000 miles of highway used for rural free delivery has been passed.

A bill providing for an experimental parcel post has been passed, to cover all sections of the country, at a reasonable rate of carriage, and specifically providing for the marketing of agricultural and industrial products.

The Sherwood dollar-a-day pension bill gives a substantial increase to all the old soldiers of the Civil War in their declining years.

Arizona and New Mexico have been admitted as separate States.

We have revoked our treaty with Russia for failing to recognize our passports and for discriminating against our citizens.

A bill has been passed placing sugar on the free list, which will reduce the price about 2 cents per pound, thus saving more than $100,000,000 per year to the masses of the people. The deficit that would result from this reduction of the sugar schedule is provided for by the excise bill, of which I spoke before.

A bill has been passed making a substantial reduction in the wool schedule, so as to lighten the burdens of the poorer classes in the purchase of warm clothing; also a bill making a substantial reduction in the cotton, steel, and chemical schedules.

The farmers and laborers free-list bill removed the tariff tax on farming implements, meat, and flour and other necessaries of life, and would have reduced the high cost of living. All these bills were vetoed by the President.

In addition, since our platform promised protection to labor, and since the Democratic Party is built upon labor, we have passed bills as follows:

A bill to provide for the restriction of the power of Federal judges in issuing injunctions.

A bill providing for trial by jury in cases of indirect contempt.

A bill creating a department of labor, and giving labor a seat in the President's Cabinet.

A bill providing for an eight-hour day on all Government work.

A bill increasing the scope of the Bureau of Mines and giving additional relief to those employed in mining coal, and to better develop methods to prevent accidents in mines.

A bill creating a child labor bureau.

A bill taxing out of existence the white-phosphorous match production.

A bill abolishing involuntary servitude of seamen.

A bill creating a commission to settle labor disputes.

A bill to pay injured employees.

A bill investigating the Taylor system, so-called scientific shop management, in order that workmen may be protected against speeding up beyond their normal power.

A bill requiring that convict-made goods shall be branded as such, and thus removing a part of the illegitimate competition with free workingmen and the manufacturers who employ them.

An eight-hour provision in the Post Office bill for post-office clerks and carriers.

A bill which removed the "gag" rule from post-office employees, so that they may bring their grievances to Congress without fear of being discharged for doing so.

A bill increasing the wages of railway post-office clerks and to carriers both city and rural.

A bill giving second-class mail privileges to official papers of trade unions and fraternal organizations.

A provision in the naval appropriation bill requiring all coal purchased for use in the Navy to be mined in an eight-hour day.

Never before in the history of any single session of Congress has so much legislation been passed for the benefit of the American people. Moreover the House, controlled by the Democrats, forced the Republican Senate into a retrenchment of the conduct of the affairs of the Government. At the special session in 1911 useless jobs were dispensed with, which netted a saving of more than $180,000 to the American people. In addition it has reduced the number of employees in many of the departments, especially the Treasury Department, where more than 500 useless employees were removed from office. It made the general Pension Bureau, in Washington City, the general disbursing office for all pensions, and abolished 18 separate pension agencies with their army of clerks, saving more than $250,000 in that particular branch of the Government service.

On this record the Democratic Party proposes to go to the country and ask the American people to continue it in power. On this record I propose to go to my constituents in Westmoreland and Butler Counties and ask them to continue me in office, believing that I have faithfully, honestly, and conscientiously attempted to perform a duty not only to a few but to all the people of my district. I am confident in the hope that my services will be appreciated by my constituency.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 24565) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, and inasmuch as the conference report and statement thereon are the same as were filed, and as are of record and have been for many days, with the exception of the modifications upon the matters that were objected to yesterday, I ask unanimous consent for the reading of the statement in lieu of the report, and that only those portions of the statement be read as relate to the matters objected to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Tennessee to designate what they are, so that the Clerk may understand.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, it is with reference to amendments Nos. 7, 8, 26, 34, and from No. 102 on.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know whether we can agree to an amendment referring to the battleship proposition. I desire to offer an amendment striking out the conference agreement as to any battleship, or to offer an amendment so that the agreement shall be that there is no battleship.

The SPEAKER. This is a conference report, and will have to be adopted as a whole or not adopted. If the gentleman desires to get at an amendment, the only thing to do is to vote down the conference report.

Mr. BURNETT. That is the parliamentary inquiry I had in my mind. I wanted to reach it by amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not reach it by amendment at this time.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Could not the matter about agreeing upon the battleship proposition be reached by a motion to recommit with instructions at the proper stage?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, that would not be in order. This is a conference report and has to be adopted or voted down as a whole.

Mr. BURNETT. Could not the vote be taken on any particular item?

The SPEAKER. We can not take a vote on any particular item in a conference report. The conference report must be adopted or rejected as a whole. If it be rejected as a whole, then the gentleman can move to do what he pleases with it.

In answer to the gentleman from Georgia, the Chair is rather inclined to think that the thing the gentleman asks about can be done, although he would have to examine the authorities.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, before the Chair rules——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not ruling, and if the gentleman from Illinois has any information the Chair would be glad to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, my recollection is, although I am not positive in respect to it, that where a conference report is made to the House and considered in the House first the motion to recommit to the conferees is in order, but where the conference report has been presented to the Senate first, and has been agreed to, so that the Senate conferees have been discharged, and there is no conference to which the report can be recommitted, then the motion is not in order.

Mr. RODDENBERY. But if the conferees on the part of the Senate are not discharged would not the rule be different?

Mr. MANN. I think that is what I stated. If the Senate has agreed to the conference report, that does discharge the Senate conferees.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Tennessee if the Senate has agreed to this report?

Mr. PADGETT. They did, and messaged it over yesterday afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois states the rule correctly. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that only the part of the report touching amendments 7, 8, 26, 34, and from 102 following be read, for the reason that the others have already been agreed to and passed on by the House. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think we better have the report read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1217).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24565) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 25, 27, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 47, 48, 58, 61, 62, 70, 71, 72, 75, 76, 78, 80, 83, 86, 91, and 110.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment, in line 2, after the words "United States," insert the following, "as amended by section 16 of an act entitled 'An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States,' approved March 3, 1899"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment, in line 6, after the word "received," insert the words "except pay and allowances for the unexpired period not served"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the words "and forty-three" and "two hundred and fifty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the following words: "and sixty-seven" and "seven hundred and seventeen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment except the following, which is retained as a separate paragraph:

"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to exchange such quantities of potassium nitrate now in store as may not be needed in the manufacture of black powder for sodium nitrate of equal value for use in the manufacture of smokeless powder."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That the balances of appropriations unobligated on January 11, 1912, made for the naval service under the headings 'Ammunition for ships of the Navy,' 'Fire-control instruments for ships of the Navy,' 'Small arms and machine guns,' 'Torpedoes and appliances,' 'Experiments, Bureau of Ordnance,' 'New batteries for ships of the Navy,' 'Arming and equipping the Naval Militia,' 'Modernizing projectiles,' 'Modernizing turrets of ships of the Navy,' 'Naval Gun Factory, Washington, D. C.,' and 'Battle compasses,' are hereby reappropriated and shall be available for obligation until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the following: "that $75,000 of said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the survey, investigation, and report upon the coal and coal fields available for the production of coal for the use of the United States Navy or any vessel of the United States," and in lieu thereof insert the following: "That $75,000 of said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the survey and investigation by experimental test of coal in Alaska for use on board ships of the United States Navy, and for report upon coal and coal fields available for the production of coal for the use of the ships of the United States Navy or any vessel of the United States, and $345,000 of said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used for the coaling station and fuel station at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment, in line 7, after the word "Hawaii," insert the following: "at a cost not exceeding $1,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the word "eighteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the word "thirty-seven" and in lieu thereof insert the word "thirty-one"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 24565) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and submitted in the accompanying conference report on the amendments of the Senate, namely:

Amendment No. 1 provides that the Auditor for the Navy Department may allow payments made to hospital stewards who were granted permanent appointments on May 13, 1908, which have been heretofore disallowed by reason of a decision of the Assistant Comptroller of the Treasury, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 2 strikes out the provision that hereafter any officer of the Navy who voluntarily retires or is involuntarily retired under the provisions of sections 8 and 9 of the act approved March 3, 1899, shall be retired in the grade in which he is serving and not promoted to a higher grade on the retired list, as provided under existing law, and the Senate recedes.

Amendments Nos. 3 and 4 provide that the six months' pay gratuity allowed by law paid upon the death of any officer or enlisted man on the active list of the Navy and Marine Corps shall be paid to the widow, children, or any other person previously designated by such officer or enlisted man, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 5 corrects a misprint, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 6 increases the pay of the secretary of the Admiral of the Navy $500 per annum, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 7 provides that hereafter any naval officer on the retired list may be ordered to perform duty, and shall receive the pay and allowances of an officer on the active list of the grade from which he was retired, provided that no such retired officer so employed shall in time of peace receive any greater pay or allowances than the pay and allowances provided by law for lieutenant commander on the active list of like length of service, except in the case where an officer's retired pay exceeds the highest pay and allowances of the grade of lieutenant commander, in which case he shall receive his retired pay only, and the House recedes with amendments whereby any naval officer may be ordered to duty with his consent, receiving the pay and allowances of an officer on the active list of the same rank, provided that in no case shall his pay be greater than that of the pay and allowances of a lieutenant of the senior grade, except where his retired pay exceeds that amount, in which case he shall receive his retired pay only.

Amendment No. 8 provides for the disposal of useless papers in the files of vessels of the Navy, except where such papers are of historic value or are correspondence with officers or representatives of foreign Governments, and the House recedes with an amendment designating the commander in chief of the fleet as the officer to determine the useless papers to be destroyed.

Amendment No. 9 provides for an increase in the limitation of $25,345.75 for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in the various navy yards, naval stations, and purchasing pay officers, but no increase in the appropriation is recommended; and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 10, 11, 12, and 13 reenact existing law and provide for the voluntary extension of enlistments of enlisted men in the Navy for periods of one, two, three, or four full years without any loss of rights which might become due such enlisted man upon a reenlistment, and provides further that, with the approval of the President, any enlisted man in the Navy may be discharged at any time within three months before the expiration of his term of enlistment without prejudice to any right, privilege, or benefit that he would have received had he served his full term, and to amendments Nos. 10 and 11 the House recedes, and to amendments Nos. 12 and 13 the House recedes with amendments perfecting the amendment of existing law and providing that no pay or allowances shall be allowed such enlisted man for the unexpired period not served.

Amendment No. 14 provides for the transfer of all lepers of Guam to an island possession of the United States best adapted for the care of such sufferers; and the House recedes with an amendment whereby the island of Culion, in the Philippine Islands, is designated, as there is an existing leper settlement in that Island.

Amendments Nos. 15, 16, and 17 provide for an increase in transportation, recruiting, and outfits on first enlistment due to the increase in the enlisted force of the Navy provided in the bill; and the House recedes with an amendment providing an increase of $50,000 in transportation, $20,000 in recruiting, and $30,000 in outfits on first enlistment.

Amendments Nos. 18, 19, and 20 relate to the Naval War College, and an increase of $1,270 is allowed, due to additional clerical help made necessary by reason of the long course of instruction being established, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 21 authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to make emergency purchases of war material abroad, and provides that such purchases shall be admitted free of duty, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 22 and 23 relate to the purchase and manufacture of smokeless powder, and an increase of $250,000 is allowed for such purpose, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 24 provides for an enlargement of the powder factory at Indianhead, the cost thereof not to exceed $650,000, and an appropriation of $325,000 is recommended, and provides also for the exchange of quantites of potassium nitrate now in store, and the House recedes with an amendment striking out the appropriation for the enlargement of the powder factory, but retaining the provision for the exchange of the potassium nitrate.

Amendment No. 25 provides for the expenditure of $100,000 for mines and mine appliances, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 26 provides that certain enumerated appropriations for the naval service be made available for obligation for two years. These appropriations relate to the manufacture and purchase of ammunition, fire-control instruments, small arms, torpedoes, heavy guns, and battle compasses. The appropriations enumerated in the amendment have heretofore been held to be continuing appropriations, but under a recent decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury they are held to be annual appropriations; and the House recedes with an amendment reappropriating the unobligated balances but not continuing same longer than the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

Amendment No. 27 strikes out the heading "Bureau of Equipment"; and the Senate recedes.

Amendments Nos. 28, 29, 30, 31, and 32 change the word "wireless" to "radio" in connection with wireless telegraphy; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 33 strikes out the provision that coal purchased by the Government shall be mined by labor employed not exceeding eight hours per day; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 34 provides for an expenditure of $500,000 for depots for coal under the authority of section 1552 of the Revised Statutes; and the House recedes with an amendment whereby $75,000 of this amount is to be expended for the survey and investigation by experimental test of coal in Alaska for use on board ships of the Navy and report thereon, and that $345,000 of said amount shall be used for the coaling station at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii.

Amendment No. 35 provides for radio stations encircling the world, one to be situated in the Isthmian Canal Zone, one on the California coast, one on the Washington or Alaska coast, one in the Hawaiian Islands, one in American Samoa, one on the island of Guam, and one in the Philippine Islands, and an appropriation of $400,000 is recommended therefor, the total cost not to exceed $1,000,000; and the House recedes with an amendment striking out the station "on the Washington or Alaska coast."

Amendments Nos. 36, 37, and 38 provide for the abolition of the Bureau of Equipment and the permanent disposition of its funds and duties, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 39 provides for an increase of $40,000 in the appropriation "Maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks," and the Senate recedes.

Amendments Nos. 40 and 41 provide for an appropriation of $100,000 for continuing the extension of the quay wall in the Portsmouth (N. H.) Navy Yard, and the Senate recedes.

Amendments Nos. 42 and 43 provide for an appropriation of $50,000 for rebuilding building No. 7 in the Philadelphia Navy Yard, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 44 is a change of language so as to include a plant not only for electric light but for other purposes without an increase in the appropriation, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 45 and 46 change the language relating to the appropriation for buildings and repairs to buildings in St. Helena, Va., without increasing the appropriation, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 47 and 48 provide for an appropriation of $300,000 for improvements to the water front at the navy yard, Charleston, S. C., and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 49 provides for an appropriation of $5,500 for paving the streets abutting on the naval station in Key West, Fla., which is the Government's share of such paving, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 50 reappropriates $145,000 for the establishment of a torpedo station near the naval station at Puget Sound, Wash. This appropriation was formerly made in 1910 for a torpedo station near the Pacific coast of the United States, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 51 and 52 raise the limit of cost of the dry dock at Pearl Harbor from $3,350,000 to $3,468,000. This increased limit of cost is due to conditions which require the use of a richer mixture of concrete for the dry dock. The appropriation made for the dry dock at Pearl Harbor has not been increased, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 53 authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to purchase an acre, more or less, of land in the Island of Oahu, Hawaii, for the location of wells for supplying fresh water to the naval station, out of the appropriation made last year for a fresh-water system at that station, and the House recedes with an amendment limiting the cost of the land to be purchased not to exceed $1,500.

Amendment No. 54 provides $5,000 for the extension of the underground conduit and lighting station in the naval training station at Newport, R. I., and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 55 provides for the exchange of data with foreign nautical almanac officers, with a view to reducing the amount of duplication in the work of preparing the different international nautical and astronomical almanacs, increasing the total data which may be of use to navigators and astronomers available for publication in the American Ephemeris, a nautical almanac, further providing for the termination of such arrangement upon one year's notice, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 56 and 57 provide for a set of double quarters for commissioned officers at the naval proving ground, Indianhead, Md., to cost $18,000, and the House recedes with an amendment reducing the cost to $12,000.

Amendment No. 58 provides $15,000 for dredging the channel and widening the water approach at the naval magazine, Fort Lafayette, N. Y., and the Senate recedes.

Amendments Nos. 59 and 60 appropriate $9,000 for water-main pipes and fire and boundary wall at the naval magazine, Lake Denmark, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 61 and 62 provide for appropriation of $22,000 for improving the water front at Newport, R. I., and $50,000 for an assembly and repair shop at the naval torpedo station, Newport, R. I., and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 63 provides for a general magazine to cost $13,000 and a shell house to cost $20,000 at the naval magazine, Hingham, Mass., and the House recedes with an amendment striking out the appropriation for the shell house, but agreeing to the construction of the general magazine.

Amendment No. 64 is a change of total.

Amendment No. 65 provides for a $30,000 increase in the Medical Department, which is deemed necessary, due to the increase in the enlisted personnel, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 66 is a verbal change without any change in effect of the appropriation, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 67 and 68 provide for an appropriation of $15,000 for dental outfits and dental material, due to the establishment of a dental corps provided for in the bill, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 69 is a change of total, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, and 86 relate to the establishment of a dental corps in the Navy, and the Senate recedes from its amendments to the House provision except that appointees to the dental corps shall take rank and precedence in the same manner in all respects as is the case of appointees to the Medical Corps of the Navy, to which the House agrees. This provision places the dental corps of the Navy on the same footing as the dental corps in the Army.

Amendment No. 80 provides that acting assistant surgeons in the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances as are now or may hereafter be provided by law for assistant surgeons in the Navy, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 87 provides for a dental reserve corps, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 88 provides that pharmacists after six years from the date of warrant be commissioned chief pharmacists after passing a satisfactory examination, and shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of chief boatswains, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 89 provides for an increase in the limitation for the clerical, drafting, and messenger service in the various navy yards and naval stations, without any increase in the appropriations, in the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, owing to the increased work thrown upon this department under the new system of storekeeping and cost accounting, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 90 strikes out the limitation of $10,000 for the hulls of aeroplanes, and the House recedes with an amendment fixing the limit at $35,000, and authorizes $300,000 to be expended for repairs on the U. S. S. Vermont.

Amendment No. 91 strikes out the limitation of $20,000 for the machinery of aeroplanes, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 92 provides for additional payments from the midshipmen's commissary fund in order to secure suitable waiters at the Naval Academy for the midshipmen, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 93 strikes out the House provision for the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy and inserts a provision which has been carried heretofore in the naval appropriation act for several years, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 94 and 95 are changes of total, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 96 and 97 provide for an increase of $200 each in the salary of the chief clerk in the office of the paymaster and in the office of the adjutant and inspector in the Marine Corps, placing all the chief clerks at the headquarters of the Marine Corps on an equal footing, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 98 and 99 are changes of totals, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 100 strikes out the proviso that coal furnished the Marine Corps shall be mined by labor that is employed not exceeding eight hours per day, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 101 is a change of total, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 102 provides for the construction of two first-class battleships, and the House recedes with an amendment providing for one first-class battleship.

Amendment No. 103 provides that of the two fuel ships to be built in the navy yards, one shall be built in a navy yard on the Pacific coast, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 104, 105, and 106 provide for eight submarine torpedo boats, instead of four as provided in the House bill, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 107 directs the Secretary of the Navy to consider the advisability of stationing four of the submarine boats authorized in the bill at or near the mouth of the Mississippi River and the United States seaports of the Gulf of Mexico and the remaining four upon the Pacific coast as a proper naval defense, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 108 and 109 strike out the provision whereby submarines are excepted from the provision that the Secretary of the Navy may build any or all vessels authorized in the act to be built in such navy yard as he may designate, should it reasonably appear that the persons, firms, or corporations, or the agents thereof, bidding for the construction of any of said vessels, have entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding the effect, object, or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, and unrestricted competition in the letting of contracts, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 110 strikes out the provision allowing the gunboat which was authorized to be built on the Great Lakes under the act of May 4, 1898, to be built elsewhere, and the Senate recedes.

Amendments Nos. 111, 112, and 113 increase the appropriations for "Construction and machinery," "Equipment," and

"Armor and armament," under "Increase of the Navy," for the next fiscal year, by the amount necessary for two first-class battleships, and the House recedes by increasing the amount necessary for one first-class battleship only.

Amendment No. 114 is a change of total.

Amendment No. 115 strikes out the eight-hour law provision in the bill and inserts in lieu thereof that the act approved June 19, 1912, an act limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States or any Territory thereof or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, to apply to all contracts authorized by this act from and after the passage of this act, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 116 strikes out the provision prohibiting the employment of enlisted men or seamen for doing repair work belonging to any recognized trade, on battleships of the Navy when such battleships are docked or laid up at any navy yard for repairs, and the House recedes with an amendment whereby it is prohibited to employ any enlisted man at any duties except such as are or may be performed by the crew of the battleship while at sea or in a foreign port while any battleships of the Navy are docked or laid up at any navy yard for repairs.

Amendment No. 117 strikes out the word "Provided," and the House recedes.

The total increase due to Senate amendments is	$15,043,037.00
Amount agreed to in conference	4,673,570.00
Amount of Senate recessions	10,369,467.00
Total of bill as it passed the House	118,547,137.48
Total bill after conference	123,220,707.48

J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
GEO. EDMUND FOSS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adopt the conference report.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, some Members on this side indicate their desire to be heard on this, and I hope there will not be precipitant action taken without giving an opportunity for them to be heard. For instance, I understand there is an increase of $250,000 for powder, and gentlemen would like to discuss these questions, and I hope some time will be given them.

The SPEAKER. Well, if the gentleman can agree on time. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. BURNETT. I do not want any time, as I submitted a few remarks the other day, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] would like to be heard for 15 minutes, and perhaps some other gentlemen.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. How much time is there going to be used?

Mr. PADGETT. There is no agreement; I have not yielded the floor, but it is out of my time. I desire to bring this matter to a conclusion.

Mr. MANN. I want some time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I shall desire the full 15 minutes, but I desire time enough to call the attention of Members of the House that the amendment which was put in when this appropriation was being considered, saving the Government $250,000 by reducing the amount for the purchase of powder, has been stricken out, and it seems, while I would not impugn anyone's motives, I have confidence in the good motives of the Members of the House who served on the conference, yet it is certainly to the advantage of the Powder Trust to have the Government contract for powder which gives them $250,000 profit, which would be saved for the Government by the manufacture of its own powder at the Government powder mills which are equipped to manufacture at a reduction of $250,000. Now, it is said by those who are in favor of giving this criminal Powder Trust the contract, that it is necessary in time of emergency to have a Powder Trust to manufacture our powder. I say if the Government wants to protect itself in the case of an emergency it should not depend on any Powder Trust or any other private corporation, but take this $250,000 that can be saved annually and provide for powder mills, so that it may be prepared in times of emergency.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Does the gentleman mean to say that this item for the Powder Trust has gotten in again after it was overwhelmingly defeated on the floor of the House?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The report says, "amendments Nos. 22 and 23 relate to the purchase and manufacture of smokeless powder, an increase of $250,000 is allowed for such purpose, and the House recedes."

Mr. TRIBBLE. And the conferees agree to that after we defeated it so overwhelmingly in this House?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; that is agreed to. Now, I do not want to take up the time of the House any further than to call the attention of Members of the House to what was done in regard to this particular matter which was so fully discussed at the time the appropriation was considered showing that the Government can produce powder for about 33 cents a pound, whereas they are buying this of the Powder Trust at 60 cents a pound.

In my judgment, it does not cost the Powder Trust 30 cents a pound to produce the powder they are selling to the Government at 60 cents a pound, although the officials of this trust, as they are always able to do, have figures appearing that they are not making that great profit. Now, another thing I want to say while I have the floor is this: I claim that the Democratic caucus when it took up and considered the question of battleships took the proper position under the circumstances at this time, that instead of authorizing additional battleships we should round up our Navy and furnish the necessary auxiliary vessels to those battleships, and that seemed to be the settled policy for the Democrats until the publicity bureaus of the armor-plate manufacturers, and steel manufacturers, and the shipbuilders got busy and worked up a sentiment in favor of battleships. Now on that I want to say it is not my purpose to impugn anyone's motives who is in favor of battleships, but I do say this, that if the Government would construct its own battleships, manufacture its own armor plate and steel, and put a tax upon the large incomes in this country to pay for the expenses, you would see the trust newspaper editorials of the country turn tail in regard to the matter, and would advocate peace instead of war.

Mr. MURRAY. Will the gentleman yield? I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois whether he can give the House any definite information as to the publicity bureaus to which he referred?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts, if he is well informed, knows they are always busy. The publicity bureaus have caused to be published in the newspapers of this country for many years war scare items for the purpose of obtaining large expenditures for the Navy so that the armor-plate and steel manufacturers can make exorbitant profits to pay dividends on the watered stock—spurious capital—which has been soaked into the steel industries by the industrial and commercial pirates of the country.

He does not have to ask me that question. In my judgment he knows it as well, if not better than I do.

Mr. MURRAY. If the gentleman will yield further, I will say that the question is entirely sincere. I have heard much loose language about publicity bureaus, and I have never been able yet to get any definite information in regard to them, and I wonder whether or not the gentleman from Illinois will give the information to us.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the gentleman will read the record of this House as to what the armor plate and Steel Trust people have been doing, he will readily understand their publicity bureaus have been working overtime in order to keep them in favor with the people of this country, so that they may be able to get contracts from the Government and further rob the people as they have been doing for a number of years. They have been partially successful in the past in deceiving the public, but their ability to further deceive them, in my opinion, is gone. I believe the people of these United States are awakening to what is being done through the agencies of the large corporations and big business interests in this country, and so far as I am concerned I am willing to go "to the bat" in a political campaign on any position I take in regard to questions of this kind, and I believe if this question was put properly before my constituents they would vote 3 to 1 against increasing the expenditures of the Navy Department when there is no indication of war.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY]?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] is not looking for information from me. He is trying to confuse the argument I am trying to make here.

Mr. MURRAY. Oh, no; Mr. Speaker. But I do not understand——

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not care to have my time taken up. I have only 15 minutes. However, I will yield.

Mr. MURRAY. I just wanted to ask the gentleman in all good faith to have incorporated in his remarks the reference to the place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD where I may find the information that I have honestly asked for.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will ask the gentleman to read the Stanley steel report and he will obtain information that may be of benefit to him, and also read information that was secured some years ago in the investigation as to the quality of armor plate, and so forth, which investigation was never completed.

The hearings and the report of the special steel committee show that a coterie of men who have been posing as eminent business men of the country have committed the greatest crimes of the age under the guise of great beneficiaries in the development of the industries of the country and through their publicity bureaus and the trust newspaper editorials they have deceived the people into believing that they were legitimate business men.

The Hon. A. W. GREGG, of Texas, in his thoroughly convincing speech that the position of the Democratic caucus was a wise one, states that at a certain banquet of the Navy League one of the speeches contained the following:

There is little danger of the United States being invaded, but she now has a larger rôle to play than merely the protection of her own territory. She can not remain passive while injustice is being done in any part of the world. She should announce to the world that she stands for justice to all, particularly the weak, and should be ready to stand back of her announcement.

On February 25, of this year, there appeared in the New York Herald an article from Capt. L. Persius, one of the most capable and best known of the German retired naval officers, in which he says:

The Japanese Navy, far from being equal to that of the United States, is weaker than at the outbreak of the Russo-Japanese War. The then modern battleships are now obsolete. The ships captured from the Russians, rebuilt at a cost of more than $30,000,000, have very small fighting value, and the increment through new battleships is extraordinarily small.

Only the battleships Aki and Satsuma, completed with almost record-breaking slowness of construction in five years, can be considered modern ships, though they carry only four 12-inch guns instead of the usual Dreadnought armament, and it is extremely doubtful whether Japan's first two ships of the Dreadnought class, the Setsu and the Kawachi, will be finished in time to join the fleet this year.

A first-class battleship cruiser is under construction in England, another has recently been started in Japan. These, with small cruisers, destroyers, and submarines, represent the total increase since the war with Russia.

Further on Mr. GREGG quotes Admiral Lord Charles Beresford as saying:

The public were and are hypnotized by the Dreadnought policy. The excessive and vulgar advertisements lavished upon this experimental vessel were by no means justified. To the building of these great ships has been sacrificed every other naval requirement. Without an adequate provision of these essentials—the battle fleet is useless for fighting purposes, and the money spent on it is a present to the future enemy.

The following is an extract from the hearings on the investigation of the United States Steel Corporation, on page 3958, taken from a letter written by Mr. Edward Forrester, first vice president, to Mr. H. P. Bope, first vice president of the Carnegie Steel Co., in the minutes of general managers of sales:

It has therefore occurred to me, as I stated at recent meetings, that if the newspapers throughout the country could be brought into a more familiar knowledge of the facts publications regarding the corporation throughout the United States would be uniformly favorable. The only way that has occurred to me by which this could be accomplished is by establishing a general advertising bureau representing all the constituent companies—not a majority or one or two, but all. I believe if such a bureau was established and the head of the bureau was fully advised as to the wishes of the corporation that they could so spread their favors either by money paid for advertising or by news items furnished upon which the public could rely that the result aimed at would surely be attained. It seems to me the money now being expended for advertising by the various companies forms a fund large enough so that if handled with the single idea of getting the best results—not in simply selling goods or bringing before actual buyers the knowledge of our goods, which we can accomplish in other ways, but by disseminating proper knowledge of the corporation and its methods—would be ample; but even should it be necessary to largely increase the expense in order that the general reading public might view us in the same light as those who read the favored papers used by the corporation and those who come in contact with our managers of sales, the additional expense, it seems to me, would be fully justified.

Another extract from the minutes of general managers of sales shows that an inquiry by the president developed that approximately $140,000 per year is being expended by the various companies in direct advertising.

This without doubt is a resourceful publicity bureau, as it is admitted in the hearings of the steel committee that the policy of the steel corporation was to use this money to secure favorable news items in the publications of the country. No experienced man doubts that the great business corporations of the country exercise great influence over the daily newspapers and other publications. It is known that they have threatened to withdraw their advertisements, which meant thousands and tens of thousands of dollars to the newspapers, unless news articles were published in accordance with the views of the managers of the watered-stock corporations.

If this does not convince the gentleman that the publicity bureaus are not working diligently for their profit-seeking managers, he is not open for conviction.

Mr. Speaker, I say that increasing the amount of the expenditure for the Navy is going to bring this country to a condition such as they are having in European countries at the present time—that is, they are going to take money away by high taxation from the wage earners of this country and deprive them and their families of an equitable living. I think this report should be defeated, first, because they have authorized an additional battleship and, second, because we have put in here a provision of $250,000 for the Powder Trust, which is now or has been under prosecution. They probably have whitewashed it by this time, but we all know it is an illegal or criminal trust. I therefore hope this will be defeated.

I believe in an adequate Navy, but I do not believe that a Navy composed of battleships without officers or men and without the necessary auxiliaries is either adequate or efficient.

I favor correcting the folly of the past in which everything has been subordinated to the battleship and in adopting a rational, sensible course of suspending temporarily their construction, so that we can, without unduly burdening the people and without creating a deficiency in the Treasury, provide officers and men and auxiliaries sufficient to make every battleship a fully equipped fighting unit.

In his speech delivered May 23, 1912, on this question, Hon. A. W. GREGG, of Texas, says:

Those who claim to be overwise on naval needs say we should construct 2 battleships a year. Why 2 rather than 1? Why 2 rather than 10? Two may be a program, but not a policy. They say we should have a Navy large enough to insure our peace.

If by insuring peace they mean, and that is what they mean, that we should have a Navy so large that other nations will not dare attack us, then 10 is more logical than 2, for the sooner we obtain an intimidating Navy the better, if we are to rely solely upon the Navy. Our critics do not tell us what policy we should adopt as to the size of our Navy compared with those of other countries in order to be able to insure our peace by means of the Navy.

They preach and preach, but when their sermons are finished they have not told us what we must do to be saved.

The trouble heretofore has been that we have had no fixed naval policy, by which I mean that we have not decided what should be the relative size of our Navy to that of the other nations of the world.

If we should decide that it should be the largest in the world—however wild the idea may be—we would have an ultimate object in view and could gradually work up to it and do it systematically. If we decide that it should be next in size to that of England, then with that definite purpose in view we could work up to it.

The political party which believes we should burden the people with a Navy so large that it will intimidate other nations, and which believes in "securing our peace" by means of a Navy rather than by treaties, arbitration, and diplomatic negotiations, should have the courage to say so in its platform and take the responsibility before the people, who will have to bear the burden.

There are but two rational policies. If we are to look at it from an aggressive and world-power view—that is, if we are ready to say that it is our purpose to dominate the seas of the world and to intermeddle in all international affairs, and we are ready to seek, instead of avoiding, entangling alliances—then the proper policy to adopt is to construct a Navy larger than that of any other nation. That is what our critics want to do.

If, on the other hand, we want to give some assurance of sincerity in our professions that we prefer law, arbitration, and diplomacy to gunpowder and dynamite as a means of adjusting international differences; if we prefer by example to teach and induce other nations to call a halt in the construction of these floating monsters, rather than encourage them in it; if we would rather be the leaders in peace than in war; if we prefer the hum of industry to the rattle of musketry and thunder of cannons, then our policy should be the one we have followed so long, without danger to our national defense, and the one laid down in the last Democratic national platform, which declares:

"We believe that the interest of this country would be best served by having a Navy sufficient to defend the coasts of this country and protect American citizens wherever their rights may be in jeopardy."

This means a defensive and not an aggressive Navy. We should amply protect our coasts and harbors with comparatively inexpensive submarines and shore batteries, and have enough large fighting ships to "protect American citizens wherever their rights may be jeopardized," as we have so often done in cases of internal uprisings and disturbances in China and other nations.

Mr. Chairman, I know that the Constitution and Washington and Jefferson, like the battleship after a few years' use, are considered obsolete, but I like occasionally to recur to them like the old-time Christian, who is bewildered and confused by the new theologies of the day, loves to return to his Bible and get new courage for the battle of life and have renewed his hopes for the future. [Applause.]

So I will quote from Thomas Jefferson in regard to the first policy. He said:

"Wars must sometimes be our lot, and all the wise can do will be to avoid that half of them which would be produced by our own follies and our own acts of injustice, and to make for the other half the best preparations we can. Of what nature should these be? A land army would be useless for offense and not the best nor safest instrument of defense. For either of these purposes the sea is the field on which we should meet an European enemy. On that element it is necessary we should possess some power. To aim at such a navy as the greater nations of Europe possess would be a foolish and wicked waste of the energies of our countrymen. It would be to pull on our own heads that load of military expense which makes the European laborer go supperless to bed and moistens his bread with the sweat of his brow."

If to secure our peace it is necessary to adopt a policy of building such a Navy as the greater nations of Europe possess, and thereby "foolishly and wickedly waste the energies of our countrymen and pull on our own heads the load of military expense which makes the European laborer go supperless to bed," the people should be put on notice that such is our intention, and should be fully informed as to the ever-increasing burden they are expected to bear.

The cry "In time of peace prepare for war" may be a catchy slogan, but in its ultimate analysis it means that all nations at all times should be in a state of preparedness for war, which further means a mad rush to insolvency for every nation of the earth. [Applause.]

The appeal is made to the pride and martial spirit of our people in support of an aggressive Navy; but the appeal is never accompanied with a statement showing the enormous increase of expenses, nor with the suggestion that all this money is extracted by taxation from the pockets of the people.

To show how, even under our moderate program, these expenses have increased, I cite that such expenses have been as follows:

In 1880	$13,536,985
In 1900	55,953,078
In 1910	123,173,717
In 1911	126,478,338

If this money was raised by direct taxation, whereby every taxpayer would know just how much he was contributing to the payment of this gradually and immensely increasing expense, you would not find as many Navy jingoes on the floor of this House as you now find.

I am certain that I am serving my constituents and the country better by endeavoring to call a halt upon the insane notion that this Nation must produce battleships as a hen lays eggs—so many so often. This battleship craze, so far as it has any place in public opinion anywhere, is prompted and promoted by battleship builders. Take away contractors' profits and the profits of financiers in connection with the annual output of battleships and there would soon be little demand for them, either in this country or any other.

If the effort that is now being made by the battleship "jingoes" to have the Government make large and unnecessary expenditures for battleships were made in behalf of peace; if our great and able editorial writers were left to write as their conscience dictated and would advocate peace among the nations it would not be long before we could materially reduce the expenditures for battleships and other preparations for war; but they preach the doctrine of force instead of the doctrine of arbitration and peace. They would encourage and stimulate the mad rush of nations to greater military power and greater destruction of humankind and lay heavier burdens on the backs of the people, while, on the other hand, we, in the language of the Prophet Joel, would welcome the day when nations "shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks," when nation shall not lift up sword against nation, and neither shall they learn war any more.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, as a consistent friend of the Navy, and an adequate Navy, I shall vote to adopt the report of the conferees on the naval appropriation bill. [Applause.] Not that I am altogether satisfied with it, far from it, but because it is the best, in my judgment, that the friends of the Navy can get this year.

I believe in the policy of the Government to maintain the efficiency of the Navy. To carry out consistently that policy it is necessary that we build every year at least two modern, up-to-date battleships. To do otherwise would fall far short of maintaining an adequate Navy. There never was a time in the history of our country when an effective Navy was more essential to its territorial integrity, to its supremacy on the Western Hemisphere, and to the protection of its citizens at home and abroad. And when I say that, I speak from accurate knowledge and I speak advisedly. [Applause.]

The American people take a just pride in their Navy. They have every reason to feel proud of it. It is a bulwark of national defense, a mighty engine of offense, and national insurance for peace—and I am for peace here and everywhere. Every dollar spent on the Navy is just so much money expended to maintain peace.

There should be no retrogression in our naval program or in promoting the efficiency of the naval arm of the Government. The Navy is nonpartisan, and every true American, no matter what his opinion may be regarding economy in other things, should be opposed to reducing in any way the strength of the Navy. We must take no step backward in our naval policy. To do so is penny wise and pound foolish. I have never voted to cripple the American Navy, and I never will. I believe in patriotism more than I do in partisanship, especially when it comes to maintaining the national defense.

The friends of the Navy are to be congratulated on the final outcome of this battleship fight. We have won one new battleship. Patriotic America will never submit to a reversal of our naval policy. The American Navy is growing, and I want to see it continue to grow until we have as efficient and as effective a Navy as any first-class power in the world. That is real democracy, and more—it is true patriotism. [Applause.]

The maintenance of an adequate Navy should not be made a party matter. No party should ever caucus on the question of maintaining our Navy. The national defense should not be dragged into partisan politics. In the future, as in the past, I shall always do all I can to maintain an adequate Navy. Any other policy is un-American, unpatriotic, undemocratic, and contrary to the best interests of all the people of our country.

In my opinion I do not believe that there is a patriotic man in the United States who understands our national position, who grasps our international policy, who comprehends the essential necessity of protecting the Panama Canal, of enforcing the Monroe doctrine, and of maintaining the rights of our citizens at home and abroad, who is opposed to keeping up the Navy to its maximum efficiency and continuing the naval policy which the Government has adopted, to build every year at least two battleships.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; for a question. I only have a minute left.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman has made that statement and talked about a "naval program." I have always been in favor of a good-sized Navy, and have so voted and have always been here to vote; but——

Mr. SULZER. I know that, and I compliment the gentleman for it——

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to have the gentleman point out to me when and where there has been anything that could be dignified by the name of "naval program." I know that one year the Secretary of the Navy recommended four battleships to enable us to keep our relative place in the list of naval powers, and another year one battleship, and another year two battleships, and so on. If there is anything that is more shifting than our naval program, unless it be the personnel of its head, I would like to know it. We change our Secretaries of the Navy very frequently, and we change our plans more frequently, and it is a piece of folly to talk about a "naval program" when there has never been anything approaching a program for the Navy since I have been a Member of the House.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I differ with the gentleman, but I have not time now to go into the subject of the gentleman's criticisms of the Navy or of the Navy Department——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, just a word more. The gentleman from Kentucky has used up some of my time. However, I am satisfied we have won a good fight for the Navy, and that means much to the friends of our national defense, much to the real friends of peace, and much to the friends of patriotic America.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am glad for many reasons that this controversy over the naval appropriation bill has been brought to a close. It has been marked by misrepresentation, by vulgar self-advertising, and by political exploitation in the newspapers, and also, I regret to say, by deliberate falsification about the attitude of Members of this House who have taken the same position with reference to this bill that I have. It has been charged by Members of this House that those of us who are not in favor of building two battleships are lacking in true Americanism and in patriotic devotion to our country. Well, Mr. Chairman, when, in the name of God, did these critics get to be judges of true Americanism and true patriotism? Personally I repudiate their right to pass upon my Americanism and my patriotism, and I deny their capacity to comprehend it. [Applause.]

Furthermore, it has been alleged, it has been repeatedly alleged, in the newspapers that our position was due to the fact that we were inspired by a desire to get a public-buildings "pork barrel" into the House. That is as false, so far as I am concerned, and I believe so far as the majority of the Members of this House are concerned, as any of the other many false statements that have been made in connection with this campaign for two battleships. [Applause.] I have never had the slightest desire to deny—and I do not mind saying it in perfect frankness—that for political reasons, if for no other, I was absolutely opposed to any omnibus public-building bill this year, and I believe that was the opinion of the overwhelming majority of the majority Members of the House.

The charge that we were influenced in this fight by any such reason as that is as false as any falsehood could be and many of the people who made that statement knew they were telling what was not true when they made it. And yet it seems to have served their purpose, and the fact that it was notoriously false did not deter them from the repetition of those slanderous misstatements.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] speaks about the Navy protecting the Panama Canal. If I am not vastly mistaken, some of the arguments for the construction of the canal were that it would enable us to get along with a smaller number of ships and would make our Navy more efficient by enabling us to quickly transfer such vessels as we have, or such portion of them as it might be desirable to send that way, through the canal from ocean to ocean. By doing so an Atlantic fleet to-day may become a Pacific fleet to-morrow.

The canal is to be defended—and in my judgment this is altogether an unnecessary procedure—by coast-defense batteries now being placed there under the direction of the War Department.

Mr. Speaker, so many lies have been published in connection with this thing that I do not know how much truth there may be in the statement of the newspapers that, having been unable to carry out their first threats of compelling the House to build two battleships, they propose now to have the biggest and the most expensive and the fastest battleship and the one with the greatest radius that was ever built; but I do want to say, sir, that if the House conferees have consented to any such program as that, they are, in my judgment, properly subject to the harsh criticism of the House, because they are not reflecting the wishes of the people who sent them to represent us in the conference with the Senate.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes; if the gentleman will be quick about it. I have only a moment.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It is proposed to build a monster of a battleship. Does not the gentleman think that in the sudden turning of such a monster battleship in the ocean there would be danger of a tidal wave on two continents?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will say to the gentleman that I think the number of accidents that have lately befallen our battleships, the number of times that they find uncharted shoals, and the number of times that they have collisions, suggest that we ought not to put so many eggs into one basket. But, I was saying that if the conferees have provided for any such monster as is suggested by the remark of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT]—I am happy to say the chairman of the committee says it is not true—then the conferees have not represented the spirit and the wishes of the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to elaborate the remarks I made the other day, but I want to call the attention of Members, especially on this side, to the fact that there is no resolution of the Democratic caucus which binds any man to vote for any battleship. He is left absolutely free upon that question to vote against any battleship if he desires to do so. I think the fact that the conference committee has gone out and agreed to an increase in the appropriation of $250,000 for powder ought to merit the disapproval of every Member, whether he is a battleship man or a no-battleship man; and as indicated by the Speaker, the only way to arrive at that is to vote down the conference report and send it back to conference; and I hope that not only Democrats but Republicans will vote down the report of the conferees in order that the bill may go back to conference and be there corrected.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] seems to imagine that he has the concentrated wisdom of this House—and I have no doubt but that I might prove by him that he has that concentrated wisdom—when he says every man who is well informed as to the necessities of the canal, as to maintaining the Monroe doctrine and all these other things, is in favor of two battleships. Yet a Democratic caucus by more than a two-thirds vote said that no such thing as that should be. The gentleman assumes more wisdom than all the caucus. He and a few others who have always desired to be free-lances on this question, regardless of caucus action, seem to think that that two-thirds had no knowledge of the Monroe doctrine and the needs of the canal, and I have no doubt that the gentleman has learned much about these things since he has been the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and possibly he has learned it all. I do not suppose he will ever learn anything hereafter; but those of us who have not been so fortunate hope that hereafter, perhaps, we may, under the tutelage of the distinguished gentleman, learn something of the necessity of battleships or no battleships, and for the maintenance of the canal.

One of the arguments for the canal was that it would reduce the number of battleships. We well remember how the Oregon had to go around the Horn in order to get to the Pacific side. When the canal is completed we can go through with our entire fleet and meet the terrible Japs that the gentleman and some other gentlemen on this floor seem to think are a constant menace. They have had us here with our hair standing on end, almost ready to grab our muskets and take to the bushes, fleeing from the Japs who were at our heels. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take occasion to reiterate my frequently expressed opinion that God's great Christian nations are eternally loaded down with immense, unreasonable, unjustifiable expenditures in preparations for war. It has been said that over 70 per cent of the expenditures of this Government are incurred and have been incurred either in actual conduct of war or the preparations for war or taking care of the consequences of wars that are past.

Such a record, if it be true—and I think it unquestionably is—is a shame and disgrace to a Christian people. The fact is that struggling humanity from the dawn of civilization has labored under burdens almost too heavy to bear and always unjustifiable by reason of great wars that in the past have devastated all lands and burdened hard all people.

It would seem that as civilization advanced expenditures for wars ought to have decreased, but somehow it seems that notwithstanding the days of great invasions have gone; that no longer an Alexander invades the East or a Tamerlane invades the West; that great armies no longer build pyramids from skulls of their victims, as the army of Attila did in the past, the burdens of expenditures mount higher and higher into pyramids that rest on the shoulders of the people with eternal and increasing and ceaseless burden. [Applause.]

And how is it that this House, through all its sessions since I have been a Member, have been subjected to the process of browbeating and of newspaper criticism, as was suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, every time and every session when we must pass on the question of battleships?

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. I would like to ask the gentleman, with his permission, if we, the real, honest patriots who oppose this foolish eternal jingoism about battleships wish to express our opposition to the further foolish policy of increasing the Navy at this time can we do so by voting "no" on this conference report?

Mr. HARDY. I think so; and that is what I intend to do. This is not the first time the publicity bureau or some other bureau has attempted to browbeat this House in behalf of shipbuilding or battleship interests. When the question of ship subsidy was before the House a year or so ago a certain publication was libeling and denouncing Members because they were opposed to a ship subsidy. Now we have a publicity bureau attacking the integrity or patriotism of the Democratic caucus and the sincerity of Democratic Members because we oppose at this time the building of additional battleships.

Mr. BATHRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. I have only a minute.

Mr. BATHRICK. I would like to ask the gentleman to be specific and state what this publication is. I have seen no evidence of it undertaking to browbeat anybody.

Mr. HARDY. I am willing that the gentleman should content himself with the fact that he has not seen any evidence of it, but every newspaper in the city of Washington has been denunciatory of the Democratic Party and the Democratic caucus ever since we took action with reference to the battleships, and said that they were going to compel us to take two battleships. Now that some of us have yielded, in part, to their demands, they denounce us still.

Mr. BATHRICK. Does the gentleman think that we would do anything that we did not want to do because the newspapers of Washington were denouncing us?

Mr. HARDY. I think the newspapers have compelled the Democratic caucus to take backwater.

Mr. BATHRICK. They have had no influence on me.

Mr. HARDY. Well, they have not on me, and yet I have conceded and yielded out of consideration for those who could not stand up against this newspaper and shipbuilders' propaganda and war scare.

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman will pardon me, I want to say that one of my colleagues just stated that when the question was up a few weeks ago a New York newspaper man came to him and wanted an interview, and this Member said, "I am opposed to battleships," and the newspaper man then said, "You are not the one we are after; we want those who are favorable to battleships."

Mr. HARDY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to conclude by saying that we are the greatest Christian Nation on earth, and we ought to set a good example of the peaceful purposes and policies that the United States has to-day. An unarmed giant, she can walk the paths of peace and set an example to the nations of the world if she will. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to two or three items in this bill, and the first one is an item to show how easy it is to put it over the House and the Senate. I do not think that was the intention in this case. There was an item in this bill as it passed the House providing for repairs to buildings at Helena, $25,000, and by the insertion of a comma and the striking out of the word "to" it provides "repairs, buildings" at Helena, under which they might commence buildings that would cost $25,000,000. I do not suppose that that will be done in this case, but in an item which goes through the House not subject to a point of order providing for repairs to buildings I doubt very much whether the conferees ought to agree to a proposition entirely changing the purpose of the item authorizing the construction of new buildings.

We have heard a great deal lately with reference to legislation on appropriatioin bills. There have been a good many criticisms at the other end of the Capitol and at the other end of the Avenue and even in this Chamber concerning legislation upon appropriation bills. I was very much surprised that the distinguished body at the other end of the Capitol should have inserted amendment 55 in this bill, which proposes a new plan entirely relating to the Nautical Almanac and the publication of the American Ephemeris, which repealed provisions of the Revised Statutes, and which does a number of other things concerning which not a word has ever before been uttered in the House, which is pure legislation, agreed to in toto in conference by the House conferees.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact also that this item was incorporated by the Senate after the department had submitted it in connection with the legislative appropriation bill, where it would probably belong, and after a very exhaustive investigation rejected by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am much obliged to the gentleman. I was about myself to call attention to the fact that this item does not belong in the bill under any conditions, because this Committee on Naval Affairs does not have jurisdiction over the question at all so far as any appropriation is concerned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And it proposes to dispose of clerks provided for in the legislative bill.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing, Mr. Speaker, to admit that so far as I am concerned I am opposed to legislation on appropriation bills, unless it is a piece of legislation that I am desirous of having enacted. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the position of everybody who is opposed to legislation on appropriation bills, even the President of the United States, because he has urged himself legislation upon appropriation bills.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we have been entertained in a small degree, but not to the limit that I had hoped, this morning by the Democratic side of the House upon the battleship proposition, and although I heard one gentleman use the term "false" nearly 40 times in the course of a speech, he received no rise from it. For an entire session of Congress we have been told repeatedly that the Democratic Members of the House would permit no new battleships to be provided for, and the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] fulminated for a while in the press every day with a long interview credited to him, telling how we were going to skin the Democratic side and rise superior to partisanship and provide the two battleships. And other gentlemen on the Democratic side were insisting that if we had no public buildings then we should have no battleships; that if we should use money for battleships, we must use money for public buildings. Then also we were told that in the end they might agree to one new battleship, which would be more powerful and destructive than any ship yet proposed in the world. But when we come to brass tacks we provide for one new battleship of the same old type at the same old cost. Those who insisted that they would never yield short of two battleships, those who insisted that they would never yield to any battleship, those who insisted that if they had any battleship it should be more powerful than any yet constructed, all smilingly take their medicine, and the public-building bill remains to be divided up at the next session after the election.

But I notice that while we do not get two new battleships, yet the lobby which has been around Congress for many years in reference to the submarine torpedo boats will not go away disappointed this year. The House provided for four submarine torpedo boats, to cost $2,240,000. The Senate doubled the amount and made it eight, to cost $4,480,000; and without a word of discussion in the House, without the expression of a syllable of language, the torpedo submarine lobby gets away with the eight torpedo boats, much to my surprise. Many times these propositions have come to us before, but I think this is the first time that the House has agreed to the highest number of these submarines asked for. And they are to be located, four at the mouth of the Mississippi River, four for the Pacific coast, not because they are needed at those points, but because having them at those points will add to the influence of the submarine lobby next year and in years hereafter.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CURLEY). How much time?

Mr. MANN. Such time as he may desire.

[Mr. CANNON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on my motion to adopt the conference report.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I made the point of order that no quorum was present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count, anyway, to ascertain whether there is a quorum present. [After counting.] Eighty-seven members are present, evidently not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will kindly state it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I could not hear the statement of the Chair. Is this vote being taken on the adoption of the report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the adoption of the report. Those in favor of adopting the conference report will, as their names are called, answer "aye," those opposed will answer "no," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 150, nays 51, answered "present" 13, not voting 177, as follows:

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. HARDWICK, recorded?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I voted "aye." I have a general pair with him, and therefore I desire to withdraw that vote and vote "present."

The SPEAKER. The conference report is adopted. Further proceedings under the call are dispensed with, and the Doorkeeper will open the doors.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, having lost out on time in debate, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a similar request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FINLEY. I make the same request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FUR-SEAL CONVENTION.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill to carry into effect the fur-seal convention, and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

An act (H. R. 16571) to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the North Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington, July 7, 1911.

Mr. SULZER. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the conference report and accompanying statement be read. The statement is very short.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report and statement.

The conference report and statement were read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1216).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16571) to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the north Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington, July 7, 1911, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"SEC. 11. That from and after the approval of this act all killing of fur seals on the Pribilof Islands, or anywhere within the jurisdiction of the United States in Alaska, shall be suspended for a period of five years, and shall be, and is hereby, declared to be unlawful; and all punishments and penalties heretofore enacted for the illegal killing of fur seals shall be applicable and inflicted upon offenders under this section: Provided, That this prohibition shall not apply to the annual killing on the Pribilof Islands of such male seals as are needed to supply food, clothing, and boat skins for the natives on the islands, as is provided for in article 11 of said convention; the skins of all seals so used for food shall be preserved and annually sold by the Government, and proceeds of such annual sales shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States: Provided further, That at the expiration of the said five years' suspension of all commercial killing as above provided, said killing may be resumed under authority of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor: Provided, however, That the number of 3-year-old males selected from among the finest and most perfect seals of that age found on the hauling grounds, to be reserved for breeding purposes, in each year ending August 1, shall not be fewer than the following: In 1917, and in each year thereafter until 1926, inclusive, 5,000. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor, or his authorized agents, shall have authority to receive on behalf of the United States any and all fur-seal skins taken as provided in the thirteenth and fourteenth articles of said convention and tendered for delivery by the Governments of Japan and Great Britain in accordance with the terms of said articles; and all skins which are or shall become the property of the United States from any source whatsoever shall be sold by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in such market, at such times, and in such manner as he may deem most advantageous; and the proceeds of such sale or sales shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall likewise have authority to deliver to the authorized agents of the Canadian Government and the Japanese Government the skins to which they are entitled under the provisions of the tenth article of said convention; to pay to Great Britain and Japan such sums as they are entitled to receive, respectively, under the provisions of the eleventh article of said convention; to retain such skins as the United States may be entitled to retain under the provisions of the eleventh article of said convention; and to do or perform, or cause to be done or performed, any and every act which the United States is authorized or obliged to do or perform by the provisions of the tenth, eleventh, thirteenth, and fourteenth articles of said convention; and to enable the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to carry out the provisions of the said eleventh article there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400,000."

WM. SULZER,
H. D. FLOOD,
WM. B. MCKINLEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. C. LODGE,
WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
BENJ. F. SHIVELY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on H. R. 16571, to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the north Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington, July 7, 1911, submit the following statement:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Section 11, page 10, line 10, strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "five."

Section 11, page 10, line 22, strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "five."

Section 11, page 11, in lines 4 and 5, after the word "following," strike out "In 1922" and insert "In 1917."

This is a compromise between the opposing views of the two Houses. There was only one point in difference between the two Houses, the length of the closed season, and the conferees agreed upon a closed season substantially of five years. The compromise was absolutely necessary, because it was essential that the bill should pass at this session, as a failure to pass it would probably lead to the loss of the treaties by which pelagic sealing has been stopped, a consummation, in view of all the circumstances, that would be deplorable.

WM. SULZER,
HENRY D. FLOOD,
WILLIAM B. MCKINLEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SULZER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWLAND. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. COOPER. I make the same request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. KAHN. And, Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. All these gentlemen ask unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FUR-SEAL CONVENTION (H. DOC. NO. 916).

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENDALL], a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, may have leave to print in the RECORD, as a part of his remarks, the fur-seal treaty and also the bill carrying it into effect as finally passed.

Mr. KENDALL. Yes; and the bill as it finally passed.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENDALL] may print in the RECORD, as a part of the fur-seal discussion, the treaty and the bill as it finally passed.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be better, instead of printing it in the RECORD, to print it as a House document?

Mr. KENDALL. That would be better. I accept that suggestion, to print the treaty and the bill as a separate document.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY, TERRITORY OF ALASKA.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on House bill 38, to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes, and ask that the statement be read instead of the conference report, and that the conference report be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1212).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 38) to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, 6, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 41, 42, 43, 46, 47, 49, 50, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 59, 60, 62, and 63.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 44, 45, 48, 51, 52, 58, 61, 64, 65, 66, 67, 69, and 70, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3; and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After "thereof," in line 8 of the proposed amendment, insert: "Provided further, That this provision shall not operate to prevent the legislature from imposing other and additional taxes or licenses"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language in the bill and the proposed amendments strike out all after "years," page 18, line 3, of the bill, down to and including "election," line 2, page 4, of the bill, and insert: "And each representative shall possess the same qualifications as are prescribed for members of the senate and the persons receiving the highest number of legal votes in each judicial division cast in said election for senator or representative shall be deemed and declared elected to such office: Provided, That in the event of a tie vote the candidates thus affected shall settle the question by lot. In case of a vacancy in either branch of the legislature the governor shall order an election to fill such vacancy, giving due and proper notice thereof"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed to be stricken out insert "of the legislature"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed to the stricken out insert "the legislature is"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 68: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "thereof," in line 12 of the proposed amendment, down to and including "and," in line 15; and the Senate agree to the same.

H. D. FLOOD,

The statement was read, as follows:

STATEMENT.

Amendments Nos. 4, 5, 6, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 41, 42, 43, 46, 47, 49, 50, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 59, 60, 62, and 63, on all of which the Senate recedes, relate to the general amendment proposed by the Senate striking out the upper house of the Alaska Legislature. The bill as passed by the House provided a legislative body of two houses, the upper house, or senate, to consist of 8 members and the lower house to consist of 16 members. The Senate amended the bill by striking out the upper house, and all the above amendments were made by the Senate to make the bill conform to that. The Senate has receded and the bill is left in that respect as it was originally passed by this House.

Amendment No. 1, made by the Senate, provides that the Alaska Legislature shall have no authority to alter, amend, modify, or repeal the laws in force in Alaska in relation to fur-seal laws passed by Congress. The conferees receded from the disagreement of the House on this amendment and agreed to the same.

Amendment No. 2 reserves to Congress exclusive authority to pass laws relating to fur-bearing animals in Alaska. The conferees receded from the House disagreement to this Senate amendment and agreed thereto.

Amendment No. 18 strikes out the words "and no more," as mere surplusage, on page 4, line 8, in section 4 of the bill, in the sentence providing for mileage to be paid to members of the legislature. The conferees receded from the House disagreement to this Senate amendment and agreed thereto.

Amendment No. 19 requires the governor in calling an extraordinary session of the legislature to set forth the object and give at least 30 days' written notice to each member of the legislature of the meeting. The conferees receded from the House disagreement to this Senate amendment and agreed thereto.

Amendments No. 20 and No. 21 reduce the length of the extraordinary session of the Alaska Legislature, when called by the governor, from 30 to 15 days. The conferees receded from the House disagreement to this Senate amendment and agreed thereto.

Amendment No. 22 relates to the power of the governor to call an extraordinary session of the Alaska Legislature, and limits his power to those cases "when requested to do so by the President of the United States, or when any grave public danger or necessity may require it"; the Senate amendment strikes out the word "grave"; the conferees receded from the House disagreement to this Senate amendment and agreed thereto.

Amendment No. 29 corrects the title of the legislature by striking out "legislative assembly" and inserting "legislature"; the conferees receded from the House disagreement to this Senate amendment and agreed thereto.

Amendment No. 30 is a recast of a sentence prohibiting the legislature from intermixing several unrelated matters in one act, and expressing the same idea more concisely and in fewer words; the conferees receded from the House disagreement to this Senate amendment and agreed thereto.

Amendments Nos. 31, 32, 33, and 34 affect only verbiage and correct the style and grammar, without materially changing the meaning of the House bill; the conferees receded from the House disagreement to these Senate amendments and agreed thereto.

Amendment No. 35 limits the authority of the Legislature of Alaska to the creation of corporations or associations whose chief business shall be in the Territory of Alaska. The conferees receded from the House disagreement to this Senate amendment and agreed thereto.

Amendments Nos. 36, 37, and 38 make verbal changes in the proviso which requires "That all authorized indebtedness shall be paid in the order of its creation." The conferees receded from the House disagreement to these Senate amendments and agreed thereto.

Amendments Nos. 39, 40, 44, 45, 48, 51, 52, 64, 65, and 66 merely correct clerical mistakes and verbal surplusage. The conferees receded from the House disagreement to these Senate amendments and agreed thereto.

Amendment No. 58 requires that when a bill has been passed by either house of the Alaska Legislature it shall be enrolled before being sent to the other house. The conferees receded from the House disagreement to this Senate amendment and agreed thereto.

Amendment No. 61 provides that no law passed by the Legislature of Alaska shall be in force until "at the expiration of 90 days thereafter, unless sooner given effect by a two-thirds vote of said legislature." The conferees receded from the House disagreement to this Senate amendment and agreed thereto.

Amendment No. 67 is a new section changing the date of the election for Delegate to Congress from Alaska from the month of August so that it shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, in 1914, and every two years thereafter, so that the Delegate election and that for members of the legislature may then and thereafter be held at the same time under the same law passed by Congress. The conferees receded from the House disagreement to this Senate amendment and agreed thereto.

Amendment No. 69 gives the Committees on Territories in the Senate and House authority to jointly codify, compile, publish, and annotate all the laws of the United States applicable to Alaska, to employ assistance for that purpose, and appropriates $5,000 to pay therefor. The conferees receded from the House disagreement to this Senate amendment and agreed thereto.

Amendment No. 70 merely corrects the numbering of sections in the bill. The conferees receded from the House disagreement to this Senate amendment and agreed thereto.

Amendment No. 3 is a prohibition against the Legislature of Alaska from repealing those laws passed by Congress providing for taxes on business and trade in Alaska which go to make up the "Alaska fund" in the United States Treasury, and which fund is expended in Alaska for roads, bridges, and trails, the care of insane, and the support of schools. The conferees receded from the House disagreement to this Senate amendment and agreed to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "thereof," in line 8 of the proposed amendment, insert:

Provided further, That this provision shall not operate to prevent the legislature from imposing other and additional taxes or licenses.

Amendments Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 all relate to the general subject of striking out the upper house of the Alaska Legislature, the practice in case of a tie vote, and election to fill a vacancy. The upper house having been restored in conference, the conferees receded from the House disagreement to these amendments and agreed to the same with amendments fitting them to the double-chamber plan.

Amendments Nos. 16 and 17 change the words "legislative assembly" to "legislature," to conform to the general rule. The conferees receded from the House disagreement to these Senate amendments and agreed thereto.

Amendment No. 68 is a new section creating a railroad commission, to be appointed by the President, to examine into and report to Congress on railroad routes in Alaska, and making an appropriation of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the expenses of said commission. The conferees receded from the House disagreement to this Senate amendment. and agreed thereto with an amendment striking out the clause requiring a report on "the best system of constructing and operating railroads and coal mines in said Territory for the use of the Government in naval and military operations."

H. D. FLOOD,
W. C. HOUSTON,
W. W. WEDEMEYER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the report be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I notice that as to the amendment No. 68 the conferees have stricken out a portion of the amendment and left in a portion which I understood was to be stricken out. It sounds harmless, but I would like to know what it means.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asking me a question?

Mr. MANN. I am getting ready to.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I can not hear it.

Mr. MANN. That amendment provides for the appointment of a commission, and, with the amendment agreed to in conference, would now provide for a commission "to make a report to Congress on or before the 1st day of December next, or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, together with their conclusions and recommendations with respect to the best and most available routes for railroads in Alaska, which will develop the country and the resources thereof for the use of the people of the United States." The language of the Senate amendment was—

Which will develop the country and the resources thereof, and the best system of constructing and operating railroads and coal mines in said Territory for the use of the Government in naval and military operations, and for use of the people of the United States.

The gentleman knows that I objected to that provision in the bill, because I objected to a commission to consist of one Army engineer, one naval engineer, one geologist, and one railroad builder, to endeavor to determine or recommend to Congress what it should determine as to the policy that the Government should pursue concerning the operation and construction of railroads or other resources in Alaska.

I understood that provision was to go out in conference. I see a part of it goes out in conference, and yet the commission is required to report upon the best routes for railroads in Alaska, which will develop the country and the resources thereof for the use of the people of the United States.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that the change was made upon the insistence of the House conferees, and they insisted upon that change in deference to the views of the gentleman from Illinois. I thought we were carrying out the views expressed by him. The objection he had to the Senate amendment was that it authorized the commission to make inquiry in reference to coal lands in Alaska.

Mr. MANN. To the extent that the language was stricken out I plead guilty, and I do not hesitate to say that I said to the gentleman from Virginia and other gentlemen that if they wanted to send this bill to conference with that language to remain in it, it would have to be done under the rules of the House.

What I wish to inquire now is why all of the language which was to be stricken out was not stricken out? Was it a misunderstanding as to what should be stricken out, or was this latter language left in for some special reason?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. If the language that was objectionable to the gentleman from Illinois was not stricken out in conference it was due to a mistake.

Mr. MANN. I have no desire to complain. I know how these things happen. I wondered whether it was that, or whether other reasons were given for keeping this language in. If they were given, I wanted to know what they were.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Not at all. I wanted to conform to the suggestions made by the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I will not complain.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, there is one very important matter in connection with this bill which we have just passed. There are three mistakes, evidently clerical errors, which were committed in the Senate in reference to changes that are made in certain lines, giving the lines wrong. With the assistance of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] I have drawn a concurrent resolution so that they can be corrected. I ask that it be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 62.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Enrolling Clerk of the House, in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 38) entitled "An act to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes," be directed to regard the matter furnished in the conference report to be inserted in lieu of amendments Nos. 7 to 15, inclusive, as following the word "years," on page 3, line 18; and that the matter proposed to be stricken from amendment No. 68, as set forth in said conference report, be designated: "All after the word 'thereof,' in line 21 of the proposed amendment, down to and including 'and' in line 24."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—WILEY AGAINST HUGHES OF WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution from the Committee on Elections No. 1 which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland presents a privileged report from the Committee on Elections No. 1. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 703 (H. Rept. 1229).

Resolved, That James A. Hughes was elected a Representative in the Sixty-second Congress from the fifth district of West Virgina, and is entitled to a seat therein.

The SPEAKER. Is this a unanimous report?

Mr. COVINGTON. It is.

The resolution was agreed to.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—WISE AGAINST CRAGO.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Elections No. 1.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio presents a privileged report from Committee on Elections No. 1. It will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 704 (H. Rept. 1230).

Resolved, That House resolution No. 318, to-wit:

"Resolved, That Jesse H. Wise, contesting the right of the Hon. Thomas S. Crago to a seat in this House as a Representative from the twenty-third district of Pennsylvania, be, and he is hereby, required to serve upon the said Crago, within eight days after the passage of this resolution, a particular statement of the grounds of said contest; and that the said Crago be, and he is hereby, required to serve upon said Wise his answer thereto in eight days thereafter; and that both parties be allowed such time for the taking of testimony in support of their several allegations and denials as is provided by the act of February 19, 1851."

which was introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. PALMER, of Pennsylvania, at the second session Sixty-second Congress, and which was referred to the Committee on Elections No. 1, be not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is this a unanimous report?

Mr. ANSBERRY. It is, Mr. Speaker, a unanimous report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the report.

The question was taken, and the report was adopted.

DAM ACROSS THE COOSA RIVER, ALA.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 7343) to authorize the building of a dam across the Coosa River, Ala., at the place selected for Lock No. 18 on said river.

I have the written authority from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, signed by 11 members of the committee, which is a quorum. I ask to take the bill from the table and consider it at this time.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the authority which the gentleman has is not an authority in accordance with the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. How many members are on the committee?

Mr. FOSTER. That is not the ground that I make the point of order on.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. FOSTER. I make the point of order that on page 205 of Jefferson's Manual the paragraph says:

A committee meet when and where they please, if the House has not ordered time and place for them, but they can only act when together, and not by separate consultation and consent—nothing being the report of the committee but what has been agreed to in committee actually assembled.

Now, I call the attention of the Speaker to volume 4, Hinds' Precedents, pages 934 and 935:

Committees can only agree to a report acting together. On January 9, 1905, Mr. JOHN S. WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of House resolution No. 415, relating to statistics of the ginning of cotton; and the following paper was presented, Mr. WILLIAMS speaking of it as "a unanimous report" from the Committee on the Census:

COMMITTEE ON THE CENSUS, January 9, 1905.

We, the undersigned members of the Committee on the Census, agree to a favorable report on House resolution No. 415, and further agree that its author, Mr. WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, may call up same when the opportunity presents itself.

E. D. CRUMPACKER, Chairman.
JAMES KENNEDY.
F. M. GRIFFITH.
G. B. PATTERSON.
A. S. BURLESON.
JOE T. ROBINSON.
JAMES HAY.

The Chair understands that, in point of fact, the formal report has not been made from the Committee on the Census, although there is a paper on the Clerk's desk signed by a majority of the members of that committee. The Chair supposes that the proper form would be to ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Census be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, as the formal report has not been made, and the same be considered in the House.

I take it, Mr. Speaker, that this paper which the gentleman from Alabama now presents to the House as an authority from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was secured by taking the paper around to the individual members and having them sign, and although a majority of the committee did sign it, it is not the report of the committee, which can only be made when the committee is actually called together and in session.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman I desire to state that the committee was called together, that the committee did have a meeting, and that some of the members of the committee assembled in the committee room, took this action, and informed the other members who were absent of their action and asked them to indorse their action. They did so, and a majority of that committee has signed this written authorization to me to take up the bill on the Speaker's table. It is a different case from that cited by the gentleman from Hinds' Precedents.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman contend that the committee had a formal meeting in the committee room at which a quorum was present, and then and there they passed a motion that the gentleman from Alabama should bring up this bill, and that a majority of the committee signed the paper which he has in his possession?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, some member of the committee must raise that question in the committee room of no quorum. The authority I have is signed by a majority of this committee and is sufficient, in my judgment, to authorize me to take up this measure and to consider it. No point was made of no quorum being present at the committee meeting, and that is not a question to be raised here. Eleven of that committee makes a clear majority, and they did authorize me in writing to call up this bill. I am the author of the bill, favorably reported in the House; a bill like it has been reported by the Senate committee and almost unanimously passed by the Senate. This bill affects my district, my people, and my State.

Both Senators and every Member of Congress in this House, the governor of my State, the commissioner of agriculture are all in favor of it, and I appeal to the gentleman from Illinois, if upon no other ground, that he allow me and my people to say what shall be done in this purely local matter. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER. I will state to the gentleman from Alabama that I am perfectly willing to take up the bill if the gentleman will submit to certain amendments that ought to be put on the bill. I understand the gentleman from Alabama is opposed to any amendment to the Senate bill now on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no objection and am as anxious, Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Alabama that these bills should be taken up and considered in the proper way when proper consideration of this House can be given to them, but I realize and he must realize that at this late day in the session these differences can not be settled here upon the floor with the proper discussion and consideration that ought to be given to them. But that is not speaking to the point of order. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman can not and will not contend that in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce there was a majority of those members there and that they formally agreed that the gentleman from Alabama had the right and was authorized to come before this House with this paper giving him the permission and authorization to call up this bill whenever he could get the opportunity so to do.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say in reply to the gentleman that I offered to divide time with him, that he and those with him might have an opportunity to offer any amendment they wished to offer and have those amendments pending and at the conclusion of the debate have them all voted upon. I have not sought to take any snap judgment on the gentleman. I do oppose the amendments which he proposes, but I was willing to have the House pass on them, and when the gentleman undertook at the last moment to put me out on a point of order, I did not consider that he was entitled to have any of my time; but I am willing now that he may offer his amendments and have them pending, and let the House determine in what form the bill shall pass.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman from Illinois say to that proposition—to offer the amendments and have them pending and voted on?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the point of order settled first.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] states that there has been a meeting of this committee, and that this committee has authorized him to call up this bill. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] demands proof of a quorum. The committees of this House are governed by the rules of this House. There is a great deal of legislation that goes through this House without a quorum being present, but the courts of the land do not require proof of a quorum where the point of order has not been made that a quorum was not present. What is in order in the House is unquestionably in order in any committee of the House, because they are governed by the rules of the House. If this committee had met and had authorized the gentleman from Alabama to call up this bill, it is not for him to show that there was a quorum present at a meeting of that committee. It is for the gentleman from Illinois to show that there was no quorum present, and unless that is affirmatively shown, or it is shown that the records of the committee show that there was no quorum present, then the gentleman from Alabama has complied with the rules of the House.

But more than that, Mr. Speaker, I think the question as to whether a majority of a committee can under this rule authorize the calling up of a bill on the Speaker's table, so far as I have knowledge of it, has not been directly decided either way in this House. Of course we all know that it is not unusual and it is customary at times for a majority of a committee to sign a petition and authorize a bill to be reported. There is a direct decision against the reporting of a bill, which the gentleman from Illinois has read to the Speaker.

There is a very grave distinction between the reporting of a bill and the authorization of the consideration of a bill. In the first place, the Speaker should bear in mind that when a committee passes on a bill they pass on a whole legislative bill. There are matters of grave importance. Amendments may be pending. But when you come to consider the question of withdrawing a bill from the table that has already been considered by the same committee, and an identical bill passed on, and passed on favorably, by the committee, it seems to me that the broad intent of the rule is not to let any Member of the House, on his motion, go out and call bills off the Speaker's table, but to let the responsibility rest with the committee. There is no action for the committee to take whatever except to give permission to call up the bill. There is no consideration of the bill to be given, because they have already considered the bill and reported it to the House, and it is only a question as to whether the majority of the members of that committee are willing that the bill may be presented to the House for legislative purposes. As the question is open, and as there is no direct decision to prevent the Speaker from giving a broad interpretation to this clause of the rule or a narrow interpretation that is intended to block the legislation of this House, I say the time has come when the Speaker of this House can well stand for the right of every gentleman who represents a constituency on this floor to have a fair and free opportunity to bring before the House the legislation that his constituents are vitally interested in. [Applause.] If the Speaker holds that this paper signed by a majority of the members of this committee is sufficient authority to call up this bill, it may be a construction of the rule that no one else has made, but it will be a construction in the interest of legislation; it will be a construction of the rule in the interest not of a few men blocking legislation on the floor of this House, not of a few men demanding the right, not by a majority vote of this House but by the power of the rules, to prevent a man's constituency from having a free opportunity to be heard on the floor of this House. And I say that the Speaker in deciding this question should not be confined to the narrow interpretation, but to that broad interpretation which my colleague from Alabama is taking and which he has shown his willingness to grant when the gentleman said to the gentleman from Illinois that if the bill came up he might have free and ample opportunity before the previous question is ordered to offer his amendments and let the majority of this House decide that question on its merits. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Before the gentleman sits down I should like to ask him a question. Suppose that a committee by a vote of 5 to 3, without a quorum being present and without the point of no quorum being raised, had voted to report this bill? Do you think that would have been the report of the committee?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That question is not before this House whether there was a quorum. That is a question to be determined by the committee and determined——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Would it, in the opinion of the gentleman, be the report of the committee if the point of no quorum had not been raised?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If a committee reports to this House and the records of that committee show that the committee met and there is nothing there to indicate that there was not a quorum present, a majority of those present helping to report the bill to this House, unless there is something to indicate affirmatively that there was not a quorum present, just as it is in this House——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think it is quite different in this House.

Mr. CLAYTON. There was a presumption of a quorum.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I understand the gentleman holds that it would be the report of the committee, if five out of eight vote in the affirmative. That is to say, I understand it is the opinion of the gentleman that when the point of no quorum is not raised in committee and the committee reports a bill favorably by a vote of 5 to 3, then that is the report of the committee, and that since——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman puts words in my mouth. I am not speaking of a vote of 5 to 3.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Of a majority.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not desire to answer that question.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Then, Mr. Speaker, I shall go on and develop the logical conclusions.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I decline to answer the question. I say this House is governed by the records of the committee, and if they do not disclose there is no quorum present——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, let us see where that line of reasoning leads us. If that is true, if a majority of the committee, when no quorum is present, can report a bill favorably, then the minority subsequently, under this petition arrangement, might go outside and get signatures of more than half the committee and report a bill adversely. Did the committee report this bill when there was not a quorum present? That is the true question. If we admit this report by petition system, which would be the true report of that committee under the circumstances which I suggest? Would it be the favorable report voted by the majority when there was not a quorum present or would it be the adverse report signed by a majority of the whole committee? Mr. Speaker, the position adopted by both the gentlemen from Alabama is untenable.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes; but I would like to develop this point.

Mr. JAMES. Even when a quorum is present could not the minority present, helping to make a quorum, go out and get sufficient signatures to make a majority of the committee?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. That is the point I make; the minority might go out and get those signatures and then the ridiculous proposition would be presented to the House of a majority reporting one way and another majority of the same committee reporting the opposite way.

Mr. JAMES. I think the gentleman does not get my point. The point is this, that the minority can do the very thing when a quorum is present that the gentleman says they can do when a quorum is not present; that is, get a sufficient number to have a majority of the committee.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. That is a fact. That is why any report is inadmissible unless adopted by a committee acting as a committee, not as a number of individuals. We must not take anything except the record of the committee, and this record we have the right to challenge. It is a matter of the highest privilege of this House to demand an answer to the question as to whether or not a quorum was present in the committee when this bill was considered. This House refers to a committee of its members a bill. It orders the committee to consider that bill. When that bill is reported back by that committee the House has a right to say, "Gentlemen, did you have a quorum of your committee present when you acted on that bill?" The House has rights in the matter. It has a right to determine whether a quorum of that committee was present and whether it in fact obeyed the order of the House. Mr. Speaker, if that were not so the House would be at the mercy of its own committee, perhaps of the chairman alone, sometimes.

A committee meeting might be called with only three or four members present. All might be on the same side of some question. The point of no quorum might not be raised in such a meeting; yet it would be preposterous to say that a report emanating from such a meeting in any sense carried out the orders of the House.

A committee's powers are delegated to it by the House. Surely the House is entitled to know whether a bill has been reported by a committee or only by individuals. I have no doubt whatever that a demand for the minutes of a committee presents a question of the highest privilege. The mere fact that a few individuals refrain from investigating the question of a quorum's presence in committee can not estop the House from exercising its power to investigate that question.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understand that no one has stated that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had a meeting and that, without a quorum, authorized the gentleman from Alabama to call up the bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. They did have a meeting.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman did not say that, and I think he will not say it.

Mr. HEFLIN. I said it at the very outset.

Mr. MANN. He said he had a paper which authorized him to call up the bill, but not that there was a meeting.

The SPEAKER. What the gentleman from Alabama said was this: That there was a meeting of the committee. He did not say anything about whether there was a majority there or not.

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not say there was not a quorum.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

The SPEAKER. And he said that he went around and got the gentlemen to sign.

Mr. HEFLIN. I stated that those who were present did give me authority.

Mr. MANN. That was not the gentleman's statement. I undertake to say that the records of the committee will not show that, with or without a quorum, the committee gave the gentleman authority to call up the bill. Now, what is the situation? The gentleman presents a paper signed by a majority of the committee, as I understand. How many did sign the paper?

The SPEAKER. Eleven. There are 21 members of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Authorized him to make this motion. There is no question as to what has always been the practice of the House. The practice of this House and its committees ever since I have been here has been that a committee must act as a committee, and that a committee in order to act must have a quorum present, and that the chairman could not permit the committee to take action without a quorum present.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman was for quite a number of years chairman of this committee. Does the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce keep minutes of the meetings?

Mr. MANN. The committee undoubtedly keeps minutes, and they also show those who were present.

Mr. SISSON. Now, in order to settle this question, the minutes of that committee would show conclusively whether they ever had a meeting or not?

Mr. MANN. There is no claim that the committee had a meeting at which a quorum was present, and, as I understand, no claim that the committee took any action. The statement of the gentleman from Alabama is that there was a committee meeting called and that the members who did appear determined they were in favor of the motion and indicated to the gentleman they would sign the paper and the gentleman might have other members sign. But the gentlemen who met there did not take any action as a committee. Even if they had, the action would have been void. There is no question as to what the practice has been. There is no question that Jefferson's Manual must be an authority, and that manual is made a part of the rules of the House. Nothing can be the report of the committee but what has been agreed to in the committee actually assembled. Now, Mr. Speaker, let us see what would be the effect if it were admitted that presenting a paper signed by a majority of the committee was the action of the committee. This committee has 21 members, 11 constituting a quorum. If 11 members of that committee meet, 6 of them can make any report that they please. Six of them being a majority of the quorum, and 11 being present, 6 out of 21 can order any bill reported. That is the report of the committee. But supposing 1 of the 5 who were defeated goes out with a paper and gets the 5 minority members to sign the paper and the 10 members of the committee who were not there to sign the paper, and present it to the House, and the paper signed by 15 or 20 members of the committee present to the House a paper signed by 15 of the 21 members of the committee, which is the action of the committee? It admits of no controversy. The action of the committee is the action of the committee assembled and not all the individual members scattered about town.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like very much, if he exercised his own desires in the premises, to rule in favor of——

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair is not going to rule with me I would like to be heard again on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not inclined to rule with the gentleman.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday night, when this bill was called up by me, I undertook to take it from the Speaker's table and consider it, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] cited an authority to the effect that we had to have written authority from the committee. The Speaker held that Speaker Reed said that was correct—that written authority was required; that was, to take the bill from the Speaker's table, as I understood it.

My bill, which is identical with the Senate bill, has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The Senate bill came to the House, having been passed by the Senate almost unanimously. That bill lies on the Speaker's table.

It is not to be considered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. There was no action to be taken on this bill by this House committee except to give me authority; and I hold, if the Speaker pleases, that if the members of that committee agree that I ought to be allowed to call up the bill and have it considered, whether they were in committee or not, they had the right to give me that authority by signing their names to that document. No harm can come from it, and no injustice is done to anybody.

Gentlemen ought to be willing to let me try this bill out on its merits on the floor. I repeat it is legislation sought for my district. The whole delegation from my State joins in asking for its passage. I hold, Mr. Speaker, that if the point has not been decided point-blank against my contention the Speaker ought to rule so as to prevent any injustice being done and give this bill of mine a fair chance in the House. Two or three gentlemen from other States, thousands of miles removed from my district and State, are undertaking to legislate for me and my people. I would like to consider this bill now. I want to discuss some matters that I think would be of interest to the House and the country. The farmers of the United States pay every year $14,000,000 to Chile for nitrate of soda. The ammonium sulphate in the United States is in the hands of the Steel Trust and costs the farmers every year $3,500,000. I would like to discuss some of the reasons why certain great interests do not want any nitrate plants built up in the South. I would like to have an opportunity to present it in the name of the farmers of the United States, who want cheaper fertilizers. Some of the reasons why you should permit this company to build a dam across the Coosa River are that they will make this river navigable there and establish a large nitrate plant there, which will be a blessing to the people of the South and the people of the United States; and I would not permit these gentlemen, on a mere technicality, to prevent any Member of this House from bringing up a meritorious bill, a bill that pertains to the interests of his people. [Applause.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentlemen from Illinois are in error as to the precise question before the Chair. This is not a question of a report coming from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The argument made by my friend from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] and by my other friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] would be, perhaps, well taken if it were a report of the committee as we ordinarily understand what a report is. But this is an authorization, or, to be more accurate, a consent on the part of the committee to take from the Speaker's table a bill which had already been considered in that committee and which had been considered in the other body.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not pretend that the committee ever considered the bill itself?

Mr. CLAYTON. I did not catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. MANN. I say, the gentleman does not claim that the committee ever considered the bill itself?

Mr. CLAYTON. It considered a similar bill on this precise subject, framed, I am informed, in the exact terms of this bill.

Mr. MANN. But not this particular bill?

Mr. CLAYTON. Of course not. It was, however, in the exact words, as I understand, of the other bill. The one bill was acted on in the Senate and the other one here, and it is my information that the two bills, in exactly the same phraseology, were introduced simultaneously, one in the Senate and one in the House, and that when the Senate bill passed the Senate favorably it came to the House and is now on the Speaker's table.

Now, the situation is this: There is a House bill of the same nature on the calendar, and following the same practice of considering the Senate bill on the same subject, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce authorized my colleague from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]—that is, the members of the committee authorized him—to call that bill up. It is not a report of the committee, and the rule that the gentleman from Illinois has referred to reads in this way:

> A committee meet when and where they please if the House has not ordered time and place for them; but they can only act when together and not by separate consultation and consent, nothing being the report of the committee but what has been agreed to in committee actually assembled. (Jefferson's Manual.)

This does not pretend to be a report of the committee. It is at most a mere authorization for my colleague from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] to call up and have the House consider and act upon the Senate bill in lieu of the House bill, which has been previously reported favorably by that committee and is now on the calendar.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] brings up a hypothetical case that has nothing to do with this. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] is too good a lawyer to try a concrete question of law upon a hypothetical case. There are cases and cases. For myself I sometimes almost lose patience with the man who talks about cases on all fours. There is hardly ever a case on all fours with another. It is the eternal principle that underlies the case that ought to be decisive of the case. The case that gentleman talks about, of the committee having a meeting and three voting one way and five the other, the eight not constituting a quorum, is not the case here. Let us come back to the particular case before the Speaker now for consideration.

The House has favorably reported a bill on the same subject, in precisely the same terms as this Senate bill, and that bill is now on the calendar. The Senate bill comes over here and is on the Speaker's table. My colleague from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] had called it up from the Speaker's table in lieu of the House bill which has been favorably reported by the committee.

Mr. Speaker, sometimes we think that parliamentary rules are not always based upon common sense and upon reason; but the reason for the rule that requires a committee to assemble and consider a matter has been met in this case. The reason is that the House must have the deliberate judgment of a committee in the consideration of a measure. Has not the House had the deliberate judgment of the committee? Has not the committee met and considered the matter and reported it to this House? The simple proposition is that my colleague is now authorized to call up and ask the consideration by the House of a measure which has had the favorable consideration of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee in the ordinary and usual way. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] to the fact that the rules provide that bills shall be disposed of on motions directed to be made by such committee. If the rule read:

On motions directed to be made by a majority of the members of such committee—the gentleman's contention would be accurate. The gentleman himself admits that a committee could only make a report by the action of the committee, not by the action of the individual members, and the rule says—

On motion directed to be made by the committee—

Not by the individual members.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule, but if the gentleman from Georgia will be brief, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Inasmuch as I desire to submit an observation in support of the contention of the gentleman from Alabama, and as the Chair has indicated a disposition to rule to the contrary, I should like to submit brief remarks.

The SPEAKER. All right.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Section 400 of the rules—Jefferson's Manual—is in the hands of the Chair.

Section 860, to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has just made reference, in its concluding provision provides that a House bill with Senate amendments, and so forth, may "be disposed of in the same manner, on motion directed to be made by such committee."

Now, section 803, on page 396 of the Manual, to which the attention of the Chair has not been directed from the floor, reads:

And all bills, petitions, memorials, or resolutions reported from a committee shall be accompanied by reports in writing, which shall be printed.

A note to the section says:

But the sufficiency of a report is passed on by the House and not by the Speaker.

In Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, section 4653, will be found a ruling, and the entire decision is before the Chair, but I beg to call the attention of the Chair to this language:

The Speaker overruled the point of order on the ground that it was not the duty of the Chair to pass upon the question of the character of a report, that properly belonging to the House to decide. The rule had been complied with by the committee, which had submitted a report in writing, and beyond that the Chair was not called upon to rule.

Further citing from the rule:

All resolutions reported from a committee shall be accompanied by reports in writing.

Now, a direction in writing having been submitted to the House, on its face showing the authority of a quorum of the committee, and the general rules of the House not requiring that a majority report shall be signed in any event, presents a question, if raised, which the House should decide. From the rules and precedents the suggestion is made that where a majority of the committee do sign the report, and on the face of the report it appears that a majority of the committee has authorized an action, it is not for the Chair to decide, but a question for the House to determine whether or not the report complies with the rules and reflects the action of the committee.

Especially is this true where the Speaker of the House will take cognizance that the germane matter—the bill—involved in the directory report is on the calendar reported by unanimous action of the committee, a quorum being present. Therefore it may be maintained that the gentleman from Alabama, supported as he is by the written direction of a majority of the committee, complies in terms with the rule which says that he may call it up "on motion directed to be made by such committee." What authority must he have? "Motion directed to be made by such committee," and the gentleman from Alabama submits a written direction signed by the individual signatures of the chairman of the committee and a majority of its members.

Now, under the ruling by Speaker Carlisle, above cited, the question whether or not this motion is sufficiently supported by direction of the committee, and therefore whether or not the "character of a report" is properly before the House is a question for the House to determine. I submit further, Mr. Speaker, that this is one of the rare cases, if I may say so, in which the Chair could advisedly exercise his discretion by submitting the point of order to the House to decide whether the action of the committee is a substantial compliance with the rule.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], with much earnestness, called upon the House not to interfere with the passage of this bill, which, he said, concerns only the people of his district and State. That statement of the gentleman from Alabama might have been true about such a bill in other days, but it is not true of this bill now. In the olden time dams were put across navigable streams principally in aid of navigation. And, if it were slack-water navigation, this sometimes was, in large measure, a local affair. But all this has been changed. Dams are not now built only as aids to navigation. And this bill proposing to dam a navigable river is not of interest exclusively to the people of the gentleman's district nor of his State, since we have begun to witness the sending of electric power from dams by wire 100 miles, 150 miles, 250 miles, 350 miles——

Mr. CLAYTON. Can not you make it 1,000 miles at once?

Mr. COOPER. I could if I were so regardless of the facts as the gentleman from Alabama appears to be.

Mr CLAYTON. I wanted to save the gentleman needless repetition.

Mr. COOPER. Viewed in the light of recent electrical developments, the building of a dam across the Coosa River for power purposes does not concern only the gentleman from Alabama and his constituents. As shown by an official report of the Commissioner of Corporations, great corporations have for several years been steadily picking up these hydroelectric power sites everywhere throughout the country, developing some and keeping others for the future, and by and by it will be possible, as was pointed out by the commissioner, for these corporations to effect a combination or trust vastly greater and more powerful and dangerous than any hitherto known in the history of the United States.

A corporation controlling the hydroelectric power of the United States could, in the not distant future, control the industries of the United States, if the prophecies of Edison, Marconi, and other great electricians shall prove true.

A few years ago, at Niagara Falls, a stockholder of one of the great electric-power companies said in my presence——

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Is the gentleman discussing the point of order?

Mr. CLAYTON. Oh, give him time and he will get there.

Mr. COOPER. If I do I will have better luck than the gentleman from Alabama usually does.

Mr. Speaker, after I had expressed my surprise at the magnitude of the plants, one on the Canadian and the other on the American side, this expert said that the development and use of electric power had practically only just begun; and that, speaking as a business man not given to letting his imagination run away with him, he had no doubt that improved methods of production, insulation, and transmission would so promote the universal use of electricity generated by water power, for heating, lighting, and power purposes, that in 25 years—certainly in 50—not one-tenth as much coal will be consumed in the United States as is now consumed here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, what I have said has been with a view to showing that the bill in question is not as the gentleman from Alabama has declared it to be, of merely local interest, but that, on the contrary, it touches upon a subject and a policy, each of which is of very great national importance.

Nothing less than a quorum of a committee in meeting assembled can properly be allowed to report a bill, and especially such a bill. It is admitted that no quorum of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce so assembled has ever considered this Senate bill or directed a report respecting it.

The SPEAKER. The case is this: The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] asks to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 7343 and to have it considered.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] raised the point of order that it can not be considered, because its consideration has not been authorized by the committee having jurisdiction thereof.

The gentleman from Alabama presents the following paper, which he argues is a sufficient authorization under the rule:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 19, 1912.

We, the undersigned members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, do hereby authorize the Hon. J. T. HEFLIN to call up or move to take from the Speaker's desk for immediate consideration Senate bill 7343.

W. C. Adamson; Wm. Richardson (telegram to chairman); J. Harry Covington; Michael E. Driscoll; T. W. Sims; J. H. Goeke; W. R. Smith; John A. Martin; E. L. Hamilton; Frank E. Doremus; W. A. Cullop.

There are 21 members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. Eleven of them—a majority, therefore a sufficient number to constitute a quorum—signed this paper, as individual members but not as a committee, as it is not claimed that these 11 ever met as a committee to give the necessary authorization. That is the case as presented.

If the Chair exercised his own personal feelings about this matter, he would rule in favor of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], but the Chair's personal feelings have nothing to do with it. The business of the Speaker is to rule in such a way as to preserve the integrity of the proceedings of the House. The last part of subdivision of Rule 24 runs as follows:

But House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of as the House may determine, as may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills also favorably reported by a committee of the House, and not required to be considered in Committee of the Whole, be disposed of in the same manner on motion directed to be made by such committee.

What is a committee? It has been held, and the present occupant of the Chair has now held two or three times, backed by ample authorities, that the House consists of a quorum of the Members elected and qualified, excepting those who have died or resigned or who have been expelled from the House. What is a committee? A committee consist of a quorum of the membership of that committee, in this case 11 Members, meeting together as a committee. Mr. Speaker CANNON ruled on a question not exactly parallel to this but very near it.

Jefferson's Manual in section 26 provides:

A committee meet when and where they please, if the House has not ordered time and place for them (6 Grey, 370); but they can only act when together, and not by separate consultation and consent—nothing being the report of the committee but what has been agreed to in committee actually assembled.

That means a quorum of the committee. The Chair has read from section 4583 of Hinds' Precedents, volume 4. Section 4584, which in the syllabus says:

Committees can only agree to a report acting together.

Then Mr. HINDS goes on to say:

4584. Committees can only agree to a report acting together.—On January 9, 1905, Mr. JOHN S. WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Resolution No. 415, relating to the statistics of the ginning of cotton, and the following paper was presented, Mr. WILLIAMS speaking of it as "a unanimous report" from the Committee on the Census:

COMMITTEE ON THE CENSUS, January 9, 1905.

We, the undersigned members of the Committee on the Census, agree to a favorable report on House resolution No. 415, and further agree that its author, Mr. WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, may call up same when the opportunity presents itself.

E. D. CRUMPACKER, Chairman.
JAMES KENNEDY.
F. M. GRIFFITH.
G. E. PATTERSON.
A. S. BURLESON.
JOE T. ROBINSON.
JAMES HAY.

Mr. Speaker CANNON said:

The Chair understands that, in point of fact, the formal report has not been made from the Committee on the Census, although there is a paper on the Clerk's desk signed by a majority of the members of that committee.

To make a ruling that would cover one bill and let this one in would not do very much harm, but to rule that this kind of a paper may take the place of a report or authorization from a committee at an authorized meeting—because the Speaker does not rule in one case only, for the rule is made for all similar cases—would open the doors so wide to a proceeding not authorized by the House that the Chair must hold, in order to preserve the integrity of the proceedings of the House, that the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] against this paper which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] presents, is well taken. A proper authorization to call up a Senate bill under the rule cited can be given only by a committee, as herein defined. To decide the other way would be practically to do away with committee meetings.

LOAN OF TENTS TO CONFEDERATE VETERANS' REUNION.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up House joint resolution 349.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 349) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion, to be held at Ada, Okla., in September, 1912.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to loan, at his discretion, to the executive committee of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion, to be held at Ala, Okla., in the month of September, 1912, such tents, with necessary poles, ridges, and pins, as may be required at said reunion: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of said property, the same to be delivered to said committee designated at such time prior to the holding of said reunion as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the general chairman of said executive committee: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall, before delivering such property, take from said general chairman of the executive committee a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, and the whole without expense to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I did not hear it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it over again, and the House will be in order.

The joint resolution was again reported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 5 and 6, amend by striking out the following words: "from said general chairman of the executive committee."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment. After the word "such," in line 7, page 1, insert "cots and."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "such," insert the words "cots and."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CARTER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CRockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 7315. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Clearwater River at any point within the corporate limits of the city of Lewiston, Idaho;

S. 7209. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at the town site of Sartell, Minn.;

S. 4301. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to lease to the Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Railway Co. a tract of land in the Fort Keogh Military Reservation, in the State of Montana, and for a right of way thereto for the removal of gravel and ballast material; and

S. 5458. An act to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Delaware River south of Trenton, N. J., by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co. or their successors.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following House concurrent resolution:

House concurrent resolution 62.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Enrolling Clerk of the House, in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 38) entitled "An act to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes," be directed to regard the matter furnished in the conference report to be inserted in lieu of amendments numbered 7 to 15, inclusive, as following the word "years," on page 3, line 18; and that the matter proposed to be stricken from amendment numbered 68, as set forth in said conference report, be designated, "all after the word 'thereof,' in line 21 of the proposed amendment, down to and including 'and' in line 24."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

House concurrent resolution 58.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That Herman Walthauser, of Boston, Mass., be, and hereby is, authorized to make a cast from the head of the statue of John Hancock, now located in the Senate wing of the Capitol.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 11877. An act to amend section 8 of the food and drugs act, approved June 30, 1906;

H. R. 26099. An act authorizing the towns of Ball Bluff, Libby, and Cornish, in the county of Aitkin, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in Aitkin County, Minn.;

H. R. 26236. An act conferring upon the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co. the privileges, rights, and conditions heretofore granted the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Co. to construct a railroad across certain lands in Comanche County, Okla.; and

H. R. 26235. An act to authorize the city of Chicago to construct a bridge across the Little Calumet River at Indiana Avenue, in said city.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 20728, the Indian appropriation bill, and move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and ask for a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the motion I make is that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and ask for a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire a separate vote on several of the propositions.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What time does the gentleman require on the various amendments and to what amendments does he desire to object?

Mr. MANN. I shall not ask for a separate vote upon those same amendments on which we had a separate vote before, but there are some other amendments where I think we will require a separate vote.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman give the numbers?

Mr. MANN. Amendments Nos. 105, 110, 111, 112, 114, and 117.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What time does the gentleman wish? I desire to hold the floor.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how much time will be required on each amendment. It depends somewhat upon how much time we can afford to use in the House. I am always willing to cut the garment according to the cloth.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then will the gentleman state his objection to amendment No. 105?

Mr. MANN. I will state my objection to these amendments if I have the opportunity.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman such time as he may desire—that is, reasonable time.

Mr. MANN. How much time does the gentleman from New York desire?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think about 15 minutes between us.

The SPEAKER. What is it that any gentleman wants to do with this conference report?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a motion to recede and concur on an amendment which I will propose to amendment No. 99. I do not know what the other gentlemen desire.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota moves to recede and concur with an amendment to amendment No. 99. The gentleman will send up his amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is that amendment in reference to district agents in Oklahoma?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It is. The amendment, Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit first is to strike out, in line 21, on page 39, after the word "dollars," everything down to and including the word "year," in line 12, page 40, and insert the proviso that I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like the amendment to be now read with the amendment as suggested.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first read the amendment as it is and then read it as it will be as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and expenses of district agents for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma and other employees connected with the work of such agents, $100,000: Provided, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, no moneys shall be expended from the tribal funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes except for the equalization of allotments, per capita or other payments authorized by law to individual members of the respective tribes, and for schools for the current year, and the salaries and contingent expenses of the governors, chiefs, assistant chiefs, secretaries, interpreters, and mining trustees of the Chickasaw and Choctaw Tribes for the current year, and attorneys of said tribes employed under contract approved by the President, without specific appropriations by Congress, except as hereinafter provided: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to continue the tribal schools of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and to use funds arising from royalties on coal and asphalt for their maintenance for the current year.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the proviso offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, no moneys shall be expended from the tribal funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes without specific appropriation by Congress, except as follows: Equalization of allotments, per capita and other payments authorized by law to individual members of the respective tribes, tribal and other Indian schools for the current fiscal year under existing law, salaries and contingent expenses of governors, chiefs, assistant chiefs, secretaries, interpreters, and mining trustees of the tribes for the current fiscal year, and attorneys for said tribes employed under contract approved by the President, under existing law, for the current fiscal year: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to continue the tribal schools of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations for the current fiscal year.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to arrange with the gentleman for a little time in which to debate this amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think this ought to be confined to 30 minutes. It was thoroughly discussed when the bill passed the House.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Well, this is a very important item.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is in regard to the 16 special agents in Oklahoma.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that this is a Senate amendment restoring the provision for the district agents, and the proviso is what was agreed upon in conference as to that portion of the Senate amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But the confereees struck out the 16 special agents.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They struck out the appropriation for the district agents, but this is exactly as the House and Senate conferees agreed to it, with the exception of restoring the district agents.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The only point in controversy is whether we shall have the agents or whether they shall be abolished?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that 30 minutes will be sufficient time?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to use 15 minutes, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] would like the same length of time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I hope we may adjourn by the end of the week, I trust the gentleman will not push the arguments to a point where we are going to have a long night session.

Mr. MANN. I think it ought to be understood that this bill should be disposed of to-day and go back to conference.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is insisted, Mr. Speaker, that we should get through with this bill to-day.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am as anxious as any gentleman to get through with the bill, and, in fact, this is the only amendment I care to discuss.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has given notice that he wants to make some motion with reference to these amendments.

Mr. MANN. That needs a separate vote, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman require time to discuss each one of those separately?

Mr. MANN. I do not desire time on each one of them, but to refer to all of them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How much time?

Mr. MANN. I do not know, but there are several gentlemen who want it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want a little time on one item.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I desire 30 minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. I think it fair to say that we spent about two days on this same identical amendment when the bill was up in its original form, and at that time the opposition was so large that it is overwhelming to refer to it. Now, this is what happened: The House conferees reinstated the position of the House that was then fortified by an overwhelming vote. All that is to be done on this occasion is to further insist on a disagreement. Now, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] comes in with a motion to recede, and thrash over that old straw that we worked on when the bill was up. The House conferees already maintain the position of the House. It ought not to be contested at all.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will agree upon 20 minutes on a side.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Why, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take up all the time, and I am willing to agree to 20 minutes on a side. This is a matter I consider so important that every time I have an opportunity I want to go on record concerning it.

The SPEAKER. The agreement is, then, for 20 minutes on a side—20 minutes to be disposed of by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] and 20 minutes by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLER. Does that refer solely to amendment No. 99?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, let me inquire if at the same time we can not get an agreement as to the other amendments. This discussion may last a week at this rate.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it will take very long.

Mr. FERRIS. I think it will.

Mr. MANN. When this is disposed of, I am perfectly willing to reach an agreement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] lead off in the discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in the time allotted to me I can only very briefly discuss the motion to recede and concur which I have made on this amendment. The House will remember that when the bill was considered some weeks ago I offered an amendment proposing to restore the item in the bill for the district agents in Oklahoma that had been left out by the committee in reporting the bill.

The conference committee have reached an agreement in which I did not concur, eliminating the Senate amendment.

I want to cite the law which provides for the appointment of district agents in connection with the administration of the affairs in the Five Civilized Tribes, and I am not going to discuss—because I have not the time—the question generally of the affairs of these tribes, the amount of money that is expended annually, and the amount of money that is collected. I do, however, want to mention one point that did not come out in the discussion when this matter was considered in the House before. Under the law originally, in the matter of administration of Indian estates, it was provided that it should be under the jurisdiction and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and the gentlemen from Oklahoma who were then representing that State upon this floor, diligent as they usually are in looking out for legislation that affects the interests of their constituents, secured legislation providing that thereafter the jurisdiction of administration of Indian minor estates should be in the county courts or probate courts of the State of Oklahoma.

This law enacted at that time provided directly and specifically for the appointment of district agents, and I want to read the law, being a provision of the act known as the restriction act, approved May 27, 1908:

SEC. 6. That the persons and property of minor allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes shall, except as otherwise specifically provided by law, be subject to the jurisdiction of the probate courts of the State of Oklahoma. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby empowered, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, to appoint such local representatives within the State of Oklahoma who shall be citizens of that State or now domiciled therein as he may deem necessary to inquire into and investigate the conduct of guardians or curators having in charge the estates of such minors, and whenever such representative or representatives of the Secretary of the Interior shall be of opinion that the estate of any minor is not being properly cared for by the guardian or curator, or that the same is in any manner being dissipated or wasted or being permitted to deteriorate in value by reason of the negligence or carelessness or incompetency of the guardian or curator, said representative or representatives of the Secretary of the Interior shall have power and it shall be their duty to report said matter in full to the proper probate court and take the necessary steps to have such matter fully investigated, and go to the further extent of prosecuting any necessary remedy, either civil or criminal, or both, to preserve the property and protect the interests of said minor allottees; and it shall be the further duty of such representative or representatives to make full and complete reports to the Secretary of the Interior. All such reports, either to the Secretary of the Interior or to the proper probate court, shall become public records and subject to the inspection and examination of the public, and the necessary court fees shall be allowed against the estates of said minors. The probate courts may, in their discretion, appoint any such representative of the Secretary of the Interior as guardian or curator for such minors, without fee or charge.

And said representatives of the Secretary of the Interior are further authorized, and it is made their duty, to counsel and advise all allottees, adult or minor, having restricted lands of all of their legal rights with reference to their restricted lands, without charge, and to advise them in the preparation of all leases authorized by law to be made, and at the request of any allottee having restricted land he shall, without charge, except the necessary court and recording fees and expenses, if any, in the name of the allottee, take such steps as may be necessary, including the bringing of any suit or suits and the prosecution and appeal thereof, to cancel and annul any deed, conveyance, mortgage, lease, contract to sell, power of attorney, or any other encumbrance of any kind or character, made or attempted to be made or executed in violation of this act or any other act of Congress, and to take all steps necessary to assist said allottees in acquiring and retaining possession of their restricted lands.

Supplemental to the funds appropriated and available for expenses connected with the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, there is hereby appropriated, for the salaries and expenses arising under this section, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, to be available immediately, and until July 1, 1909, for expenditure under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That no restricted lands of living minors shall be sold or encumbered, except by leases authorized by law, by order of the court or otherwise.

That act, Mr. Speaker, authorized the appointment of district agents or local representatives of the Secretary of the Interior, and following its enactment, district agents were appointed and an appropriation of $100,000 has been made annually to pay their salaries and the expenses of their offices. Their principal occupation is to look out and see that the Indians, minors particularly, are not wronged or deprived of property that justly belongs to them; there has been, by reason of their activity, a constant demand from that portion of Oklahoma where Indian lands are located by persons dealing with the Indians to drive them from the State. It is not costing the Indian a dollar to maintain them. The United States Government has made the appropriation annually for the payment of the salaries and expenses of these agents, so that it can not be said that the purpose of discontinuing them is to save money to the tribes.

I want to call attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that in this bill there is an item of $300,000 for the common schools in the Five Civilized Tribes, which is really a gratuity to the State of Oklahoma, and other large sums are carried in the bill to be expended in that State about which there is no complaint from the gentlemen who are insisting upon eliminating the appropriation for the district agents on the grounds of economy. I want to emphasize that the Senate amendment, which I hope will be concurred in, will not take a cent of the moneys of the tribes.

Just a word with regard to the expense of administration of the Five Tribes, because I anticipate it will be discussed by the other side. The records show that for the year ending June 30, 1911, the cost of administering the affairs of approximately 36,900 restricted Indians of the Five Tribes under supervision of the Government and paid by Federal appropriation was $7.29 per capita, while similar expenses for other Indians in Oklahoma is about $17.90, to which no objection has been made or exception taken.

The distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. FERRIS, and also, I anticipate, the other two gentlemen from that State, Mr. CARTER and Mr. DAVENPORT, will probably have much to say about the large amount of money that is expended for administration purposes in the Five Civilized Tribes, but I challenge them to show that the per capita expense at other agencies in Oklahoma is less than I have stated or that the per capita cost of the Five Tribes is more than I have stated.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask leave to extend my remarks, and I want to incorporate in the RECORD numerous protests and telegrams that have been received since it has become known that the district agents in Oklahoma are likely to be discontinued. I will not have time to read them, but briefly I want to quote from some of them. Among others is a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, dated August 10, 1912; also one dated August 12, 1912, wherein, among other things, he calls attention to the fact that the 5 principal chiefs and tribal attorneys, 40 county judges, 22 other State officers, and 715 prominent citizens, including bankers, lawyers, merchants, and farmers in Oklahoma, express an appreciation of the favorable cooperation, and so forth, of these district agents and protest against their discontinuance.

This question has become a national one, and protests are coming in from all over the country from persons and organizations interested in the general welfare and protection of Indians.

Mr. McCALL. The interest in the matter is very wide.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It certainly is. I want to say that in the last fiscal year it is shown by the records that over $500,000 was saved to Indian minors alone by these district agents, and no one will dispute it.

I have a telegram from the union agent at Muskogee, Okla., Mr. Kelsey, going much into details as to what has been accomplished during the last year. I have one from the Keetoowah Society, in Oklahoma, which comprises several thousand full-blood Cherokee Indians; also other telegrams which I shall print as a part of my remarks.

When the inherited-land bill was pending in the House a few weeks ago the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] made a very strong statement, emphasizing what he stated previously on a former occasion when he discussed the district agents and referred to what he claimed the State board of charities and correction is doing to protect the Indians. Here is what he said:

Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat what I said some time ago in the discussion on the Indian appropriation bill. We have in Oklahoma what we call a State board of charities and corrections. In that board there has been organized a special bureau for the specific purpose of looking after this very character of case—minor children's allotments and inherited estates. That department is very ably presided over by a young lady named Miss Katie Barnard, and her assistant in charge of this specific is Dr. J. H. Stolper, and the grafter who gets anything past the vigilant eye of these two guardsmen will have to show something better than they have ever yet conjured up.

Mr. Speaker, that statement was transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior to this board of charities and corrections that he referred to, and I have the letter in reply of the chief officer of that board, and notwithstanding the very brief time I have I want to read it:

STATE OF OKLAHOMA,
DEPARTMENT OF CHARITIES AND CORRECTIONS,
Oklahoma City, July 23, 1912.

HON. WALTER L. FISHER,
Secretary Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of June 19 addressed to Miss Kate Barnard, commissioner of charities and corrections, has been duly received. Miss Barnard has been out of the State for many months, as she is in very bad health, and I happened to be out of the State when your letter came and have just returned.

In regard to the powers and duties of the State commissioner of charities and corrections, I beg leave to say that under our law it is the duty of Miss Barnard to appear as next friend for every minor orphan in the State when it appears to her that the estate is being mismanaged or dishonestly handled. Armed with this authority Miss Barnard has intervened in behalf of approximately 3,000 orphans, nearly all of them Indian children whose estates were being exploited or disposed of by incompetent or grafting guardians. We have had many guardians removed, and we have saved for these children since this law became operative something like $100,000 in money and prevented the sale or return of something like 115,000 acres of land. In a large number of cases we have proceeded by what might be termed arbitration proceedings. In the case of the McCurtain County lands we challenged every transaction made through the county court, and by this means several large holders of land, such as mill corporations, etc., have agreed to abide by the findings of an arbitration board. We have several arbitrations involving two or three thousand titles pending. One arbitration has been completed. In this case the Interior Department named Hon. Dana H. Kelsey, this department named Dr. J. H. Stolper, and the party who had profited by many grafting transactions named Judge Thomas C. Humphrey, ex-Federal judge. The result of this arbitration was that $32,000 in cash was returned to the Indians and a number of parcels of land was reconveyed to the original allottees. By terms of the agreement we practically gave a clearance to all titles that we did not find enmeshed with graft and wrongdoing.

Because this department is only given the services of one lawyer we have had our hands full, and in fact our legal department has been swamped. Naturally we have only been able to operate in the several counties where the worst cases of graft were known to exist. I am confident that we could clear up the situation thoroughly did we have enough legal force.

We have been invited to come down in several counties by county judges who do not seem to be able to compel wholesale guardians to report, and while we have not been able to cover the ground as thoroughly as we wish to, yet the number of petitions for the sale of Indian children's properties has been reduced almost to a minimum. People are afraid to buy these lands, because they fear that we will intervene and spoil the deal. Therefore our moral power has been really greater than our actual work has shown. We have taken a decided stand against guardians' fees, lawyers' fees, and court fees eating up the proceeds of the sale of children's lands. Of course this does not make us popular with the legal profession, because up to the time we began to operate under the new law it was the fashion for lawyers to appear in most trivial proceedings so that they could get a slice out of the proceeds of children's properties sold by order of probate courts.

Strange to say, that while nearly all of our efforts have been made in behalf of Indian minor children, we have never received the slightest help, and in many cases we have experienced the open antagonism of the tribal attorneys, who have not protected the children themselves, and who do not seem to want us to protect them. Of course there may be some politics in this, because this administration is Democratic, while, of course, nearly all of the tribal attorneys are of the opposite faith. However, at the time we asked for this law it seemed impossible for tribal attorneys or any other attorneys for the children to get any hearing in any of our county courts. It was called Federal interference and was resented by all of the courts, but so soon as we appeared on the scene an entire change was made, and while we had several uphill fights at the start most of the county judges now cooperate with us gladly, and, as I stated above, the moral effect has been that the majority of petitions for sale of minor children's properties are very carefully considered and oftentimes refused.

You will find our law in the revised statutes of Oklahoma, a copy of which will surely be in your law library.

Yours, truly, H. HUSON.

It will be observed that he states that the board has not sufficient force, and therefore they have not the facilities necessary to protect the Indians. I think I have already stated that the district agents last year saved to minor children alone $500,000, and I do not think any gentleman on that side of the House will dispute the statement.

In the other body on Saturday last the RECORD was filled with a detailed statement by a distinguished Senator, setting forth wherein there had been abuses and frauds and forgeries and impositions upon these two poor, helpless people, showing conclusively that they can not have too much protection.

The Five Civilized Tribes embrace about 19,000,000 acres and occupy the eastern half of Oklahoma, where there are about 101,000 enrolled Indians, of which approximately 36,000, which include full bloods and three-fourths blood Indians, whose affairs are still under supervision of the Government, and intermingled with these Indians are approximately 800,000 white people. The number of minor Indians is estimated at about 60,000, about 1,500 in each of the 40 counties. Each minor has an allotment of land, and the aggregate value of such are estimated at $150,000,000. As shown by letters from various county judges, asking that these district agents be retained, it is impracticable for them, not having the machinery to make field investigations, to properly administer such estates without Federal assistance; furthermore, these agents or Federal employees are required to administer the affairs of the restricted adult Indians over which the local courts have no jurisdiction whatever, therefore the Government will be required to look after the welfare of such class who are now minors when they shall reach their majority.

I understand from the Chickasaw tribal representatives that the counties in the Five Civilized Tribes, within the congressional district of Mr. FERRIS, contain but few restricted Indians, such localities being populated mostly by whites and Indians of slight Indian blood, whose affairs are not under the supervision of the Government; that a large part of the restricted Indians who live elsewhere, however, have valuable allotments of land in these counties which are leased to white persons, who naturally desire that the Government shall not interfere in their dealings with such Indian landowners, and I have no doubt but what there is in his counties a demand upon him that he get rid of governmental agents that interfere in their dealings with the Indians in the leasing and purchase of their lands. My experience is that white people living in the Indian country are, as a rule, very insistent that they ought to be permitted to deal direct with the Indians without any governmental supervision, and all of us who have such constituencies are ever being importuned to make it easier to do business with the Indians. It might be noted that before district agents were provided in Oklahoma that thousands of deeds, mortgages, leases, contracts, and other instruments affecting the property of the Indians who were not authorized to make such contracts, were made, and the result is that there have been instituted by the Department of Justice about 30,000 suits to recover property wrongfully obtained or to quiet titles. The land involved in the suits so brought has been tied up and could not be disposed of by reason of the litigation, which has gone to the Supreme Court of the United States, and decided that the Government had the power to bring the suits. This has retarded the development of the localities where the lands are located. The district agents are very useful and are constantly engaged in obtaining information in support of the suits instituted, as stated, and in obtaining information of other illegal transactions where a suit should be brought, and suits are being instituted as the result of their efforts. The removal of the district agents will undoubtedly result in a repetition of what transpired before, and immediately there will be an effort to obtain the lands of the Indians, making it necessary for the Government to again intercede and institute proceedings to recover property that the Indians will be deprived of. In my opinion it will be much better for the welfare and prosperity of Oklahoma to continue the representatives of the Government in the protection of these Indians, preventing as they do by investigating and reporting such illegal transfers where they occur, and it will be much better for the white people who deal with the Indians than to have the condition that prevailed, and that will prevail again if these district agents are discontinued.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I want to say it is my honest judgment that to discontinue the district agents would not only be a mistake, but it would mean that the real Indians, and particularly those of full blood, will be wronged, robbed, and despoiled and stripped of all they now possess and will be left helpless, and the State of Oklahoma will have upon its hands a large Indian pauper population which they will expect the Federal Government to feed and care for. It will mean the writing of a page of infamy and scandal in Indian history that has never before been approached. I do not wish to impugn the motive of any gentlemen from Oklahoma who occupies a position on this floor, and I want to give them credit in their efforts to eliminate these guardians of the Indians for being actuated by good intentions; but I can not help but feel and believe that they have been imposed upon and unconsciously have allowed themselves to be influenced by mercenary, unscrupulous, and dishonest persons who are seeking to remove what now prevents such persons from taking from the Indians the lands and moneys they now possess without adequate consideration; and I want to warn the Members from Oklahoma who occupy places on the other side of this Chamber, and particularly the two who are members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, that if the district agents are discontinued they will be responsible, and if scandal follows and the Indians of the Five Tribes are despoiled, debauched, and made to suffer, they can not escape the responsibility, for it is to them and their influence that the appropriation for the district agents was left out of the bill when it was reported to the House, and that the Senate was compelled to recede from its amendment restoring the item. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], one of the conferees, is alone responsible, for had he been willing the House conferees would have receded. I sincerely hope that in the new conference, in case my motion to confer is voted down, he will be disposed to reconsider his position, and that an appropriation can be provided that will make it possible to continue a portion, if not all, of the district agents that are now employed.

AUGUST 10, 1912.

DEAR SIR: Since talking with you this morning about the appropriation for the 16 district Indian agents in Oklahoma I have had a memorandum prepared by Commissioner Wright, of which I am taking the liberty of inclosing a copy. It shows the facts with regard to disbursements and collections in the Five Civilized Tribes during the fiscal year 1911, and also states some of the reasons why the abolition of the district agents will probably result disastrously to the interests of the Indians. I hope very much that you will be able to secure the retention of these agents in the bill. If the opposition is so strenuous that you feel it necessary to make some reduction, the reduction ought to be as little as possible. Commissioner Wright insists that the whole 16 agents are necessary to the proper carrying on of the work. If you should reduce these to 12, we will do our best to cover the field so that results can be reported for the next appropriation bill, and action then taken in the light of the experience of the current year. If the agents are entirely abolished, it will be absolutely necessary to have a material increase in the general appropriation to cover traveling agents, and $50,000 will be the very least that we could get along with. It should be more than that. Commissioner Wright thinks it should not be less than $75,000. In other words, the total reduction from the $275,000 allowed last year ought not to reduce the amount this year below $250,000. The department will, of course, have to get along with what Congress gives it, but I trust that the reduction will be as small as possible. From the information now available, it seems certain that if the district agents are abolished and the appropriation reduced, as is now proposed, the result will be great dissatisfaction in the Territory and increased delay in passing upon matters of importance, in which not only the Indians, but the whites as well, are deeply concerned. In view of the conditions reported by the Oklahoma Department of Charities and Corrections, to which attention was called in a recent veto message of the President, there is almost certain to be grave scandal and abuse of the rights of the Indians if the Department of the Interior is not given adequate funds to keep up at least the present degree of supervision. You will note that in the statements in regard to disbursements for the year 1911 the cost of administration per capita of the restricted Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes was only $7.29, which is less than half the amount expended for Indians outside the Civilized Tribes and authorized by Congress.

Very truly, yours,

WALTER L. FISHER,
Secretary.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,

Actual savings, probate cases, by district agents (additional estimated amount saved over $1,000,000)	549,498.91
Total	4,643,853.10

DISTRICT AGENTS.

There are 16 district agents, at $1,800, each having 1 assistant receiving a salary of from $900 to $1,200; 1 probate attorney, at $2,500; 1 assistant probate attorney, at $2,000; 1 district agent, at $2,000, located at the agency office to attend to correspondence and instructions to various district agents; 1 special district agent, at $1,800, whose time is mostly given to assisting the United States attorney and courts in procuring evidence in criminal cases where persons have defrauded Indians or committed crimes in connection with procuring deeds by illegal and criminal procedure; 9 special district agents, at salaries from $1,200 to $1,600 each, whose principal duty is checking up probate accounts. All of the above are under the direction of the Indian superintendent. There are also 2 supervising district agents acting under instructions from the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, whose duties are to inspect the offices of the district agents and make investigations of all matters pertaining thereto, including complaints originally filed by Indians or referred by the department.

Each district agent has an average of about 6,000 citizens, of which over 2,000 are within the restricted class. As restrictions are removed and the funds arising from the sale handled through the district agent, such work constantly increases. In connection with the removal of restrictions such service expedites such work, thereby making the land taxable. If such work were discontinued by men in the field and required to be taken up specially through the general office, removal of restrictions would require such time as to make it almost impossible. Under the present system, however, over a quarter of a million acres were freed from restrictions during the year.

About 20,000 probate cases have been examined by district agents during the year, with the result that reports of guardians long overdue have been filed, that charges not proper against the estates of wards have been eliminated, improper guardians have been discharged and other suitable persons appointed, all through cooperation with county judges, who are unable to make necessary investigations of such accounts by reason of the great number of wards with valuable estates and the crowded condition of county dockets. In one single instance there was found by such investigation $31,000 due minors. More than 20,000 cases have been examined during the year. The time and work required on a probate case varies from mere advice to the guardian or assistance to the court to an exhaustive examination of reports or filing of suits on behalf of minors and complete investigation of all facts in connection therewith. The district agents are frequently called on by the courts to make appraisements of the lands in land sales by full-blood heirs.

Work of district agents.

Reports in probate matters under section 6, act of May 27, 1908	671
Reports to superintendent, miscellaneous probate matters	582
Probate complaints filed	1,696
Probate complaints disposed of	1,482
Probate cases examined, investigated, and handled, approximately	20,000
Lease complaints filed	2,199
Departmental leases forwarded to superintendent	443
Applications for removal of restrictions forwarded to superintendent	1,759
Amount of money actually saved for Indian allottees by district agents	$549,498.91

From the foregoing it will be noted that there has been saved to the Indian allottees on account of the district agents' efforts $549,498.91. This represents actual, tangible savings and arises from various matters, such as deductions made in amounts charged by guardians in their reports, increased amounts received in rentals by reason of advice given by district agents, amounts deducted from claims against allottees by creditors, and numerous other matters which are constantly arising. This amount exceeds that reported last year by $157,880.51.

In addition to the tangible savings to the allottees, the intangible savings and losses prevented by timely advice and assistance, while impossible of accurate estimation, will without doubt swell the total to approximately $2,000,000.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, August 12, 1912.

Hon. CHARLES H. BURKE,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the inclosed copy of a telegram, dated August 11, 1912, from Superintendent Kelsey, of the Union Agency, Muskogee, Okla., regarding the urgent need of Congress providing an appropriation for the salaries and expenses of the district agents for the Five Civilized Tribes.

In this connection your attention is invited to the very full justification for this appropriation found in the printed hearings on the Indian appropriation bill before a subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, beginning with page 265 of said hearings. Your attention is also invited to the document authorized to be printed by the Senate containing letters from 5 principal chiefs and tribal attorneys, 40 county judges, 22 other State officers, and 715 prominent citizens, including bankers, lawyers, merchants, and farmers of Oklahoma, expressing appreciation of the favorable cooperation, indorsing the work of and urging the retention of district agents in the Five Civilized Tribes.

I can not too strongly recommend and urge that Congress provide an adequate appropriation for the retention of the district agents. No other officials in the Indian Service have been more helpful in the protection of the property rights of Indians and assisting in the administration of Indian Affairs and in expediting the work required of the Indian Service in the Five Civilized Tribes by legislation of the Congress than have the district agents. It is exceedingly important that the district agent force be retained, in order that the property rights of thousands of full-blood adults and Indian minors may be protected. If Congress should fail to provide the district agents, the Indian Service would be seriously crippled, would be without adequate machinery with which to carry out the laws heretofore enacted by Congress, and the property of the restricted Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes would be jeopardized and in a large number of cases sacrificed because of lack of proper supervision and protection.

Very respectfully,

SAMUEL ADAMS,
First Assistant Secretary.

THE WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

[Received at Wyatt Building, corner Fourteenth and F Streets, Washington.]

MUSKOGEE, OKLA., August 11, 1912.

COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C.:

Regarding restricted class of Five Tribes Indians needing Government protection, the district agency service is the most effective ever employed by Government, not only in extinguishment of grafting, but preparation of Indians for ultimate self-sustaining citizenship. These local officers, each having nearly 2,000 uneducated Indians, really take the place of regularly established Indian agencies in western Oklahoma and other States, which many times have only few hundred Indians. Elimination of Five Tribes district agents at this time would be shocking blow to effective Indian administration and cruel injustice to these helpless full-blood Indians. In addition to adult full bloods * * * minor Indians, owning realty valued in neighborhood of $150,000,000, creating probable situation such as never before existed in any State. No better argument as to lack of State machinery and necessity of cooperative protection than that contained in letter State department charities and corrections. (See p. 11067, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Aug. 6.) Expense of district agents is inconsequential compared with the vast property and educational interests conserved. Not one cent of Indian money has been expended for district agents, but, on contrary, they have actually saved individual Indians from five to six hundred thousand dollars annually, and indirect savings would total at least two million per annum, besides facilitating general land and lease transtions for both Indians and public. And to cut off field machinery will materially delay disposition of excess lands and otherwise prevent operation existing laws to the full extent that may be proper. I earnestly urge that every possible means be used for the retention of this splendid service.

KELSEY, Superintendent.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, August 16, 1912.

Hon. C. H. BURKE,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR SIR: With further reference to the appropriation for the 16 district agents of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma I inclose herewith, for your information, copy of a telegram from Thos. W. Leahy, county judge, Muskogee, Okla.

Very truly, yours,

MUSKOGEE, OKLA., August 15, 1912.

Honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.:

It appears from press reports that appropriation for district Indian agents has been eliminated. Such action will be most disastrous to Indian allottees. Having jurisdiction over the heaviest probate court in Oklahoma I am thoroughly familiar with assistance rendered minor and full-blood Indians by district agents. Under present conditions, without the assistance of the agents, property protection by the county court would be impossible.

THOS. W. LEAHY, County Judge.

TAHLEQUAH, OKLA., August 17, 1912.

The honorable SECRETARY OF INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.:

Noting from press dispatches the possibility of the abolition of the district-agency system of your department in that part of Oklahoma formerly Indian Territory, my interests in the class of our citizens to be affected and personal knowledge and observation prompts me to urge upon you the imperative necessity of maintaining the system for the proper protection of this class. Every conceivable reason for right and justice, the discharge of paternal duty assumed by the Federal Government toward the Indians, the faith confided in Congress by the Indians, fortified by every legal and moral obligation held out to them in negotiations—resulting in the allotment—demand the continuance of the district-agency system, as this is the best means of giving to them proper protection from graft.

HOUSTON B. TEEHEE,
County Attorney, Cherokee County, Okla.

TAHLEQUAH, OKLA., August 18, 1912.

SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.:

It would be a great calamity in this county to discontinue the district agent. In this county is pending nearly 4,800 Indian estates which can not be properly cared for with the help now allowed the county judge, and the county is not financially able to pay for additional help. The number of district agents should be increased in this county.

J. T. PARKS,
County Judge, Cherokee County, Okla.

ARDMORE, OKLA., August 18, 1912.

Hon. WALTER L. FISHER,
Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I note there is an effort being made to eliminate United States district Indian agents in eastern Oklahoma; this should not be, as these district agents are an absolute necessity for the protection of a larger number of these Indians; also they are indispensable in guardianship and probate matters.

J. H. MATHERS,
County Prosecuting Attorney for Carter County, Okla.

CHICKASAW, OKLA., August 16, 1912.

SECRETARY OF INTERIOR,

The service of district Indian agents has been of great benefit to my court and I protest against their discontinuance.

Hon. C. H. BURKE,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR SIR: With further reference to the appropriation for the 16 district agents of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, I inclose herewith, for your information, copies of two telegrams from representatives of the Keetoowah Society of Oklahoma.

Very truly, yours,
WALTER L. FISHER, Secretary.

TAHLEQUAH, OKLA., August 11, 1912.

The Honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.:

I see that it is proposed by Congress to now discontinue districts in eastern Oklahoma. I know this is not best for the full-blood Indian; he is incompetent to handle his affairs without the assistance of the district agents, who have no interests but to do justice to the Indian; without help they are left to the mercy of the speculators.

R. W. WOLFE,
President Keetowah Society.

TAHLEQUAH, OKLA., August 12, 1912.

The honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.:

Be it resolved by the advisory committee of the incorporated Keetoowah Society in regular annual session, It is the unanimous sense of this society that all full-blood Cherokee Delawares and Shawnees earnestly protest against the proposition now pending in the United States Congress to abolish the district Indian agents in eastern Oklahoma. It is the avowed duty of the United States to protect the full-blood Indians, and the withdrawal at this time of the effective protection afforded them by the district agents means not only failure and refusal to protect, but in the opinion of this society it will result in incalculable injury and loss to thousands of full-blood Indians, including minors who have inherited valuable estates.

Resolved, That the presidents of this society are hereby directed to at once transmit these resolutions to the Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C., and that said Secretary be, and is hereby, requested to immediately transmit copy of same to Congress or committees thereof, and to the President of the United States and to the Oklahoma delegation in Congress. Passed the advisory committee by unanimous vote.

Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE,
OFFICE OF DISTRICT AGENT,
Sapulpa, Okla., August 14, 1912.

Hon. DANA H. KELSEY,
United States Indian Superintendent, Muskogee, Okla.

SIR: For your information, I have the honor to call your attention to the fact that the case of the State of Oklahoma v. Josiah G. Davis, former county judge of Creek County, Okla., charged with embezzlement, will be called for trial at the next criminal term of the Creek County district court. The defendant is charged with embezzling $6,750 of funds belonging to the estate of Rowie E. Pittman, a deceased minor citizen of the Creek Nation of one-half degree of blood. His heirs are his mother, Lucinda G. Pittman, a full-blood citizen of the Creek Nation; his father, Robert G. Pittman, a white man; and his brothers, Robert G. Pittman, jr., and Buster Pittman, one-half blood minor citizens of the Creek Nation.

On February 15, 1912, information was filed in the court of Justice of the Peace W. E. Root, of Sapulpa, Okla., against former County Judge Josiah G. Davis, charging him with the crime of embezzlement. On February 16, 1912, warrant was issued for his arrest. On the same date the defendant was arrested, appeared in court, waived arraignment, and was released on bail. On March 4, 1912, the defendant appeared in court and waived his preliminary hearing. He was held to the district court of Creek County by the justice of the peace, bond being fixed, given, and approved in the sum of $5,000.

The arrest of former County Judge Davis, of Creek County, was the result of alleged fraudulent transactions in his court while he was on the bench.

Immediately after former County Judge Davis retired from office, his successor, Warren G. Brown, called upon the department for assistance in checking up probate cases, in which cases it was alleged that minor citizens of the Five Civilized Tribes were being robbed. Special Assistant District Indian Agent L. B. Locke, was assigned to Sapulpa; more than 600 citations were issued to delinquent guardians; reports, which had been in arrears for more than three years, were filed, and many thousands of dollars were saved to the minor citizens.

I was assigned to this office on December 8, 1911. I was called by the county judge into a large number of important cases, assistance being rendered me by Probate Attorney D. H. Bynum, Supervising District Indian Agent C. F. Bliss, and Special District Agent Fred S. Cook. As a result of the work performed by this office for the probate court of Creek County, there was saved in eight months for minor allottees, the sum of $46,784.43.

In Creek County, Okla., there are 1,691 probate cases. There are 14 probate cases in which the personal property and the real estate of each minor is worth more than $100,000. There are more than 200 cases in which the personal property and real estate of each minor is worth more than $25,000. All of these estates are rapidly increasing in value.

The production of oil and natural gas accounts for the immense valuations of the estates of minor citizens of the Creek Nation in this county. The increase in the price of crude oil produced from the lands of these children, and the subsequent increase in the number of wells drilled will cause the estates to double in value during the next year.

The county judge, Warren H. Brown, is conscientiously doing his duty. On account of the vast amount of business in his court, however, he is unable to give detailed attention to all the large estates over which he has jurisdiction, and he is continually calling upon this office for reports and investigations. It is the desire of the county judge to prevent a repetition of probate conditions as they existed during the administration of his predecessor in office. He is expecting the assistance of this office in preventing robbery of estates of Indian children.

Respectfully,
FRANK B. LONG,
District Agent.

IDABEL, OKLA., September 1, 1912.

Mr. DANA H. KELSEY,
United States Indian Superintendent, Muskogee, Okla.

SIR: Supplemental to the report this day forwarded your office on the regular form, I beg to submit to you, an additional and more detailed report as to what has been accomplished in this district during the month of August, 1911, as follows:

QUITCLAIM DEEDS.

In May of 1911, when you visited McCurtain County, and announced that there would be a new district agency created, and an investigation into the condition of affairs in McCurtain County, of parties who had taken deeds which were not in strict accordance with the law, immediately began to quitclaim even before the investigation had taken definite form and shape. As a result of your visit we are unable to say just how much land was quitclaimed, but I am informed from reliable sources that thousands of acres were quitclaimed back to the allottee. However, there was much land in this county and other counties clouded by illegal deeds, taken in contravention to the acts of Congress, and during the month we beg to report quitclaims to the following allottees, giving the acreage, and the county in which the land was located, as follows:

Name.	Acreage.	County.
George Tonihka	240	McCurtain.
Julius Jefferson	80	Pittsburg.
Philiston Juzan	110	Carter.
Onnitima Sampson	140	Jefferson.
Levi Tikubbi	120	Bryan.
Lincie Taylor (née Tisho)	100	Garvin.
Hampton Wright	160	McCurtain.
Semie Walker	240	Do.
Harriet Brown	90	Do.
Philiston Byington	110.04	Stephens and Grady.
Anthony Johnson	100	Stephens.
Fyahoke Sampson	160	Do.
Phyllis Williams	160	Do.
Siney Colbert	100	Jefferson.
Agnes Webster (née Stevens)	100	Do.
Benjamin McFarland	100	Grady.
Edna John	120	Jefferson.
Hilton Johnson	100	Do.
Amos John	110	Do.
Fliston Tisho	100	Garvin.
Ellis Ebahotubbi	80	Jefferson.
Annie Johnson	120	Do.
Dixon Parker	130	Carter.
Enos Williams (née Tontubbi)	40	Bryan and McCurtain.
Thompson Battiest	100	Jefferson.
Sallie Battice	57.51	Do.
Levi Sampson	101.50	Stephens.
Denison Walker	65	McCurtain.
Moses Williams	110	Carter.
Sean Wood	140	Carter and Garvin.
Joe Hotintobe	170	Stephens.
Henson King	119.43	Murray.
Emma Morris	90	Love.
Laymon Bohanon	100	Stephens.
Collin Shaw	100	Do.
Levi Tikubbi	100	Bryan.

Making a total aggregate of 4,113.48 acres, quitclaimed through this office.

In addition to this we could have procured quitclaims to other lands, but it appears that accepting them would have interfered with the work of the arbitration board about to assemble in this county and pass upon the titles submitted to them.

INHERITED LANDS—THROUGH THE COUNTY COURT.

One of the features in this county was where sales of lands by full-blood heirs were put through the county court of McCurtain County, and in this respect the Indians, in many cases, received no money, or, after the consideration was paid them it was taken away by trickery, sometimes by the very vendees of the land and sometimes by others.

In accordance with the agreement which I made with the county judge I thought it prudent until conditions changed to place this money in a bank to the credit of the Indians, subject to the O. K. of the district Indian agent.

In this connection we have handled 10 accounts, representing a total aggregate of $4,234.75, and the Indian has our assistance in disbursing his accounts in a manner which will best subserve his interests. We have assisted the Indian in these cases in buying horses, furniture, houses, etc., in the same manner that we do where the money is directly under departmental supervision. This has added more work to our office, but in view of the conditions we thought it better to accept these terms of the county judge than to have the money stolen from the Indian or wantonly wasted.

In the matter of these claims it appears that Wade Battiest and Allington Battiest sold their interests in a dead claim through the courts here, but was unable to discover where the money went. The only thing they had to show that this money was due them was a slip of paper saying that $285 was due Wade Battiest and $185 was due Allington Battiest. After consultation with the county judge, a search of the records, and an investigation of the matter, we finally located this money in the First State Bank of Idabel, Okla., and procured deposit slips and pass books for these Indians, and in this manner effected a saving of $480.

In the case where Eliza Willis sold her interest in a dead claim through the county court for the sum of $404.15, the vendees of this land made the check out to Lizzie Ishcomer. We took this matter up with the First State Bank, but could not discover any trace of money belonging to Eliza Willis. We also took this matter up with Earl & Montgomery, of Garvin, Okla., vendees of the land, searched the records, consulted the county judge, and investigated the matter thoroughly, and finally discovered that Messrs. Earl & Montgomery had made the check out to the wrong parties, although the records of the court showed that Eliza Willis was the vendor of the land. We then procured a pass book for this allottee, and thus effected a saving of $404.15 where the Indian would have been unable to trace the money.

In the matter of a sale of the interest of Wickliss McCoy in a dead claim, this was presented for approval to the county judge, and I asked that this matter be held up until we could furnish an appraisement and investigate the consideration which Wickliss McCoy had received. Upon investigation, I found that the deed was a forgery, and that the allottee had received nothing for the purported deed conveying his interest in 190 acres of land, and the court refused to approve this deed, thus effecting a saving to this Indian of $2,000.

In the matter of Sophia Jackson, it appears that she sold her interest for $625 in a dead claim, through the county court, and had received only $125, paying her attorneys $200 for their fee, but they could give me no information as to where the balance of the money went, nor did the Indian know. However, I investigated it, and collected $187.50 for the Indian from Buck Thompson, of Idabel, Okla., and the bank of Idabel, and there is some more to be collected yet.

On account of the investigation that has been going on here, we were unable to take up other claims wherein the Choctaw Lumber Co. and Mr. Whitehead, of McAlester, Okla., were interested, because, as I understand it, these claims were to be submitted to the board of arbitration, which is about to set here. However, prior to the creation of this board, we took up the matter of Jessie Lewis's dead claim, wherein Mr. Whitehead was involved, and prevented the attorneys for the Indian from agreeing to a compromise, which, in my judgment, was disastrous to the financial interests of the Indian, and thus effected a saving of $1,000 to the Indian. The compromise, as I understood it, was to be for the appraised value or over the appraised value, while the land was worth $1,000 more than what they agreed on in the compromise.

PROBATE MINOR MATTERS.

Probate minor matters in this county have been in a serious condition and needed the attention of the department, and Messrs. Hill & McCurtain, tribal attorneys for the Choctaw Nation, agreed to take up these matters and go over them, and I believe Mr. McCurtain is about to move here and take up this work and other work in conjunction with our office. However, in investigating the condition of affairs here in this county we were informed that the agents of the Southwestern Surety & Insurance Co., a corporation duly organized under the laws of the State of Oklahoma, were doing "wild-cat" business in the name of this company.

In connection with my work, I adjusted the complaint of Mr. Dyer in a probate matter with Mr. Barry, the agent of the Southwestern Surety & Insurance Co., stationed at Idabel, and subsequent to this time Mr. Cook and I had talked this matter over and went over and took Mr. Barry to the prosecuting attorney of this county, Mr. Barrett, and had Mr. Barry make a full statement which was taken down by Mr. Barrett's stenographer, as to how Indian minor moneys were handled in McCurtain County. During the course of this statement Mr. McCurtain, attorney for the Choctaw Nation, and Mr. Fred S. Cook came into Mr. Barrett's office and this matter was gone over thoroughly by all present.

We discovered the modus operandi of the parties concerned was this:

That a sale of land would be put through the county court involving a minor's interest, and the money derived from the sale would be placed in the First State Bank of Idabel to the credit of James E. Whitehead, attorney at law, McAlester, Okla. It appears further, from the statement of Mr. Barry that he was the employee of Whitehead and the Southwestern Surety & Insurance Co., and that when a sale of minor land was put through the court Barry, acting as agent for the Southwestern Insurance Co., wrote the bond for the guardian who put through the sale, the guardian, in most cases, being a full-blood Indian, and financially irresponsible and unable to make a personal bond.

It appears further that the Southwestern Surety & Insurance Co. had filed a power of attorney in McCurtain County, as required by law, authorizing its agent to make bonds for guardians and administrators and specifying that the moneys derived from the sale must be deposited in the name of the guardian and subject to the joint control of the guardian and bonding company. It appears that Mr. Whitehead flagrantly violated the instructions and authority contained in the power of attorney and changed the joint-control agreement so as to make this money, or any money derived from the sale of minors' land, be deposited in the name of the company or its agent at Idabel, Okla. However, we found that the company had no knowledge of this, or denied that they knew anything about it, though they admitted that they had an indemnifying bond from Mr. Whitehead for everything done in McCurtain County.

Mr. Barry made the Indian agree to turn over this money to him as agent, and the money derived from any sale was deposited, not in the name of the guardian but in the name of Mr. Whitehead. The sums were all deposited in one account—in a lump sum, so to speak—and were not kept in the name of any guardian. Mr. Whitehead would then use this sum which was deposited in his name and which had been derived from the sale of minor lands to purchase other lands sold through the probate court, or sold by full-blood Indians, wherein they were heirs of a decedent.

It appears further that Mr. Whitehead was not paying any interest for the use of this money, and it also appears that a fellow by the name of H. M. Hemperley was stationed here prior to Mr. Barry and acted as the agent of the company and of Mr. Whitehead.

In this manner Mr. Whitehead used thousands of dollars, and while the records of the court showed that the guardian had sold the land, yet he was unable to show that he had any money in his name, but that the money was in the name of Mr. Whitehead, of McAlester.

It appears further that the Southwestern Surety & Insurance Co. was induced to come to Idabel by Mr. Whitehead to write bonds, and he gave them, for what was done in McCurtain County, an indemnifying bond to protect them. As you are aware, and in accordance with your instructions, Mr. Cook, special agent; Mr. Ward, supervising district agent; and myself proceeded to Denison and took this matter up directly with the officers of the company, and we subsequently returned here and went over the account of each minor wherein the Southwestern Surety & Insurance Co. were bondsmen, audited this account, and found out just what was due each minor. The company then, by its secretary, Mr. Van Wyck, promised to forward us a draft in the sum of $32,029.27, and we beg to submit herewith the following list of minors wherein the Southwestern Surety & Insurance Co. were bondsmen, and wherein Mr. Whitehead had these minors' moneys deposited in his name and was using the same for speculative purposes, as follows:

This shows an actual recovery of cash to these minors of $32,027.29. You will see from the above statement that Mr. Whitehead was using these minors' money and was not paying any interest for the use thereof, and while the company as contradistinguished from its agent here is, in my judgment, not guilty of what Mr. Whitehead has been doing, yet the recovery of the money as specified in the list herewith submitted will serve as a preventative of such pernicious practice in the future.

It appears further in this connection that Judge Barnes had, prior to the time the company had come here to do business, published a statement in the newspapers of McCurtain County, warning the public that they should patronize this company, as it was financially responsible, and there is no doubt in my mind that the county judge of this county was fully cognizant of the manner in which this money was used and fully cognizant of the purpose for which Mr. Whitehead used this money.

In the investigation of this matter, then, we have actually recovered for the minors of this county the sum of $32,027.29.

In the famous and infamous matter of John Lemon, a full-blood Indian, guardian, wherein he is guardian of Mary, Jessie, and Joseph Taylor, Indian minors, and in the matter of Leon Alemohtubbi, a full-blood Choctaw Indian, who is guardian of Elas, Ilis, and Letty Alemohtubbi, Indian minors, it appears that Judge Barnes, without acting as county judge of McCurtain County, in direct contravention to the law, loaned $14,000 of the above-named minors' money to C. Gamble, of the Bank of Garvin, on his mere personal note, and without a court order, though these notes show that Judge Barnes was surety thereon. In these cases we took this up with Mr. Gamble, and while Judge Barnes said he would be sued rather than turn this matter over, yet we now have in our possession a bank deposit slip wherein this money is placed to the credit of the guardian as guardian of the minors above enumerated and not held by C. Gamble as heretofore. In this connection we actually recovered the neat sum of $14,000.

In the matter of Joe Ben, it appears that Judge Barnes was using $2,000 of his ward's money, and he has also agreed to fix this matter up, though we have not had time so far to fix the matter.

In the matter of the Dukes children, it appears that $3,900 of this money was loaned to Claude Morris and Mr. Leggett, though it appears that real estate security was given to the guardian, as guardian, yet no authority of law or order of court was made to the guardian to loan this money. We took these matters up with the respective parties, and we have now an order of court authorizing the guardian to loan $3,900, but the same is secured, and there is a record to show to whom this money belongs. In the event of the death of the guardian and the parties who had the money it would have been impossible to recover this money; but now the minors' money is secured. In this connection, then, we have actually saved and made secure to these minors the sum of $3,900. When we took this matter up with the parties named, they agreed immediately to return the money to us, but it was not our policy to have this money returned, but to see that the loans were good and that there was sufficient security, and in this, we have made good.

In the matter of Lena Tushka, a minor, we took up this sale with the county court, and although the return of sale recited that $900 would be paid for this land by the vendee, the Choctaw Lumber Co., yet we made the Choctaw Lumber Co. agree to pay $1,200, and in this connection effected a saving of $300.

In the Susan Ward matter we effected a saving of $50 by furnishing an appraisement, and in the matter of Mr. Johnson we effected a saving of $25 by furnishing appraisements and taking the matter up and adjusting it. We had the Stave Co., of Bokohoma, Okla., pay $25 for damages done on this ward's allotment, and in the matter of Adeline Christie and Nelson Christie we took up their complaint with the Choctaw Lumber Co., and besides avoiding litigation, collected the sum of $117.50.

There are other minor complaints, but on account of the multitudinous duties connected with straightening out the matters heretofore mentioned, it has been impossible to give these matters the attention that we should like, and besides they are insignificant when compared with the gigantic steals which we have finally straightened out.

In addition to that, while we have been busy with this investigation, the county judge resigned as a result thereof, and lawyers here were in doubt as to the legality of any business transacted through the county court of McCurtain County. In short, the resignation of the county judge conjoined with the investigation has practically paralyzed probate business, and in this connection it has given us an opportunity to catch up. Much work yet remains to be done, but we can safely say that we have started the good work and we believe that McCurtain County will not see a repetition of what has gone before.

APPLICATIONS FOR THE REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS.

We have had about 20 applications for the removal of restrictions, and so far have forwarded 7 to your office with reports, and we are waiting for take-offs from other offices before we forward the balance to your office. In connection with the handling of restricted money, we have let the contract for four houses, bought three teams of mules for Indians, several wagons, and some furniture, and delivered checks to them as the exigency of the case demanded.

LEASE COMPLAINTS.

In the matter of lease complaints affecting agricultural lands, the Indians in this district have most of their lands in the Chickasaw Nation, and we have taken up approximately 20 of these complaints and attempted through the other offices in the Chickasaw Nation to collect the back rentals due the lessors. In addition to that we have now four agricultural leases ready to forward to your department extending over a period of five years on the homestead allotment of full-blood Indians, and one or two which have been returned to this office for additional report. We have collected over $200 and delivered the same to the Indian lessors in lease money.

In the Catherine Taylor matter, we procured an agricultural lease for five years on unrestricted land at a money consideration of $200, with improvements in the way of fencing and housing, and barns, where the allottee was ready and willing to lease for $150 without improvements. In this connection we saved to the allottee $250 without figuring the improvements.

We have also made several one-year leases for Indians and have obtained more favorable terms than they could themselves, and we have given a great deal of advice to Indians and to prospective lessees on the legality of leases.

APPLICATION FOR APPROVAL OF CONVEYANCES BY FULL-BLOOD HEIRS.

In the matter of approval of conveyances by full-blood heirs, we have had one application filed which will be forwarded to your department just as soon as we can interview one of the heirs and make an appraisement. However, we have not had an appraiser, and my duties here will not permit me to devote much time to appraising. I believe that we have also two other cases on hand ready to forward to your department for action, and have interviewed the heirs, reported and taken the testimony in two other cases for other agencies.

LETTERS WRITTEN DURING THE MONTH.

In the matter of writing letters, we have written approximately 1,000 letters during the month of August relative to various matters, and we have about 70 now unanswered. The reason for this is that the work here is too voluminous and the duties which I must perform in this investigation somewhat retarded, or has retarded, a prompt answer to all letters. In addition to that we have many full-blood Indians living in this district, and every business transaction that we transact must be transacted through an interpreter, which is tedious.

INVESTIGATION.

In addition to the regular duties performed by me as district agent and in conjunction therewith I have devoted most of my time to investigating conditions in McCurtain County, and as a result of this investigation we forced County Judge T. J. Barnes to hand in his resignation. In this connection I desire to say that we were ably assisted by that fearless man, Dr. Stolper, general attorney for the department of charities and corrections of the State of Oklahoma, and I desire to say here that while I believe we could have forced Judge Barnes out of office by disbarment proceedings and criminal actions, yet we could never have procured his resignation at this time without the assistance of Dr. Stolper.

In accordance with your instructions, we have kept the State in the front in this fight, and I can truthfully say that the resignation of the county judge himself is an achievement of no small note and importance, as he has been the disturbing element in this community since statehood, and the fountainhead from which emanated the diabolical grafting of Indians that has been going on in this county in the past.

An analysis of the causes which revolutionized the moral sentiment of this county and which led to the deposing of the county judge shows that you, yourself, started the wave of reform and the investigation when you came here in person and announced that you would create a district agency of McCurtain County, and see that the individuals who had been transgressing the criminal law would be placed in the penitentiary.

When I came here I took up the work and, with the assistance of Mr. Fred S. Cook, special agent from your office, who has been identified with every move I have made, I have been able to carry on this work.

Only we on the ground will ever know what a battle has been waged in the investigating of the frauds perpetrated on the Indian in this county, and while we have suffered a strain, yet the individuals who committed crimes were suffering from the remorse of conscience and the fear of the law. We have been insulted, and Davis James, my Indian policeman, was arrested on a warrant sworn out in the county court of this country solely on account of ill feeling, and after the State courts had dismissed this case an attempt was made to interest the United States commissioner, at Hugo, Okla., to arrest Davis James and Mr. Reynolds, connected with this office. When this failed Mr. Reynolds was vilely assaulted on the streets. However, we have continued steadily in this work, and we have gathered evidence that will revoke the commissions of 22 notary publics who have commissions as notary publics in this county.

It appears that some of such notary publics have been guilty of crimes, and some of them have been in the habit of taking warranty deeds in blank and the acknowledgments of other instruments in blank and allowing them to be filled out at the will of the person who had them in possession. In addition we have 10 or 12 that we will investigate in the future, and when sufficient evidence is forthcoming we will also take steps to revoke their commissions, and I am satisfied that this action on our part will prevent the pernicious practice of taking blank deeds and the commission of other offenses by notary publics; but not only have we collected evidence relative to notary publics, but we have specialized somewhat in the collection of evidence that will show a transgression of the criminal law, of the statutes of Oklahoma, wherein land grafters are concerned, and relating to Indian matters, and as a result we will present evidence to the next grand jury.

In some of the cases we have evidence showing crimes of perjury, bribery, embezzlement, forgery, and malfeasance in office.

The collection of this evidence has meant an enormous amount of work in the nature of procuring affidavits, interviewing parties, and running down clues, and the fight which we have waged has affected two banks in this county and shook the county from boundary to boundary.

In the investigation here we have had the hearty cooperation of District Judge Hardy and the county attorney, Mr. Barrett, and I also wish to mention that Mr. McCurtain has been here some, representing the Choctaw Nation. But I desire to specially mention Dr. Stolper, of the department of charities and corrections of the State of Oklahoma, and Mr. Fred S. Cook, special agent from your department, than whom there are to be found no more able men in this kind of work. Of course, you know Mr. Cook has been here with me on the ground in most of the fight.

To summarize, then, what we have accomplished this month, we can show as follows:

County Judge T. J. Barnes, of McCurtain County, Okla., deposed, and this in spite of pressure and influence. Incidentally, I may say here that when he was deposed the king of wrong was dethroned.

Fifty-one thousand seven hundred and sixty-nine dollars and seventy-nine cents saved to Indian minors and allottees.

Title to 4,113.48 acres quitclaimed to allottees through this office, clearing the title to that many acres of land without the intervention of the slow and tedious machinery of the courts of justice.

Evidence collected sufficient to revoke the commissions of 21 notaries public.

Evidence to present to the grand jury affecting 22 persons, including many prominent people, such as judges and lawyers.

The foundation laid for the investigation of others who have transgressed the law, and also some evidence collected affecting 12 other notaries public.

One thousand letters written.

One thousand take-offs made.

A complete revolution in the moral sentiment of McCurtain County, and indirectly setting an example to the entire Mistletoe State.

The hearty cooperation of county and State officials.

And, lastly, I desire to mention the creation of the board of arbitration, which recently convened, and was composed of Dr. Stolper, Mr. Kelsey, and Mr. Humphrey, which will investigate the titles of tens of thousands of acres of land and which will save an enormous sum to the Indians and to the taxpayers of the State, and this without ill feeling.

However, I have already written my recommendations and approval relative to this board.

Respectfully,

GRATTAN G. MCVAY,
District Agent.

AUGUST 15, 1912.

Mr. James E. Gresham, special assistant to the Attorney General, under date of September 1, 1911, reported to Dana H. Kelsey, United States Indian superintendent, that "on the 7th instant a grand jury assembled here returned indictments upon 17 counts, including three charges each, against one of the prominent politicians of the county and the former clerk of the district court. With one exception, we have the cooperation of the local State officers, and now expect to get some results without having to go away from home to do it.

Your district agent for Seminole, Hughes, and Okfuskee Counties rendered valuable assistance in the preparation and presentation of these cases.

John Cordell, district agent, under date of September 8, 1911, reported to the United States Indian superintendent, Muskogee, Okla.:

The result of the work of the grand jury, as far as I am able to ascertain, is as follows:

(1) Sam Norton, of Seminole, Okla., known as "the king of grafters" among certain class of land pirates operating in Seminole County, was indicted in three cases.

(2) R. D. Milton, of Wewoka, a proficient land grafter, recently convicted in Pottawatomie County and sentenced to a term of seven years in the State penitentiary for forgery in connection with land matters, was indicted in two cases.

(3) George B. Payne, one of the grafting fraternity, formerly justice of the peace in Seminole County, was indicted in seven cases.

(4) Joe E. Lawhead, formerly district court clerk in Seminole County, now employed in the office of the clerk of the supreme court at Oklahoma City was indicted in four cases.

(5) Rheub McDonald, a laborer, used by the grafters as a tool, in my opinion, was indicted in one case.

(6) Tom Wright, a member of the grafting fraternity in good standing, now running a meat market in Wewoka, was indicted in two cases.

(7) Little George Crump, well known as a land pirate in Seminole and adjoining counties, was indicted in two cases.

This makes a total of 21 cases against 7 individuals. Crump has already been convicted of forgery in Pottawatomie and McIntosh Counties, and the cases are pending in the criminal court of appeals.

APRIL 13, 1912.

Hon. WARREN H. BROWN,
County Judge Creek County, Sapulpa, Okla.

SIR: Under your informal request of recent date we have made an investigation of probate cases Nos. 36 and 182, entitled "Estate of Bessie Clayton, a minor, B. B. Burnett, curator," and "Estate of William McKinley Clayton, a minor, B. B. Burnett, curator," respectively, and beg to report as follows:

An examination of the records of these cases fails to show the filing of inventories and appraisements of the estates of said minors, as required by section 5494 of Snyder's Laws of Oklahoma, 1909, which provides as follows:

"SEC. 5494. Inventory and account of estate of ward. Every guardian must return to the county court an inventory of the estate of his ward within three months after his appointment, and annually thereafter. When the value of the estate exceeds the sum of $20,000, semiannual returns must be made to the county court. The court may, upon application made for that purpose by any person, compel the guardian to render an account to the county court of the estate of his ward. The inventories and accounts so to be returned or rendered must be sworn to by the guardian. All the estate of the ward described in the first inventory must be appraised by appraisers appointed, sworn, and acting in the manner provided for regulating the settlement of the estate of decedents. Such inventory, with the appraisement of the property therein described must be recorded by the judge of the county court, in a proper book kept in his office for that purpose. Whenever any other property of the estate of any ward is discovered, not included in the inventory of the estate already returned, and whenever any other property has been succeeded to or acquired by any ward, or for his benefit, the like proceedings must be had for the return and appraisement thereof that are herein provided in relation to the first inventory and return." And therefore it is impossible to determine from said records whether the whole estates have been accounted for by the curator.

The larger part of the incomes of these estates appears to arise from their mineral properties, in that both are underlaid with oil. The receipts of the curator check with the data of royalties disbursed by the United States Indian superintendent for the Union Agency and the Gulf Pipe Line Co. after the leases were removed from departmental supervision. However, the items of bonuses have only been verified by the papers in the files.

The curatorship of B. B. Burnett dates from January 4, 1907, and reports to the number of five were filed on the following dates, to wit:

Bessie Clayton.

No.	Date.	Period covered.	Balance due ward.
1	Aug. 22, 1908	Jan. 4, 1907–July 1, 1908	$292.43

1	Aug. 22, 1908	Jan. 4, 1907–July 1, 1908	$5,268.00
2	Sept. 7, 1910	July 1, 1908–July 1, 1909	14,132.48
3	Sept. 10, 1910	July 1, 1909–July 1, 1910	24,838.55
4	Dec. 30, 1911	July 1, 1910–June 30, 1911	23,871.16
5	Feb. 17, 1912	July 1, 1911–Dec. 31, 1911	28,810.19

It will be noted, therefore, that the curator has not filed reports, as required by the statute above mentioned. The curator has also failed to file vouchers or receipts for expenditures in the following cases, or oath certified by the judge of the fact of payment, as required by section 5388 of Snyder's Laws of Oklahoma, 1909, which provides, as follows:

"SEC. 5388. Settlement of items without vouchers: On the settlement of his account he may be allowed any item of expenditure, not exceeding $15, for which no voucher is produced, if such item be supported by his own uncontradicted oath reduced to writing and certified by the judge positive to the fact of payment, specifying when, where, and to whom it was made; but such allowances in the whole must not exceed $300 against any one estate, nor over 10 per cent of the inventory appraised value of any estate under $3,000."

The records in these cases further show the filing of several petitions for the removal of the curator on grounds of mismanagement and fraud, among them the profiting in a lease on lands of Ernest Clayton, deceased, to the Indiahoma Oil Co. However, without considering these allegations, the records of the office of the United States Indian superintendent show the transfer of that portion of said lease covering the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 4, township 17 north, range 12 east, on the 3d day of July, 1907, to the Thompson Oil Co., alleged originally to have been composed of Rufus B. Thompson, attorney for the curator and of the law firm of Thompson & Smith; Birch C. Burnett, brother of the curator; and Minnie Egan, which, of itself, indirectly interests the curator and so taints the original transaction that no fair-minded person could be acquainted with the fact without being impressed with the idea of fraud.

Notwithstanding the fact that large sums have come into the hands of this curator, investment has been made of less than 50 per cent of the same, and said moneys have been allowed to lie idle except as hereinafter set out. The curator alleges that said funds were deposited in the Farmers & Merchants' State Bank, of Sapulpa, and offered to furnish pass books showing the dates of the deposits. However, after being given full opportunity, such pass books were not exhibited, as promised, and it is reasonable to assume that said funds were not placed to the credit of these minors, but have been handled by the curator as his own.

The first investment was made under order of June 15, 1908, to secure stock in the Sapulpa Hotel Co. to the amount of $7,500. To the best of our information said curator was president of said hotel company, which was organized for the purpose of booming the town of Sapulpa and was not considered to be a successful proposition from a business standpoint. It is significant to observe that all the proceedings with reference to this purchase were had on the one day above set out. The appraisers report the assets to be the building and lot, valued at $85,000; the liabilities, one mortgage of $39,000, another of $14,500; and the capital stock of $25,000. They further allege that said premises have been leased for 10 years at $6,500 per annum, and on this basis come to the conclusion that the stock has a market value of 100 per cent. By what process of reasoning or mathematics such conclusion was reached is not known to us. However, from a practical standpoint, it would seem that the interest on the loans would be about $4,280, leaving a balance of $2,220 from the rents, and that such remaining sum would probably be consumed to a considerable extent by the payment for repairs, insurance, and taxes. Considering that $75,000 would be a large price for the building, it will only be a question of a comparatively short time when the capital stock has practically no value. From reliable information it has been shown that our conclusions as to the value of this investment were shared by the public generally at Sapulpa, who looked upon said enterprise as one of public benefit, without hope or promise of return from any funds invested therein except in the cases as to the money of various minors placed therein under glowing appraisements made by a few public-spirited citizens.

Under this purchase, $1,500 of which was expended for Bessie Clayton and $6,000 for William McKinley Clayton, no vouchers have been filed showing payment of purchase price or any evidence as to the amount of stock purchased or from whom.

Under order of court purchase was made of lot 8, block 79, and lots 13 and 14, block 80, of the town of Snyder, Okla., from John Dermott, on May 23, 1908. The consideration was $25,000, which was borne equally by the two minor grantees. These lots contain business property, the first being a one-story rock structure about 25 feet wide and 100 feet deep, the second a two-story brick building 50 by 80 feet, without a basement, the lower floor being used for a drug store and bank, the upper by the telephone exchange, lodge room, and several attorneys.

The next investments were those involving the purchase of property in the Burnett addition to the town of Sapulpa, as follows:

Lots 13–24, inclusive, block 12, Burnett addition: Bates B. Burnett to Creek County Investment Co., a corporation, executed October 15, 1910, filed January 30, 1911; Creek County Investment Co. to Bessie Clayton, consideration $4,200, executed January 6, 1911, filed for record January 30, 1911, taxes due, with penalty, for 1909 $26.79, for 1910 $16.32.

Lots 17 and 18, block 14, Burnett addition: Bates B. Burnett to L. B. Jackson and Josiah G. Davis, executed March 2, 1909, recorded March 2, 1909; Josiah G. Davis to L. B. Jackson, executed November 28, 1910, recorded November 28, 1910; L. B. Jackson to Bessie Clayton, consideration $700, executed December 7, 1910, recorded January 30, 1911.

Block 13, Burnett addition: Bates B. Burnett to Creek County Investment Co., a corporation, executed October 15, 1910, recorded January 30, 1911; Creek County Investment Co. to William McKinley Clayton, consideration $7,200, executed January 6, 1911, recorded May 18, 1911, taxes due, with penalty, for 1909 $53.59, for 1910 $32.64.

Lots 15 and 16, block 14, Burnett addition: Bates B. Burnett to L. B. Jackson and Josiah G. Davis, executed March 2, 1909, recorded March 2, 1909; Josiah G. Davis to L. B. Jackson, executed November 28, 1909, recorded November 28, 1909; L. B. Jackson to William McKinley Clayton, consideration $700, executed December 7, 1910, recorded January 30, 1911.

It will be perceived from the above record of conveyances that in two instances the immediate grantor was the Creek County Investment Co., of which Birch C. Burnett, brother of the curator, is president, C. W. Wills, assistant cashier of the Farmers and Merchants Bank, is secretary, and in which the curator himself is a stockholder. These properties lie on the eastern outskirts of Sapulpa, are unimproved, with the exception of some sidewalk, and are in the immediate vicinity of a graveyard, which drains on a portion thereof, and from a fair and impartial estimate of the values at the respective times of purchase could not have been worth more than half of the consideration paid; and said values have not since increased but rather have diminished.

Aside from the question of the curator being interested in the sale of the land to the ward, the back taxes due on the property, the exorbitant price paid, and the illegality of the transactions by reason of same having been made before a county judge related to said curator by affinity within the degree prohibited by statute (to be hereafter discussed), the land constitutes a portion of the allotment of Louie Tiger, deceased, and the title thereto is now and has been clouded by litigation.

As above mentioned, the legality of the purchases of the property is seriously questioned by reason of the fact that Josiah G. Davis, county judge, who ordered and confirmed the same, was the brother-in-law of the curator, Bates B. Burnett. This question was recently passed upon in the county court of Muskogee County in the matter of the curatorship of Edith Durant, a minor, Bates B. Burnett, curator, No. 1412, the conclusion of the court being as follows:

"It is therefore my opinion that the actions of Judge Josiah G. Davis herein, as judge of the county court of Creek County, Okla., in the matter of the curatorship of Edith Durant, a minor, while sections 5139 and 1984 were in effect, by reason of the relationship existing between Davis and Burnett, who was a party interested in such proceeding, are void."

The purchases affected by such decision are set out as follows:

Bessie Clayton.

Sapulpa Hotel stock	$1,500
Lots 13–24, block 12	4,200
Lots 17 and 18, block 14	700
Property in Snyder, Okla	12,500
Total	18,900

William McKinley Clayton.

Sapulpa Hotel Co	$6,000
Block 13	7,200
Lots 15 and 16, block 14	700
Property in Snyder, Okla	12,500
Total	26,400

We believe for the reasons before set out that these sales are invalid and that the minors have no title thereto, and it accordingly becomes your duty to reconsider same on the merits with a view to repurchasing the property if the facts in the case so justify. As to the Snyder property, to our best information the same was not worth over $18,000 at the time of the purchase. Nevertheless, the income has been sufficient, the town is growing, and in time there is a good possibility of the attempted purchase becoming a fair investment, and we accordingly recommend that this purchase be ratified by you in appropriate proceedings. As to the remainder of the sales, we recommend that because of the inadequacy of consideration, the interest of the guardian in the property and the clouded title to the land, that same be not ratified, but that the guardian be required to account for the money paid therefor.

The records further show that large amounts of money have come into the hands of the curator, and that, in comparison to the income, the amount necessary for the maintenance and education is modest, to wit, $750 each per annum; therefore at this time there is a reported balance in cash due Bessie Clayton of $26,189.61 and William McKinley Clayton of $28,810.19. These funds, as heretofore mentioned, have evidently been handled by the curator without sanction of the court and without interest, except that he has credited said wards, or rather charged himself, with 6 per cent interest on the yearly balances. This generous dealing with himself can not be passed by without exception by us for the reason that in this community there is no money loaned at less than 8 per cent, and then with good and sufficient security, which Burnett has not attempted to furnish. Nor does simply the charge of 8 per cent interest on the yearly balances show a proper accounting to the wards, and we have accordingly had the daily balances which have come into the curator's hands computed by an expert accountant and charged the sum of 3 per cent interest thereon, which, to the best of our information, is the prevailing rate. The increase in interest, computed as aforesaid, is as follows:

	Bessie.	William McKinley.
On yearly balances, including accrued interest on daily balances	$914.15	$1,207.62
Interest on daily balances	744.32	1,280.45
Total	1,658.47	2,488.07

In discussing the use of the funds of these wards and the large amount of cash on hand, it seems proper at this time to point out to you the failure of the curator to pay taxes and to the incurring, without any justification whatsoever, of the prescribed penalty, which latter item should be charged against him.

Bessie Clayton.

	Taxes.	Penalty.

Other than the taxes above referred to, since 1908 no taxes have been paid on the personalty of said wards. These taxes, which are below set out, are being resisted by the curator, in legal proceedings, on the ground that they are excessive, because they are based on the assessment of the town of Sapulpa, whereas said minors do not reside within the corporate limits of said town, and the taxes of their residence are considerably lower. This contention by the curator appears to be meritorious, provided, however, that the expenses of the litigation will not exceed the difference in the amount of taxes.

Personal taxes, Bessie Clayton.

1909	191.00
1910	35.55
Tax ferret, 1910	560.34
Taxes, 1911	730.07
Total	1,874.72

Personal taxes, William McKinley Clayton.

1908	$359.78
1909	181.45
1910	337.72
Tax ferret, 1910	430.65
Taxes, 1911	983.55
Total	2,293.15

Thus it seems that the curator is liable to the said wards for funds which he has not accounted for, as follows:

Bessie Clayton.

Void purchases	$18,900.00
Taxes and penalties	55.27
Interest	1,658.47
No. vouchers	6,943.73
Total	27,557.47

William McKinley Clayton.

Void purchases	$26,400.00
Taxes and penalties	107.41
Interest	2,488.07
No. vouchers	10,246.63
Total	39,242.11

These amounts, together with those on hand, as shown by the fifth and last report, bring the total of liability to these wards to the sum of $121,799.38, whereas said curator has two bonds, one for $40,000, by the Southern Surety Co., and the other for $, with the following sureties: B. C. Burnett, C. W. Turner, and C. W. Wills, who, to the best of our information, are not of sufficient financial responsibility to render any protection to the interests of these wards. It therefore seems that said curator should, as a preliminary step, be called upon for an additional bond in the sum of $85,000 with some reputable surety company.

Summing up, exceptions are taken to the curatorship for the following reasons:

1. Failure to file inventories and appraisements.
2. Failure to make reports when due.
3. Profiting on lease to Indiahoma Oil Co.
4. Use of minors' funds.
5. Failure to invest funds.
6. Purchase of worthless stock. (Sapulpa Hotel Co.)
7. Interest on sale of stock. (Sapulpa Hotel Co.)
8. Failure to properly report purchase of stock.
9. Purchase of realty at exorbitant prices.
10. Purchase of doubtful titles and encumbered property.
11. Interest on sale of realty. (Burnett addition.)
12. Invalidity of sales of realty by reason of relationship of county judge.
13. Failure to account for proper interest on funds.
14. Failure to pay taxes.
15. Insufficient bond.
16. Administration of curatorship generally for benefit of himself and not wards.

It will be noted the curator has not made a charge for his services in the administration of these estates. It is possible that he considered such compensation was had in handling the money, under the low rate of interest charged against himself, therefore, inasmuch as we have incorporated a proper rate of interest, it leaves him without any compensation whatsoever. However, in view of the gross mismanagement of these estates, as hereinbefore detailed, we contend that said curator is not entitled to any compensation, but this rests entirely in your discretion, for the reason that the estates of said minors have suffered great loss through his administration. Authority for this contention is found in the following cases: Scheib v. Thompson (23 Utah, 564; 65 Pac. Rep., 499); Guardianship of Kalu (17 Haw., 517–519); and Guardianship of Hoare (14 Haw., 443–448).

It is therefore earnestly recommended that Bates B. Burnett, curator, be removed and be required to render a final accounting on the basis hereinabove set out.

It is further recommended that suit be instituted for the cancellation of the lease to the Indiahoma Oil Co. and for the recovery of adequate bonus thereunder.

Respectfully,

CHARLES F. BLISS,
Supervising District Agent.
DIXON H. BYNUM,
Probate Attorney.

JULY 27, 1912.

Mr. DANA H. KELSEY,
United States Indian Superintendent,
Muskogee, Okla.

SIR: In the matter of the arrest and indictment of T. E. Wyly, of Adair County, who has been pernicious in clouding the titles to allotments of full-blood Indians and other allottees, I beg to advise that in the June term of the United States court at McAlester, Mr. Wyly, according to his agreement with myself, plead guilty to the fraudulent use of the mails, and was fined $500. We allowed him to do this only with the understanding that he would make us a free and complete statement of his dealings with other people in connection with the forging of deeds and other instruments affecting the allotments of Cherokee citizens, which he did, and I am inclosing you herewith a copy of his statement to me concerning the operations of himself and others. I also have, in addition to this statement, contract signed by certain lawyers in Adair County and an affidavit of another party associated with him in the forgery of certain deeds on the surplus lands of Cherokee citizens.

Wyly's arrest and plea of guilty has materially assisted us in quieting the title to several pieces of land in the Cherokee Nation and also has stopped the practice of his associates in these matters, with the exception of one or two, who are still carrying on their fraudulent schemes, but we hope to be able to secure enough evidence for their indictment and conviction in the very near future.

Respectfully,

FRED S. COOK, Special District Agent.

Mr. McCALL. If the gentleman will permit me there, I have a telegram from ex-Gov. Long, of Massachusetts, who used to be a Member of this House, and who was also a member of President McKinley's Cabinet, a practical statesman, in which he says:

Appropriation for Oklahoma district agents in Indian appropriation bill now in conference is of vital importance to safeguard the Indians.

He is at the head of an Indian citizenship association.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT].

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was originally before the House every provision in it was thoroughly discussed. I do not care to refer to a single statement made at that time, but I want to say that since the bill passed the House every power known to human ingenuity has been brought to bear by the Interior Department to retain this appropriation. Within the last 48 hours the Secretary of the Interior has been sending a telegram to Judge Leahy, Muskogee, Okla., and received a reply, and inside of an hour after the answer was received he was delivering copies to myself and other Members interested in this bill.

You can not get from the department a statement of the amount of money that they are spending or did spend belonging to the Indians last year. They will not tell you that when they sell a piece of land they take every dollar of the expense out of it. I will give you one instance where they sold a piece of land for $200, belonging to Jim Daly, of Bartlesville, Okla., and took $36 from the $200 to pay the expenses of the sale and advertising.

Another instance of the glorious way in which these district agents take care of these Indians is in the case of Jackson Barnett, a Creek Indian, who gave a lease for 160 acres for $40 bonus. When the lease reached the Union Agency at Muskogee they thought that the $40 was too small, and required the lessee to pay $200 additional, making $240, and recommended the approval of the lease for a bonus of $240. It was discovered that Jackson Barnett was a weak-minded Indian, not competent to make a lease. A guardian was appointed in the probate court, Judge Johns presiding, and that lease sold for $2,400 bonus. When I was at home a few weeks ago I was present in Judge Johns's court, where the district agent, Mr. Farrar, representing Barnett, claiming his right as an agent of the Government, appeared and offered a motion to set aside the proceeding, and insisted that the first lease for $240 bonus should be approved and that Jackson Barnett should lose $2,160. That is the way the district agents are proceeding. They tell you all the good they do, but they do not tell you what else they do.

I could give you instance after instance of this kind. The cause of all this is just like the message read by the gentleman from Massachusetts a few minutes ago. They are being gotten up by men who know nothing of the actual conditions down there.

Mr. McCALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes.

Mr. McCALL. The gentleman who sent the telegram that I read a few moments ago is ex-Gov. John D. Long, who used to be a Member of this House, has been Secretary of the Navy, and who knows public questions as well as any man in the House, and he has always been a friend of these Indians.

Mr. DAVENPORT. In reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts I want to say that the Secretary of the Navy knows as much about Indian affairs, although he is a gentleman of culture and a man of integrity, as I know about conditions in South Africa. I do not question Gov. Long's integrity, but I question his knowledge of Indian matters in Oklahoma.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How many speeches will the gentleman from Texas have on his side?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Quite a number.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We will conclude with one.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] 10 minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the question under consideration involves whether or not the Federal Government shall pay $100,000 to perpetuate what is known as the district agents longer in Oklahoma. The history of that legislation can be stated in a word. Vice President SHERMAN, then chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, said at the time this item first went into the bill that we would probably need agents there perhaps one or two years. They went in there as a temporary matter, while we were emerging from a Territory into a State. They have now been there five years, and now the State is well furnished with officers. The Indians hold the elective offices right by the side of the whites. The governor of the State is an Indian citizen, the lieutenant governor is an Indian citizen, the president of our constitutional convention was an Indian citizen, and the present speaker of the legislature is an Indian. The Indians hold more offices than they are entitled to hold, according to the pro rata or percentage of population between the Indians and the whites. Here comes a strong protest, inculcated, steeped out, brought about by the very men who desire to perpetuate themselves. Here they are spending the Indians' money, spending the money of the Federal Government sending telegrams, journeying to Washington, roasting in the galleries, conjuring up figures to prove they should hold on forever, digging up scandal, befouling their own nest, trying to injure the State, all because they desire to perpetuate themselves, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL], who has for a long time been a trusted, tried, and intelligent Member of this House, comes here with a wild telegram from some man who probably has not been within 2,500 miles of Oklahoma within the last 10 years. He, in all probability, never stepped foot in Oklahoma. He probably saw an Indian in a show some time ago, when he was a boy. What could a man living in Boston, Mass., know about the necessity or lack of necessity of officers in our State, and what could the gentleman from Boston expect this House to assume from a wild telegram sent in here directing this House what to do? I suggest to him that within the last 4 weeks I have presented this matter in 71 speeches in my district, in the State of Oklahoma, and the sole protest from every Indian and every white with whom I conversed, and it was not a few, was, "When, O Lord," are you going to let us loose and have our money and our property and choke off these Federal carpetbaggers and chair warmers? The gentleman goes ahead and answers us with a telegram from Boston. Boston is just about as far away from Oklahoma as one could reside and still live in the United States.

What under heaven can Boston know about the administration of Indian affairs in our State? They do not know any more about it than a prairie dog knows about the solar system, and it is both impudent and imprudent, out of order, and ridiculous for a private citizen residing in Boston to come in here and try to suggest to this House what we should do in our State on some matter purely local. But to the end that I make no mistake, and to the end that this House makes no mistake, I call attention to the fact that we have appropriated more in this Indian appropriation bill for salaries and administration, twice over, than they should have. You will observe the money they fight for is for salaries. If you want to throw money away, give it to the Indians, not to useless chair-warming employees. What are the facts? Look on page 39 of the Indian appropriation bill and you will find $174,000 there appropriated for employees, which is already agreed to and is sure to remain in the bill. Observe the appropriation, being from line 6 to line 13. Again take up your bill and look at page 9, and you will find $200,000 appropriated for Indian police, a field service without limitation or restraint. To the end that you be not mistaken, read from line 17 to line 22. Again I ask you to take up the Indian appropriation bill and read from page 10, lines 1 to 10, and you will observe where there is $125,000 appropriated for special district agents; also observe there is no limitation or restraint. All or any part of it can be used in Oklahoma, a thing I deplore. The total of that amount, the $499,000, is free from restraint. They can spend it all for district agents if they elect so to do—every penny if they want to. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars can all be expended for district agents, and in Oklahoma, if they desire—every cent of it if they want to—and the $200,000 for Indian police. And I very well remember the colloquy I had, when the bill went through the House, with the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and I well remember when he said, "When are we going to be able to turn Oklahoma loose?" I am proud to answer him that if we had our way it would be to-day as distinguished from to-morrow. I would like to see the Five Tribe matters closed with the close of this day. No news could or would be so sweet to the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes as to know they were settled.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I have not the time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I was just wondering if the $300,000 that the Federal Treasury appropriated for your schools——

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I can not let the gentleman interrupt my remarks. I have only a few moments. I would be glad to debate that question with him if I had the time. One hundred and seventy-four thousand dollars is for Oklahoma alone, no part of it to be expended any place else, not even in other parts of Oklahoma, but in the Five Civilized Tribes part of the State, right where they try to hang on to these agents. Oklahoma has more than one-third of all of the Indians in the United States. Therefore I assume that they will expend one-third of $200,000 for Indian police in our State, which is approximately $66,000, this item being already agreed to. Oklahoma has one-third of all the Indians, and more, in the United States. I therefore assume they will expend one-third of the $125,000 for special district agents in Oklahoma. One hundred and seventy-four thousand dollars plus $66,000 plus $41,000 makes $282,332. Divide that by $2,000, which is $200 more per annum than you propose to pay your district agents, and that makes 141 men to administer the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in our State. One hundred and forty-one men to administer the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in our State, in conjunction with our State government, is fully twice too many. Still this bill carries an appropriation for 141 men at $2,000 a year, and because we have sought to cut down and economize the funds of the Indians and the funds of the Government we are met by the Interior Department representatives here in ecstacy, with exuberance, and excitement. They have induced the gentleman from South Dakota to go into hysterics, and a certain Senator at the other end of the Capitol to do the same, in their keen desire to defend and to protect and to keep in office every man who ever sat there as a chair warmer in our State. For 15 long years each year they have promised that this will be the last year that they would send carpetbaggers they do not want or need in there to inflict supervision over the Indians.

This year the chairman of the committee, my colleague Mr. CARTER, myself, supported by the Democratic members of the committee, and some of the Republicans, supported by an overwhelming majority of this House on the Democratic side and some of the Republicans, are thinking and assuming that the bill now carries too much and that it could be cut more. Also confidently believing that the 141 fellows at $2,000 a year were enough to annoy by petty and blighting supervision over the Indian people. I tell you, sirs, the Indians do not want such detailed supervision. It has the opposite effect from the one intended. It retards, it does not improve. It stifles and weakens, it does not encourage and strengthen. It does not move Indian matters to a final conclusion, it complicates and confuses. Surely it is intended and hoped for by us all that the Indian problem will some time terminate. It will not be accomplished by a total withholding of his funds, by a total withholding of his lands, by a total refusal to grant him the very most elemental task. I charge no bad faith on the part of anyone. It is merely a disposition to hang on forever to a job that ought to have been abolished years ago. Remove some of the surfeited and overabundance of supervision and let the Indian stand partially on his own pegs. His money and lands are all tied up. There is no way he can spend it or sell it. Federal restrictions are on tight as a drum. Why, my friends, I have seven counties in the Five Civilized Tribes. When I go around in my campaign the leading citizens in those counties are Indian citizens. The men who serve on the reception committees who meet me and other public men are Indian citizens. CHARLEY CARTER, Senator OWEN, can not expend their own money to-day. It is tied up tight. What a pathetic sight that is. The governor of our State can not expend his money, but they send some little pipestem whippersnapper down from Washington, New York, or Kansas and they are to supervise, to nose around the affairs of a people who know more than they do. Why, the speaker of our lower house of the local legislature is a full-blood Indian. Then, when we come to seek to save $100,000 for the Federal Treasury, when we seek to get rid of a service that prevails nowhere else, a service we do not want, and the Indians do not want, here comes a storm of protest and some telegram from Boston telling us what we need and must have in Oklahoma.

Why, I visited Boston this year; it is one of the most beautiful cities in the world, and yet you would not expect her to be an expert on Indian matters, would you? I do not presume that 1 per cent of the population of the city of Boston ever stepped foot in Oklahoma; I do not presume that a half per cent of the citizens of Boston ever shook hands with an Indian; I do not presume that 10 per cent of them ever crossed the Mississippi River, yet they are sending telegrams telling Congress what to do about Oklahoma employees and against the combined judgment of Democrats and Republicans, Indians and whites, and the bulk of all our people who know the facts and do not desire to hold the jobs. I tell you, sirs, we have left enough money in this bill for employees. In my judgment too much. You can have 141 people and pay them $2,000 a year. One-half of them ought to be fired to-day, not to-morrow, and here comes my good friend, and I say it with all kindness and all earnestness, from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], and he is urging the retention of these Interior Department employees. I have nothing against them personally—not one of them. My friend from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] is so sympathetic in disposition that he has gone wild and gone mad in order to save those employees their positions until after the next election. My friends, we will give all the 141, at $2,000 per year, a passport from our State, and we will send them back to you, if they must have appointments. They hail from your country, from States where Indian jobs are scarce. Now let me tell you a story, which will quite well illustrate. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time is up.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from Kansas use some of his time?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I stated to the gentleman from Texas that we would conclude with one speech. I would like to have the privilege of yielding one minute now to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] with the consent of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL].

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] has shown a great deal of righteous indignation because somebody in Boston has sent a telegram evincing an interest in the Indian and because the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] also has shown an interest in these people. It seems that it is hardly proper for people not so fortunate as to live in Oklahoma to manifest interest in those Indians. I think it hardly necessary for me seriously to discuss the reference to ex-Gov. Long. If there is a practical statesman in America, one who has proven himself such by the manner in which he has dealt with great public questions, it is John D. Long. He was long a Member of the House of Representatives, and he here showed great interest in the Indian, and he was also a member of the Cabinet of President McKinley. I think outsiders, people in Boston, if you will, can judge about as well of the rights of the Indians and what is best to protect them as those people who are dealing with them and who have the personal interest to get possession of their property. I do not say the people of Oklahoma are worse than the people of other States, but we know what history shows there and in other parts of the country. I believe this House will make a grave mistake in striking down this humane guardianship that has been established under the laws of the United States and turn the Indians over to the tender mercies of people in Oklahoma who desire to relieve them of what possessions they have left. If we ever have the duty to protect the weak against the strong, we have it to-day in the case of those helpless people.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAVENPORT. May I ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. MCCALL. My time has expired.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Upon what hypothesis does the gentleman base the statement that the people of Oklahoma desire to deprive Indians of their property?

Mr. MCCALL. That will be answered by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I would like for the gentleman from Kansas to yield for the gentleman to answer it.

Mr. MCCALL. The gentleman from Kansas is going to answer it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall not let an opportunity pass when I can protest against exploiting the American Indian. I am not afraid of the word "carpetbagger." I do not fear the call on State's rights. I shall not permit any such departure from the real question to conceal a purpose to leave the Indian exposed to the greed and rapacity of the white man.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] worked himself into a fury denouncing the Federal Government for exercising a guardianship over the American Indian in Oklahoma, without touching the questions involved in the motion to restore these 16 agents. He went at great length into the question of spending money in Oklahoma out of the Federal Treasury for sending men from Kansas, or New York, or other States down there to assist in administering the affairs of the Indians, and protested against the $100,000 it would take to maintain these agencies, but did not say a word of protest about appropriating $30,000 for constructing a sewer for a city in that State; he did not say a word about the $300,000 that is in this bill for the maintenance of the public schools of the State of Oklahoma, a proposition that is in this bill without any authority whatever, except that there was a majority of the conferees who were in favor of it. As well appropriate $300,000 or any other amount for mantaining schools in the State of Iowa, or in the State of Kansas, or in any other State of the Union. Yet he and his colleagues do not protest against the Indians being exploited by people who have gone there from all parts of the country. The trouble about it is that Oklahoma was well taken care of in the make-up of the Committee on Indian Affairs. Three gentlemen from that State are on that committee, and they are not all there to guard the interests of the Indians, but to provide for the white man, who is in the majority and controls the vote in that State. The peroration that will be delivered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] later on will not be in answer to the charge that helpless Indians are being robbed out of their property by white men in the State of Oklahoma and that the State authorities are refusing the protection that is necessary for these Indians. Let me call your attention to a case: A short time ago an Indian girl 13 years of age, who could not speak a word of English, was the possessor of 600 acres of good land.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I would like the gentleman to give the name of the Indian girl.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will give you the name of the girl. She is Emma Seply. She had 600 acres of land, and, as I say, could not speak a word of English. She was forced into a marriage, by those who were conspiring to rob her, with a man who deeded away with her that 600 acres of land for $15.

Mr. BUTLER. How much?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Fifteen dollars. She got $5 and he got $10.

Mr. BUTLER. An acre?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; not an acre. Fifteen dollars for the 600 acres. And that is the kind of frauds that are being perpetrated down in that country constantly upon these helpless Indians.

Another case is that of a poor woman, sick unto death, who was persuaded to deed away her property. She recovered, and it was only through the aid of these agents that she got her property back. There is no crime that has not been committed in furthering the robbery of helpless Indians and Indian children. Actual murder has been committed in the district of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] to get the property of helpless Indian children.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I would like to ask the gentleman if the State authorities did not convict the murderers?

Mr. CAMPBELL. After they were forced to do so. The prosecuting attorney had neglected or refused for weeks to bring the prosecution. The record here is full of cases, and I do not speak alone from the record or from hearsay. I do not come here without information, as was charged against Gov. Long, who sent a telegram from Massachusetts. I have been in Oklahoma. I have talked with the Indians. The gentleman may have had committees receiving him who cared nothing about how they are exploited, but I have talked with Indians in Oklahoma who want these agents to protect them from the rapacity of the white man and the half Indians, and the less than half Indians, who are robbing them of their property.

I can see the day when the State of Oklahoma will be populated with the remnant of the American Indians—as paupers. Then gentlemen from Oklahoma will appeal to the Federal Government to take care of those helpless Indians after the gentlemen from Oklahoma have made it possible for those Indians to be robbed of an estate that is worth millions, that is ample for their care if not taken from them. They will become a charge, not upon the State of Oklahoma, but upon the Federal Treasury. You, at least, expect that. You have $300,000 in this bill for the maintenance of your public schools upon the theory that some Indian children attend them, I assume. I assume that that is why it was put in this bill.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman does not want his question answered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If that is not the reason for it, then there is no reason under the sun for it.

I have, as I say, been down there. I have talked with those Indians. I have talked with the white men. I have had communication with only one agent, and he does not care whether he remains there or not. He is ready to quit. But he is interested in the Indians, in the helpless children, in the full bloods of that country. The officers of the State of Oklahoma who are after the white man's vote are absolutely heedless of the welfare of the Indians, and that is the trouble on the floor of this House, and that is the trouble on the floor of another body. "Lo, the poor Indian," has no friends on this floor, and no friends on the floor of the other legislative body from the State of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman who has just addressed the House [Mr. CAMPBELL] had something to say about the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] working himself into a fury about these district agents, and yet before he had finished his impassioned appeal, I think we must all agree, we witnessed the gentleman from Kansas work himself into an aggravated case of the heaves. [Laughter.] Now, let us get down to the truth about Indian agents. Let us look the matter squarely in the face, cease this organized combine of slander and misrepresentation, and stop playing politics with Indian affairs. The fact is, many of these department employees in Oklahoma are political appointees and agents of Members of both branches of Congress, and those Members very naturally dislike to see their pets put off the job, ergo this plaintive wail every time an attempt is made to cut down expenses and reduce the Government force in Oklahoma; and no one knows that fact better than the distinguished gentleman who has just been shedding crocodile tears over some alleged corruption of Oklahoma officials and citizens.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not know it.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from Kansas refused to yield to me when he had more time than I, therefore he must not expect to interrupt me when I have only a very limited time.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen can not interrupt a Member on the floor without first securing leave.

Mr. CARTER. Who knows, Mr. Speaker, how many appointees the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] may have among Government employees in Oklahoma; who knows how many such appointees other gentlemen entertaining similar sentiments with him may have down there, and should we be greatly surprised that these distinguished gentlemen grow eloquent and pathetic in behalf of their henchmen when attempts are made to interfere with their comfortable seats at the pie counter?

Since this district agent fight started, stacks of gush have been put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at both ends of the Capitol, alleging great corruption in connection with Indian lands in Oklahoma, and holding up the district agent as the sole friend and solitary protector to the helpless Indian in that part of God's moral vineyard, if, indeed, they will admit it is in the vineyard at all. Most of this gush, it seems, consisted of simple statements unverified by oath or otherwise, and yet distinguished gentlemen at both ends of this Capitol have become so enamored of the jobs held down by their former constituents that they actually refer now to this gush as "records." When these gentlemen put something substantial in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I shall be glad to take the time to reply to it, but until I see something properly verified I do not feel called upon to do so. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] tells us that murder has been committed. He alleges that all kinds of crimes have been perpetrated in the attempt to get possession of the Indian's property. These statements given sanction by Senators and Congressmen, indeed, constitute serious charges, and if they are not true, are a slander on the fair name of one of the sister States of this great Republic. If they were true to the fullness of their exaggeration, then I want to ask these distinguished gentlemen where were their friends and political henchmen, the great saviors of the weak and helpless Indian, the district agents, when these crimes were committed? They were sent there to defend the Indians; they were there when the crimes were committed, and yet we hear not one word of interference to prevent the crimes. When the crimes were discovered by our State authorities, then is the first we hear of the district agent taking cognizance of them.

Since our first conference report was agreed to eliminating the appropriation for these agents stacks of telegrams have reached the desk of almost every Congressman and Senator in Washington. The sources of these telegrams were limited only by the boundaries of the United States. They began to pour in within a few hours after our report was agreed to, before it was published in the RECORD, and before publicity of same was authorized. The Associated Press had not one word about the elimination of this item. Now, I wonder how this information gained circulation so quickly and so completely. I wonder by what mysterious underground current this report gained such wide and magic circulation, when even the Associated Press did not deem it of sufficient import to send it out. I wonder how these telegrams were paid for; I wonder from what fund the money was taken that paid for the messages sending out this information and inspiring these telegrams.

Ah, Mr. Speaker, if the truth were known about this matter many of us would no doubt be surprised at the organizations and wheels within wheels that have been supporting this district-agent proposition. Who can say that the money building up these organizations and paying this expense was not taken from the funds of these very Indians themselves? Worse abuses have been committed with Indian funds, and it has been done within very recent years.

Despite the statements made by gentlemen in this House, and another gentleman in another legislative body, I proclaim here and now that the best protection rendered to the Indians of our State has been by the State courts of Oklahoma; and the assertion that our courts were coerced into taking such action by the district agents is false and without foundation in fact. The district agent has no jurisdiction and no power to coerce our courts. It is entirely within the power of any court in our State to order him without the pale of the court room and make him keep without the presence of the court. I further call attention to the fact that these gentlemen, with all their scurrilous charges, have not been able to show one single instance in which the Indian has been saved a single penny except by the action of our State courts.

It is idle prattle to say that the district agent is the only protection the Indian has in his property right. The Indian can not dispose of his property. The restriction on the sale and lease of his property is the real protection to him, and these restrictions are just as clearly defined with our Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes as the English language can make them.

Mr. BUTLER. How, then, was that title obtained from the Indian girl for $15?

Mr. CARTER. Oh, no title was obtained from any Indian girl for $15 that I know of. We heard some loose talk from the gentleman from Kansas about it, but he produces no actual evidence of it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. In just a moment. I want the gentleman from Kansas to give me his attention, if he will. If it be true that title was obtained for $15 and this girl was a restricted Indian girl, then the district agent must have been in collusion with the purchaser of this land, for no title can be obtained to restricted lands in Oklahoma except upon removal of restrictions by the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary will not consider the application unless it is filed with one of these district agents, and no one has ever heard of the Secretary approving such application unless it was fully recommended and approved by the district agent. So, if she was divested of title to that land, then there must have been some assistance from the Secretary of the Interior and directly from the district agent.

Mr. MANN. That is not right, not if she were married.

Mr. CARTER. O Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the gentleman from Illinois. It does not make a particle of difference whether the girl was married or not; marriage has nothing on earth to do with restrictions on the lands of the Five Civilized Tribes. That is clearly defined by the law. Under the act of May 27, 1908, passed by Congress, Indians of three-quarter Indian blood and more can not alienate any part of their allotments without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior; and these, in fact, are the only real Indians among the Five Civilized Tribes. But the law goes even further. It provides that Indians of less than three-quarter Indian blood, and not less than one-half, may not alienate their homestead, consisting of 160 acres, with the Choctaws and Chickasaws. These restricted Indians are the only ones over whom the Indian agents can even assume any jurisdiction, and it does not make any difference if these restricted Indians were Mormans and had a dozen wives or husbands, they could not alienate their land except with the consent of the district agent, approved by the Secretary of the Interior. So, let that put an end to these misleading statements about the Indian being divested of title.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is it true that the firm of a Senator of the United States from Oklahoma has a contract with these Indians which will yield to that firm upward of $1,000,000 in fees? I desire to read from the hearings on an investigation of Indian contracts before a committee of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CARTER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman does not expect to read records in the short time I have to discuss this question. I am perfectly willing that he shall have leave to insert this, or any other matter he may have, in the RECORD, but the contract of which he speaks has no bearing whatever on this case. These contracts have nothing to do with the district agents, nor the district agents with the contracts. I presume the gentleman refers to certain contracts which have been submitted by Congress to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have myself received hundreds of letters, telegrams, and other statements from Indians, business people, State officials, and other citizens of high standing in Oklahoma, approving the action of the Oklahoma delegation in trying to cut down the extravagant expenditure of funds in Oklahoma by the Interior Department. I have probably received just as many as the gentleman from Kansas, or the gentleman from South Dakota, or any Member of any other legislative body of Congress, and they probably constitute just as serious charges against the district agents and other officials of the Indian service in Oklahoma as the other gentlemen's letters do against the citizens and officials of our State; but, Mr. Speaker, I have refrained from burdening either the RECORD or this House with any of these serious charges. The letters would constitute a volume within themselves; and while I have no doubt that many of the charges preferred are true, I have hesitated to enter into any such mud-slinging contest, and I do not now propose to fill up the RECORD with these many charges. I do desire, however, to publish in the RECORD two letters, strictly impersonal, as a sample of the opinions held by many good citizens of Oklahoma along this line. One is a letter from County Judge W. B. M. Mitchell, of Garvin County, and who it must be admitted has had abundant opportunity to view the action of the district agents at close range, and the other is from Mr. C. M. Threadgill, an attorney at law of high standing at Coalgate, Okla. Mr. Threadgill was a short time ago a candidate for the State senate on the Republican ticket and was defeated by a small majority.

OFFICE OF W. B. M. MITCHELL,
COUNTY JUDGE, GARVIN COUNTY,
Pauls Valley, Okla., February 9, 1912.

Hon. CHARLES D. CARTER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am very highly pleased to note that you are making an effort to abolish the Indian agent's office among the Five Civilized Tribes. I think this is the greatest move that has been made since Oklahoma was admitted to the Union. I have been advocating this proposition for some time, and I want to congratulate you upon the effort, and hope that you will succeed in eliminating the entire bunch. Of all the grafts and bands of plundering highwaymen since the times of the James Boys and the Dalton Brothers, the Indian agent's office has them cutstripped. I think if Emmett Dalton and Jesse James should meet this bunch of grafters they would have to tip their hats. The people down here are delighted that you have backbone enough to try to get rid of them. If you can't abolish the office, for God's sake cut off the appropriation.

With kindest regards and best wishes, I am,
Very truly, yours,

W. B. M. MITCHELL.

C. M. THREADGILL,
ATTORNEY AND COUNSELOR AT LAW,
Coalgate, Okla., August 9, 1912.

Hon. C. D. CARTER, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I appreciate the telegram you sent me relative to the Indian apropriation bill, and I congratulate you that you have been successful in the elimination of the appropriation for the support of the Indian agent minions. I have been living in this part of the country for the past nine years and a half with a law office at Coalgate. I have had experience with the affairs of the Choctaw people, and I am in a position to say that the petty Indian agents have done more to obstruct the progress of the Indian and development of this country than any other curse of the Federal Government and Federal rule since Statehood. I have been a Republican, but the Federal rule in this country has caused me to go back to the Democratic Party whence I came. I hope you will continue your good work in Congress till the Indians of this country are freed from the misrule of these petty agents. With best wishes for your success, I am,

Yours, truly,

C. M. THREADGILL.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to have placed in the RECORD, Mr. Speaker, a statement from Dr. J. H. Stolper, a man who is at the head of the public defenders' bureau in the State of Oklahoma, which institution has done more, with a few thousand dollars, to protect the Indian than all the district agents and interior departments in Christendom:

STATE OF OKLAHOMA,
DEPARTMENT OF CHARITIES AND CORRECTIONS,
Oklahoma City, April 13, 1912.

Hon. CHARLES D. CARTER,
Congressman Fourth Oklahoma District, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CARTER: * * *

You do this department the honor to refer by name to our worthy commissioner, Miss Barnard, and myself, and speak of this department's work. I would not refer to this matter further but for the expression of Hon. P. P. CAMPBELL, of Kansas, on page 4673 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, where Mr. CAMPBELL says:

"It has been the ambition of the State of Oklahoma, since it has become a State, to control everybody within its borders. The people who made it a State got in there in spite of those who were endeavoring to protect the Indian. The Indian is there now struggling for his last rights. By the provisions of this bill he will be without even an attorney to appear for him. The grafter on every hand is waiting for the passage of this bill so that he can exploit the Indian. I have been in Oklahoma among the Five Civilized Tribes. I have been alone among them; I have been there with a committee. The disposition shown toward the Indian is this: If you can get his property, get it; it does not matter how."

Mr. CAMPBELL, I am confident, does not desire to do an injustice to the people of Oklahoma, and therefore he will probably be more careful in the future of making statements which are not in accordance with truth. Regarding the ambition of the State of Oklahoma, since it has become a State, to control everybody within its borders, I submit that it is nothing more than the people of Oklahoma have proven themselves absolutely worthy of, and should be encouraged and not hampered in doing, by any congressional enactments. The people of Oklahoma are American citizens, proud of being such, and should be allowed to control their own internal conditions. When Mr. CAMPBELL says about Oklahoma that "The disposition shown toward the Indian is this: If you can get his property, get it; it does not matter how."

Mr. CAMPBELL evidently is forgetting that was merely describing human nature, which is true concerning unscrupulous people in Oklahoma and in Kansas. I have just given notice to an attorney in the great State of Kansas that I will institute suit against him and his confederates, who came to the Oklahoma State Penitentiary and under pretense that said attorney can obtain a pardon for a prisoner by name Gus Grooms, have falsely induced said prisoner to give a warranty deed to his allotment. Now, said Kansas attorney knew that the governor of Oklahoma is not purchasable; that if said prisoner had a just cause this office would present such cause to the governor of Oklahoma without it costing the prisoner a single cent; and yet the Kansas attorney deliberately made use of the prisoner's ignorance in attempts to swindle such prisoner out of his land, and it becomes my duty as an official of the State of Oklahoma to get back for our unfortunate prisoner what a Kansas attorney, acting upon the principle as described by Mr. CAMPBELL, "If you can get his property, get it; it does not matter how."

Regarding the question of whether the district Indian agents should be continued in Oklahoma or not, I have nothing to say. This is a question of policy for Congress to decide. I know some district Indian agents that earn by hard work every cent they get; but, as a matter of justice to the State of Oklahoma, I wish to say most emphatically that Mr. CAMPBELL is absolutely wrong when he says "The Indian is there now struggling for his last rights. By the provision of this bill he will be without even an attorney to appear for him."

The facts are that the Indian at last is getting his full rights, as is due to a noble race who was once master of the continent. An Indian, Hon. William Durant, is speaker of our house in the legislature and is holding the office with ability and honor. There are Indian senators, representatives, judges, and Congressman in and from Oklahoma—something the Indian has seldom had before—and the Indian has at last come unto his own, thanks to the liberality of the white men of Oklahoma in adopting the liberal Oklahoma constitution.

When Mr. CAMPBELL says when you pass this bill (H. R. 20728) the Indian will be even without an attorney to appear for him, Mr. CAMPBELL shows that, although he has been in Oklahoma, alone and with committees, he does not know what is going on in the State of Oklahoma.

I am the attorney for all the people in Oklahoma who need a State's attorney. I am the public defender of the State of Oklahoma, whether dejure or defacto. I defend the people's right, and with the cooperation of Miss Kate Barnard, our commissioner, and Hobart Huson, our assistant commissioner, have done more for the Indian in proportion to the time of the existence of this office than has been done for the Indian in Kansas or any other State by State authority; and whether Congress provides an attorney for the Indian or not the people of the State of Oklahoma have provided one; and in order that the blame may not be placed upon the State of Oklahoma for the deplorable condition that some Indians find themselves in I beg to give you the following cause:

Nearly every case that I had to fight in the courts to restore the Indian his land originated in the United States courts of the Indian Territory. Here are two instances:

In re Johnson Fehlikattabbee, Carline Cole, and Sampson Cole, by Kate Barnard, as commissioner of charities and corrections of the State of Oklahoma, plaintiffs, v. Eugene Easton, Allie Easton, and Edson Burgett, defendants. No. 293, superior court, Grady County, and No. 1749, Pushmataha County court, and No. ——, Pittsburg County court.

This cause originated in the United States courts for the southern and central districts at Chickasha and Antlers, Okla. Three full-blood Choctaw children had a guardian appointed by the United States judge for the southern district of Indian Territory, and the United States judge for the central district, at Antlers, upon petition by one Eugene Easton, an attorney of Antlers, appointed a guardian for them also at Antlers.

This department discovered two of these children, like wild animals, sleeping in alleys and stables at Antlers, living upon the charity of the good people of Antlers. An investigation showed that a full-blood Indian, Josephus Sherred, was their guardian.

We began to investigate why the children are not sent to school and why they are not well provided for. The investigation disclosed the following facts:

These children had land, inherited from their father, Logan Cole, a full-blood Choctaw. This land Eugene Easton, as attorney for the children's guardian, sold to himself—Eugene Easton—for a supposed consideration of $1,000, one-half of which has never been paid, and a few days afterwards the said Eugene Easton sold the same land, which adjoins the city limits of the city of Chickasha, to one Edson Burgett for $4,500.

A further investigation showed that the court at Antlers never had a right to appoint a guardian for the children, as the United States court at Chickasha, having assumed jurisdiction, had exclusive jurisdiction.

While we were investigating the cause, Eugene Easton became alarmed and had Josephus Sherred execute a warranty deed to Edson Burgett for the fictitious consideration of $1,000. Sherred later swore that he did not receive a cent. We then went unto the county court at Pushmataha County and set, by judicial process, aside all acts of Josephus Sherred as guardian and the decree selling and confirming the land to Eugene Easton by Sherred and by Sherred to Burgett. We had both, the regular guardian of Chickasha and Josephus Sherred, discharged, the first by resignation and the second by order of court (see p. 189, Third Annual Report of this department, for the order of the court), and had Hon. Hobart Huson appointed guardian ad litem.

Sampson Cole, one of the heirs of Logan Cole, is within the jurisdiction of the county court of Pittsburg County, although temporarily he has been sent by the United States Government for his health—he suffering with tuberculosis—to Idaho.

In Pittsburg County court we had an old lady guardian, Susan Pusley, removed by resignation and again appointed Hobart Huson guardian so we could institute proper proceedings for clearing all clouds about three dozen warranty deeds from the children's land.

The suit was finally tried at the superior court at Chickasha on Tuesday, April 9, 1912, where we won on all points. By the judgment all clouds from the children's lands are removed and all warranty deeds, mortgages, and leases canceled. The title reverts and is in the children, and we obtained a judgment for $500 for back rent and interest at 6 per cent per annum.

The above litigation has not cost any of these children a single cent. My expenses and salary were and are defrayed from the treasury of the State of Oklahoma, to which very few Indians pay any taxes. Can anyone say that the people of Oklahoma, the Legislature of Oklahoma, are not doing their full duty by the Indian children? What have we accomplished in this case? We did find the children paupers, and made them independently rich, without a single cent coming out from tribal funds.

Second. In re George H. Tucker and William Tucker, minors. No. 555, Tulsa County Court.

In this cause three orphan children, through a conspiracy of a man from Iowa and a man from Illinois and one from Kansas, a petition was made to the Tulsa County court showing that the children's lands near Tulsa are worth $3,800, and leave was asked to sell the land. The county court in good faith allowed the petition. The Indian father-guardian of the children was taken unto a bank, was shown the back of a supposed check, told to make his mark and sign it by another man's indorsement; and the check was taken away from the guardian, he not getting a single cent. This bold robbery was perpetrated in Tulsa, in the State of Oklahoma, but not a single participant outside of the Indian was an Oklahoman.

I instituted suit in Tulsa County court and had the confirmation of the sale set aside upon ground of fraud, brought suit in the district court of Tulsa County to cancel the deed and remove the clouds, and have an information pending for criminal prosecution of the wrongdoers.

On March 26, 1912, the parties interested made me an offer in open court in Tulsa that if I agree to have impartial appraisers appointed that they will pay every cent to the children that the lands were worth. I took them up in a moment and hold a written agreement approved by the court. The land is being appraised, the children will receive every cent due them, and with the help of God will teach people of Kansas and Iowa and Illinois that while all the good people of said States are welcome in Oklahoma the State of Oklahoma is ready and willing to punish all who come here and take advantage of the Indian or any other white or black Oklahoma citizen. Here were children made paupers, and we are restoring to them independent wealth. In this case it has not cost the children a cent, and it was done purely and solely by the authority of the State of Oklahoma. The grafters threatened me with their political influence. They went to Kate Barnard and Hobart Huson to have me discharged. Miss Barnard gave them the same answer I gave. All grafters look alike to us, and the only place where by law a grafter is entitled to our supervising and protecting power is when such grafter is in the State penitentiary.

Referring to this case, such a high authority as the honorable Attorney General of the United States says:

APRIL 3, 1912.

DR. J. H. STOLPER,
General Attorney, Department of Charities and Corrections, State of Oklahoma, Oklahoma City, Okla.

MY DEAR SIR: I have your favor of the 29th ultimo, and I am very much interested and gratified to learn of the success you have had in the matter of the Tucker minors.

Very truly, yours,
GEO. W. WICKERSHAM,
Attorney General.

Again, the same generous and just Attorney General of the United States, writing to me under date of March 18, 1912, referring to the report of this department, says:

"I am struck at the scope of the work which is summarized and reported, and with the excellent results that you have achieved in your own branch of that work."

Personal modesty would prohibit me from inclosing here the quotation of a letter from one of the best friends and hardest workers for the Indian that the Indian has, Dana H. Kelsey, but the honor of the State of Oklahoma is reflected upon by Mr. Campbell, especially when our State and our legislature have and are doing the very best for the Indian, and personal inclination is bound to give way to all that concerns the welfare and the honor of our State, of the people of Oklahoma; hence the letter, which shows what people who know how Oklahoma meets its responsibilities, says:

[General office: Dana H. Kelsey, Superintendent in charge, Muskogee, Okla.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE,
FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES,
UNION AGENCY,
Muskogee, Okla., August 16, 1911.

DEAR MISS BARNARD: I wish to take this opportunity of thanking you for the excellent work of your department in connection with the McCurtain County probate situation, and particularly to commend the most excellent service of your general attorney, Dr. Stolper. He has gone into this situation with our officers in the most intelligent manner, and the case was handled with extreme good judgment and tact, with the best possible results, as you already know. We are all congratulating ourselves that we had your assistance and the help of such a fearless and excellent official as Dr. Stolper. It is just this sort of cooperation between the Federal and State authorities that will materially assist in protecting the estates of the minor and full-blood Indians of the Five Tribes and prevent their becoming public charges at some later date.

With assurance of my highest respect and again thanking you and all connected with your department for your hearty cooperation, I am,

Very sincerely,

DANA H. KELSEY,
United States Indian Superintendent.

Miss KATE BARNARD,
Commissioner Department Charities and Corrections,
Oklahoma City, Okla.

I could cite thousands of cases where this department single-handed has brought the most intricate legally mixed suits, when it required to bring several suits in several counties at the same time, but it would be burdensome; our report is at the disposal of Congress, and every word of said report is when dealing with courts upon court records.

This department receives from a number of county judges copies of every petition and order made in every probate case affecting orphan children. If Congress would authorize to do it in all cases of Indians, we would do it—every act, every petition for appointment of a guardian, for the sale of real estate, for confirmation of the sale, is checked and investigated in this office, and every annual and final guardian's, administrator's, and executor's report, in all cases where we have jurisdiction, is checked and verified in this office; and the interested parties are each individually notified that a petition has been presented, that it is pending, and where and when it will be heard, and requested, if any cause is known, why the petition prayed should not be granted, that an affidavit be sent to this office. I inclose two forms of cards we are using, and if Congress was generous it would give us the free use of the mails for these cards. I herewith inclose the cards, marked "No. 1," which goes to the judge, and "No. 2," which is sent to all relatives and interested parties, so that full actual publicity is given to all acts and graft is out of the question.

In conclusion I wish to beg you that you read this letter to the House of Representatives of the United States Congress that Congress and all fair-minded people of the United States may know that while Oklahoma has inherited from Federal Territorial rule the chaotic conditions existing among Indians that the State of Oklahoma, through its legislature and the State officials, is doing all within our power to protect the Indian as well as all citizens of Oklahoma, and be it said to the honor of Oklahoma that in all cases we uniformly are succeeding.

Very respectfully,

Dr. J. H. STOLPER,
The Public Defender of the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. I also submit for printing in the RECORD the following bulletin of our State department of charities and corrections:

[Monthly Bulletin State Department of Charities and Corrections. Published monthly by Kate Barnard, commissioner of charities and corrections, State of Oklahoma. Application made for entry as second-class mail matter at Oklahoma, Okla. Kate Barnard, commissioner of charities and corrections; H. Huson, assistant commissioner of charities and corrections; Dr. J. H. Stolper, general attorney; Dr. R. C. Meloy, inspector; W. O. Mager, stenographer.]

SALUTATORY.

The department of charities and corrections presents the initial number of its Monthly Bulletin.

During the past year work has increased greatly, and all estimates made for the third legislature have been modified. The department has been confronted with the problem of doing vastly increased work with the present office force and appropriation. It will be an economy in time and cost to print all important matter in the bulletin, instead of trying to do the work with extra stenographers and very large postage bills. The work has to be done, and I believe the bulletin solves the problem of doing all of the necessary work within the quite small appropriation made for this department.

The bulletin allows me to do a large amount of educational work on subjects that come within the scope of this department. Probation officers send in many letters asking for instruction on the work in general, and special cases in particular. The public seldom hears of the results of jail and other inspections. These findings are published in my annual report, but the number who see these books is naturally limited.

I believe that counties would take pride in providing good jails, county homes, and detention homes if the public knew promptly the results of the inspections of county institutions and the suggestions made by the commissioner of charities and corrections to the county officials. Publicity is a great educator, because what people think about and talk about so finds expression in acts. Public interest and public conscience are the strongest factors in progress and development.

The first bulletin will be known as the juvenile-court edition. By this vehicle the county judges, attorneys, and commissioners will have the opportunity of reading the splendid decisions and opinions handed down by the supreme court and the criminal court of appeals now instead of waiting to find them in the law publications. They will find that the whole juvenile-court act has been declared constitutional; that it is mandatory that county commissioners provide suitable detention homes for juvenile delinquents, and they must provide for the salary of the probation officer, and it is mandatory on them to confirm the appointment of such officer if he is known and believed to be a man of good character and is a qualified and discreet person.

Now that the jurisdiction of the juvenile court is clearly shown and established, Oklahoma will not have to blush with shame by seeing little boys and girls tried as criminals. I believe that all subsequent editions of the Monthly Bulletin will publish much that is interesting and useful.

The taxpayers foot the bills for maintaining all institutions, and they should be informed of conditions and needs. I have had occasion to know how responsive and generous is the public heart, and it is only because people do not know of bad conditions that they are allowed to continue.

KATE BARNARD.

In the Supreme Court of the State of Oklahoma. Board of County Commissioners of Seminole County, A. L. Frederick, W. C. Bruce, and M. A. Harris, v. State of Oklahoma ex rel. T. S. Cobb, county judge, and T. S. Cobb, judge of Seminole County. No. 2752. Filed January 9, 1912.

1. Where there has been an exercise in good faith of judgment or discretion by an officer upon whom a duty involving discretion is imposed, the writ of mandamus will not lie to compel him to act again; but if by a mistaken view of the law or by an arbitrary exercise of his authority there has been in fact no actual exercise in good faith of the judgment or discretion vested in the officer, the writ will lie to compel such officer to act within the limits of the law.

2. By virtue of section 5 of an act of the legislature approved March 24, 1909, generally known as the juvenile court act (art. 8, ch. 14, p. 185, sess. laws, 1909), an appointment by the county court of any person as probation officer must have the consent and approval of the county commissioners, and in giving and refusing such consent the commissioners are vested with discretion to determine whether the proposed appointee is a discreet person of good character; but they are not vested with the power to determine whether a necessity exists for such appointment and to refuse to consent to an appointment solely upon the ground that no necessity for such officer exists.

3. A board of county commissioners to whom was referred an appointment by a county court of a person as probation officer determined that the proposed appointee was a discreet person of good character and qualified under the foregoing statute for the office, but determined that no necessity existed for such officer and refused to consent to and approve the appointment solely upon the ground: Held, That said board of county commissioners may be ordered by mandamus to consent to and approve the proposed appointment.

(Syllabus by the court.)

Error from the district court of Seminole County. Tom D. McKeown, trial judge. Affirmed.

W. W. Pryor and Willmott & Dean, attorneys for plaintiffs in error.

J. H. Stolper and T. S. Cobb, attorneys for defendants in error.

Opinion of the court by Hayes, J. This was a proceeding for a mandamus in the court below. The trial there was upon the alternative writ and the return thereto. From a judgment awarding a peremptory writ this proceeding in error is prosecuted.

The facts as alleged and admitted by the pleadings are substantially that defendant in error, relator in the court below, as judge of the county court of Seminole County, on the 1st day of April, 1911, appointed one I. L. Flynn to the office of probation officer of said county. Plaintiffs in error, respondents below, as members of and constituting the board of county commissioners of Seminole County, refused to consent to the appointment of said Flynn as probation officer upon the ground that no necessity existed for the appointment or services of such an officer. They admit in their return that said Flynn is qualified and competent, as required by law, to fill the office, and that their refusal to consent to his appointment is solely upon the ground and for the reason above mentioned.

Relator brought this action to secure a peremptory writ of mandamus ordering respondents to consent to and approve the appointment made by the court. The authority of relator to make the appointment and the duty of respondents in the premises are to be found in section 5 of an act of the legislature approved March 24, 1909, generally known as the juvenile court act (art. 8, ch. 14, sess. laws, 1909, p. 185). That section reads as follows:

"The court shall have authority to appoint or designate, by and with the consent of the county commissioners, one discreet person of good character to serve as probation officer during the pleasure of the court; said probation officer to receive compensation of $50 per month from county fund, to be paid by county commissioners. In case the probation officer shall be appointed by any court, it shall be the duty of the clerk of the court, if practicable, to notify the said probation officer in advance when any child is to be brought before the court; it shall be the duty of said probation officer to make such investigation as may be required by the court, to be present in court in order to represent the interests of the child when the case is heard, to furnish to the court such information and assistance as the judge may require, and to take such charge of any child before and after trial as may be directed by the court."

There is no controversy between the parties that in order to effect an appointment by the court of any person as probation officer such appointment must have the consent of the county commissioners; and that they are authorized to determine whether such proposed appointee is a discreet person of good character and qualified under the provisions of the act for the office; and that in determining this fact the commissioners are vested with a discretion and judgment that can not be controlled by mandamus. The point of controversy between them is whether the county commissioners have authority in determining whether they shall consent to any appointment made by the county court to determine the necessity for such appointment, and to refuse to consent to the appointment upon the ground that there is no need for such officer. That officers who have imposed upon them by law the performance of duties involving the exercise of judgment and discretion can not be controlled in the discharge of such duty by mandamus is fundamental. (Monroe et al. v. Beebe, 10 Okla., 581; 19 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law, 732.) Under this rule, if respondents had determined not to consent to the appointment of the proposed appointee upon the ground that he is not a person qualified under the statute for the office, in that he is not a discreet person or one of good character, their determination in the matter could not be controlled or reviewed by the order sought in this proceeding. Nor will the remedy lie if the statute vests the commissioners with the power to exercise their judgment and discretion in determining whether necessity exists for the appointment of such an officer, or makes the authority of the county court to appoint or designate some person depend, in the first instance, upon the consent of the county commissioners of the exercise of that authority. But, on the other hand, if the board of county commissioners are without any authority to refuse their consent to an appointment upon the ground that no necessity exists therefor, then relator is entitled to the remedy he seeks and has been awarded him by the trial court. Where there has been an exercise in good faith of judgment or discretion by an officer upon whom a duty is imposed, the writ will not lie; but if by reason of a mistaken view of the law or by the arbitrary exercise of such officer's authority there has been in fact no actual exercise in good faith of the judgment and discretion granted him by the law the writ is an available remedy to the aggrieved party. (19 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law, p. 739.) Refusal to consent to the appointment of Flynn solely upon the ground that he is not needed as a probation officer of the county is not an exercise of judgment and discretion in determining whether he is a suitable and qualified person for such office. As stated, supra, respondents admit in their return and it is admitted in their briefs that they have determined he is qualified, but refuse their consent upon the other ground, which, if they are mistaken in their construction of the law, is equivalent to an arbitrary refusal to act. Relator's right to relief, therefore, turns upon the construction of that portion of the foregoing statute that confers upon the court authority to make the appointment. The language is not clear, and plausible argument may be offered to support, respectively, the contentions of relator and respondents. Narrowed down to its strictest analysis, the difference in their contentions is as follows: Respondents contend that the phrase "by and with the consent of the county commissioners" is a limitation upon the authority of the court to act under the statute; that he has no power to appoint or designate anyone as probation officer unless they consent to his authority so to act. Relator, on the other hand, contends that said phrase is a limitation only upon the selection or appointment made by him, which appointment or selection can not become final until consented to or approved by the county commissioners upon their determining that the person proposed by him for the office is a discreet person of good character. No case construing a similar statute has been called to our attention by either of the parties and we have been unable by the search we have had an opportunity to make to find any decided case that throws any light upon the question. The intent of the legislature must be gathered from the general purposes of the act and the context of which the ambiguous language forms a part. It is the theory of respondents that it was intended to lodge with them the judgment and discretion to determine the necessity of such appointment, in order to protect the county against the expense of a needless officer.

We think if this had been the purpose of the statute it would not have provided that such officer shall serve during the pleasure of the court; for, if the legislature had deemed it important that the expense of such officer should not be incurred, without the necessity therefor being approved by the county commissioners, it would not have left it within the power of the court to continue such expense after once begun, notwithstanding the county commissioners might be impressed that the necessity therefor had ceased to exist. If it had been intended that the county commissioners should ascertain in the first instance whether the number of juvenile cases before the court and the number of dependent and neglected children in the county are sufficient to demand the services of such an officer, the continuance of such an officer would have been made dependent upon the determination both of the court and of said commissioners of its necessity, so that such officer could be discontinued from service at any time either of said authorities decided there was no demand for such expense. We think, on the other hand, the purpose of the act in providing for the consent of the county commissioners to this appointment was to safeguard and insure the selection of a competent and suitable person for this responsible position. A reading of the various provisions of the act very quickly discloses that its purpose is, as declared by the last section thereof, to provide that the care and custody and discipline of neglected, dependent, or delinquent children shall be, as nearly as can be, that which would be given by parents; and that the reformation and saving of the delinquent child to the State and society is the primary object to be accomplished, rather than punishment of the crime and the vindication of the law. The act provides that in cases involving neglected and dependent children, they shall be brought before the court by service of summons instead of by warrant, which may be served by the sheriff or probation officer; and it authorizes the court, pending a hearing of any petition relative to any dependent or neglected child under the age of 16 years to leave the child in the custody of such officer, or have it kept in some suitable place provided for by the city, county, or State authorities; and upon final hearings authorizes the court to commit such a child to the care of a suitable State institution, or to the care of some reputable citizen of good moral character, or to some training school or industrial school, or to some association willing to receive it. The duties imposed by the statute, quoted above, upon the probation officer to make an investigation in all such cases and to represent the interests of the child when such a case is heard, and from time to time furnish the court with information that will enable the court best to protect the interests of the child, render this officer one of great importance to the county and the State. His duties are such as to require tact, patience, and kindness, and yet firmness, with a thorough knowledge of child nature; and, since he is to be such an important factor in the reformation of the child, he ought, as is required by law, to be a person of good moral character. The county judge, whose court has jurisdiction coextensive with the county in all misdemeanor cases and of all probate matters, including, or course, matters pertaining to guardianships and wards, is in the best position to ascertain and know the necessity of such an officer in his county and how long that necessity continues; but in the selection of a person with the peculiar qualifications the position requires, he can and no doubt will be, in most instances, greatly aided by the suggestions and concurring judgment of the county commissioners; and such we think was all that was intended to be accomplished by that portion of the statute under consideration. The order of the trial court commands respondents to convene immediately in session and consent to and approve the appointment of said Flynn as probation officer. Consenting to and approving his appointment involves the exercise of discretion in determining whether he is a discreet and moral person, qualified for the appointment; and if the record did not disclose that respondents had exercised this discretion and found him qualified for the office, and that his appointment should be approved unless they are authorized to determine the necessity of his appointment, the order of the lower court should be modified so as to command them only to act and exercise their discretion within the limitations of the statute as herein construed. (Mobile Mutual Insurance Co. v. Cleveland, 76 Ala., 321.) But, since respondents concede his qualifications and that the approval should be made, if they can not deny the authority of the court to determine his necessity therefor, there remains nothing to be done by them, except the act of expressing their consent and making record thereof, which they may be commanded to do by the writ sought. (Tilden v. Sacramento County, 41 Cal., 68; State ex rel. Johnson v. Lutz et al., 136 Mo., 633; Harwood v. Quimby, 44 Iowa, 385.)

The judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

Turner, C. J.; Williams, Kane, and Dunn, JJ., concur.

THE CRIMINAL COURT OF APPEALS OF OKLAHOMA.

In re Application of John Powell for the writ of habeas corpus. No. A–1533. Filed January 11, 1912.

1. (a) It is not necessary for the title to an act of the legislature to embrace an abstract of its contents. It is sufficient if the title contains a reasonable intimation of the matters under legislative consideration to state the subject of the bill in general terms and with fewest words, in accordance with the general custom, to which the framers of the constitution intended the legislature to conform.

(b) When there are numerous provisions having one general object, the title is sufficient if it fairly indicates the general purpose of the act. The details providing for the accomplishment of such purpose are to be regarded as necessary incidents.

(c) All the provisions of this act are for one object only: The care of delinquent and dependent children, as expressed in the title.

2. (a) Under the provisions of this act a child under 16 years of age can not be guilty of the commission of a crime, except in cases wherein it is shown that such child knew the wrongfulness of his acts at the time they were committed.

(b) The acts or omissions of a child which in an adult would be a crime, under this law, constitute juvenile delinquency only, except in cases wherein the juvenile court finds that the child, at the time the acts complained of were committed, knew the wrongfulness thereof, and holds such child for trial before a court of competent jurisdiction.

(c) This law contemplates an investigation by the juvenile court of the complaints against a child with the view of determining whether or not the child committed such acts, and if so, whether or not he knew the wrongfulness thereof in a criminal sense. And if upon such investigation the juvenile court finds affirmatively, it is then within his discretion to hold such child to be proceeded with in the manner provided by law in the court having competent jurisdiction of the offense, certifying to such court both his finding as to probable cause and that the child knew the wrongfulness of the acts complained of.

(d) The finding of the juvenile court that the child knew the wrongfulness of his acts and was capable of committing the offense, and did commit it, does not relieve the State of the burden of proving upon the trial that the child knew the wrongfulness thereof, as provided in subdivision 2, section 2034, Snyder's statute. The only effect the act in question has on said subdivision is to change the word "fourteen" to "sixteen" subsequent to the action of the juvenile court.

3. The object of this statute is not punishment, but reform and moral training. It creates a new offense, but creates no new court, and takes away no jurisdiction heretofore conferred upon any of the courts to try offenses against the penal laws of the State. It simply places additional duties on the county courts and provides a different method of bringing children before the courts to be dealt with.

4. It is no light matter to compel a boy or girl to spend his or her childhood days in restraint, and there should be clear proof of the necessity of such a course before a child is committed under the provisions of this act. The law contemplates a system of probation wherein the State places itself in loco parenti. The treatment of a child contemplated by this law is as near as may be that which should be given by its parents. This act should be liberally construed in favor of the welfare of the child, and only for grave offenses, such as affect the general welfare of the public, should a child be proceeded against in accordance with the laws that may be in force governing the commission of crime. The rights of the child whose welfare is at stake, as well as the rights of his parents, must be duly regarded and protected by the court.

5. (a) The law under consideration rests on the fundamental doctrine that a child the moment it is born owes allegiance to the government of the country of its birth and is entitled to the protection of that government for its person as well as its property.

(b) The legislature not only has the power to enact such provisions, but it is the duty of the State in its character as parens patriæ to do so.

6. The act of the legislature approved February 24, 1911, not only authorizes the commissioner of charities and corrections to institute proceedings in this character of cases, but imposes that duty.

7. Under the provisions of this act the juvenile courts are the only courts having jurisdiction to commit children to the training school for boys, and are the only courts having jurisdiction to hear and determine complaints against children under 16 years of age for the infraction of any penal statute whatever, until after such juvenile court shall have held the child to be tried in the manner hereinbefore set out. This act repeals sections 8539 and 8543 of Snyder's statute, and provides complete proceedings for the disposition of cases arising hereunder.

(Syllabus by the court.)

Dr. J. H. Stolper, general attorney for the commissioner of charities and corrections, for petitioner.

Robert Wimbish, county attorney of Pontotoc County, for respondent.

Armstrong, Judge: This is an application for the writ of habeas corpus brought by Miss Kate Barnard, State commissioner of charities and corrections, on behalf of John Powell, a boy 14 years of age, seeking his discharge from a judgment of conviction rendered by the district court of Pontotoc County, imposing a sentence of two years in the State training school at Pauls Valley.

Petitioner was arrested on the 8th day of September, 1911, upon a warrant issued by H. J. Brown, justice of the peace in said county, charging him with the crime of burglary. An examining trial was had before the said justice and petitioner held to await the action of the district court. On September 16 the county attorney of Pontotoc County filed an information against petitioner and on the 4th day of December thereafter a plea of guilty was entered and the aforesaid judgment and sentence rendered by the court.

The petition is based upon the provisions of the act of the legislature approved March 24, 1909, commonly known as the juvenile court law. The title to the act is as follows: "An act to define dependent, neglected, and delinquent children and to regulate the treatment, control, and custody thereof by county courts."

The objection was raised and argued that the commissioner of charities and corrections of the State of Oklahoma has not the authority to bring a suit of this nature. We are of the opinion that this objection is not well taken, for the reason that the right of the commissioner of charities and corrections to institute proceedings of this character is conferred, and the duty to do so imposed, by the act of February 24, 1911. (See Session Laws, 1911, p. 46.)

It is contended on the part of the State that the law is invalid because of defect in title; that it creates a juvenile court and a probation officer, which are not mentioned in the title; and because it embraces more than one subject.

Section 57, Article V of the Constitution, provides:

"Every act of the legislature shall embrace but one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title."

In order that a complete understanding may be had of the various questions considered in this opinion, we quote the statute involved in full, which is all the law on this subject enacted up to this time by the Legislature of Oklahoma:

"SECTION 1. This act shall apply to any child under the age of 16 years not now or hereafter an inmate of a State institution incorporated under the laws of this State. For the purpose of this act the words 'dependent child' and 'neglected child' shall mean any child under the age of 16 years who for any reason is destitute, homeless, or abandoned, or dependent upon the public for support, or has not the proper parental care or guardianship, or who habitually begs or receives alms, or who is found living in any house of ill fame or within a vicious or disreputable place, or whose home by reason of neglect, cruelty, or depravity on the part of its parents, guardians, or any other person in whose care it may be is an unfit place for such a child, and any child under the age of 8 years who is found begging, singing, or playing any musical instrument upon the street or giving any public entertainment or who accompanies or is used in aid of any person so doing.

"The words 'delinquent child' shall include any child under the age of 16 years who violates any law of the United States or of this State or any city or village ordinance; or who is incorrigible, either at home or in school, or who knowingly associates with thieves, vicious, or immoral persons, or who without just cause and without the consent of its parents or custodian absents itself from home or its place of abode, or who is growing up in idleness or crime; or who knowingly frequents a house of ill repute; or who knowingly frequents any policy shop or place where any gaming device is operated; or who patronizes or visits any public pool rooms or bucket shop, or who wanders about the street in the nighttime without being on any lawful business or occupation, or who habitually wanders about any railroad yards or tracks, or who habitually uses vile, obscene, vulgar, profane, or indecent language; or who is guilty of immoral conduct in any public place or about any schoolhouse; or who is addicted to the use of intoxicating liquor or any injurious drugs, or who is the user of cigarettes.

"Any child committing any of the acts herein mentioned shall be deemed a delinquent child and shall be proceeded against as such in the manner herein provided. A deposition of any child under this act or any evidence given in such cause shall not in any civil, criminal, or other cause or proceedings whatever in any court be lawful or proper evidence against such child for any purpose whatever, except in subsequent cases against the same child under this act. The word 'child' or 'children' may be held to mean one or more children, and the word 'parent' or 'parents' may be held to mean one or both parents when consistent with the intent of this act. The word 'association' shall include any corporation which includes in its purposes the care or disposition coming within the meaning of this act.

"SEC. 2. The county courts of the several counties in this State shall have jurisdiction in all cases coming within the terms and provisions of this act. In trials under this act the child informed against or any person interested in such child shall have the right to demand a trial by jury, which shall be granted as in other causes unless waived or the judge of his own motion may call a jury to try any such case. In all counties a special record book or books shall be kept by this court for all cases coming within the provisions of this act, to be known as the 'juvenile record,' and the docket or calendar of the court upon which shall appear the case or cases under the provisions of this act shall be known as the 'juvenile docket,' and for convenience the court in the trial and disposition of such cases shall be called the 'juvenile court.' Between the 1st and 30th days of October of each year the clerk or judge who acts as such clerk of the county courts shall submit to the commissioner of charities and corrections a report in writing upon blanks to be furnished by said commissioner, showing the number and disposition of delinquent children brought before such court, together with such other useful information regarding such cases and the parentage of such children as may reasonably be obtained at the trials thereof, provided that the name or identity of any such child or parents shall not be disclosed in such report.

"SEC. 3. Any reputable person, being a resident of the county, having knowledge of a child in his county who appears to be either neglected, dependent, or delinquent, may file with the clerk of court having jurisdiction in the matter a petition in writing, setting forth facts verified by affidavits. The petition shall set forth the name and residence of the legal guardian, if known, or if not known, then the name and residence of near relative, if there be one and his residence known. It shall be sufficient that the affidavit is upon information and belief.

"SEC. 4. Upon the filing of the petition a summons shall be issued requiring the person having custody or control of the child, or with whom the child may be, to appear with the child at a place and time stated in this summons, which time and place shall not be less than 24 hours after service. The parents of the child, if living and the residence is known to the petitioner, or its legal guardian, if there be one and his residence is known to the petitioner; or, if there is neither parent nor guardian, or if his or her residence be not known, then some near relative, if his residence be known to the petitioner, shall be notified of the proceedings, and in any case the judge may appoint some suitable person to act in behalf of the child; summons and notice may be served by the sheriff or by any duly appointed probation officer, either by reading the same to the person or persons or by leaving a copy thereof at his usual place of abode, or with some person of his family of the age of 10 years or upwards and informing such person of the contents thereof. The return of such summons and notice with indorsement of service by the sheriff or probation officer in accordance herewith shall be sufficient proof thereof. If the person summoned as herein provided shall fail without reasonable cause to appear and abide the order of the court or bring the child, he may be proceeded against as in case of contempt of court. In case summons can not be served or the party fails to obey the summons, and in any case when it shall be made to appear to the court that such summons will be ineffectual, a warrant may be issued on the order of the court, either against the parent or guardian or the person having the custody of the child or with whom the child may be or against the child itself.

"On return of the summons or other process, or on the appearance of the child, with or without summons or other process, in person before the court, and on the return of the service of notice, if there be any person notified, or as soon thereafter as may be, the court shall proceed to hear and dispose of the case in a summary manner. Pending the final disposition of the case the court may order the child to be retained in the possession of the person having charge of the same, or any other person, or to be kept in some suitable place provided by the city, county, or State authorities.

"SEC. 5. The court shall have authority to appoint or designate, by and with the consent of the county commissioners, one discreet person of good character to serve as probation officer during the pleasure of the court, said probation officer to receive compensation of $50 per month from county fund, to be paid by county commissioners. In case the probation officer shall be appointed by any court, it shall be the duty of the clerk of the court, if practicable, to notify the said probation officer in advance when any child is to be brought before the court; it shall be the duty of said probation officer to make such investigation as may be required by the court, to be present in court in order to represent the interests of the child when the case is heard, to furnish to the court such information and assistance as the judge may require, to take such charge of any child before and after trial as may be directed by the court.

"SEC. 6. When any child under the age of 16 years shall be found to be dependent or neglected, within the meaning of this act, the court may make an order committing the child to the care of a suitable State institution, or to the care of some reputable citizen of good moral character, or to the care of some training school or industrial school, as provided by law, or to the care of some association willing to receive it, embracing in its objects the purpose of caring for or obtaining homes for neglected or dependent children, which association shall have been accredited as hereinafter provided. The court may, when the health or condition of the child may require it, cause the child to be placed in a public hospital or institution for treatment or special care, or in a private hospital or institution which will receive it for like purpose without charge.

"SEC. 7. In any case where the court shall award a child to the care of any association or individual in accordance with the provisions of this act the child shall, unless otherwise ordered, become a ward and be subject to the guardianship of the association or individual to whose care it is committed. Such association or individual shall have authority to place such child in a family home with or without indenture, and may be made party to any proceeding for the legal adoption of a child, and may by its or his attorney or agent appear in any court where such proceedings are pending and assent to such adoption. And such assent shall be sufficient to authorize the court to enter the proper order or decrees of adoption. Such guardianship shall not include the guardianship of the estate of the child.

"SEC. 8. In the case of a delinquent child the court may continue the hearing from time to time and commit the child to the care or custody of a probation officer or any other person, or may allow such child to remain in its home, subject to the visitation of the probation officer, such child to report to the probation officer as often as may be required; or the court may cause the child to be placed in a suitable family home, subject to the friendly supervision of a probation officer and the further order of the court; or it may authorize the child to be boarded out in some suitable family home, in case provision is made by voluntary contribution or otherwise for the payment of the board of such child until a suitable provision may be made for the child in a home without such payment; or the court may commit the child, if a boy, to the training school for boys, or if a girl to an industrial school for girls; or the court may commit the child to any institution in the county incorporated under the laws of this State that may care for delinquent children or that may be provided by a city or county, suitable for the care of such children, or to any State institution which may be established for the care of delinquent children; or the court may commit the child to the care and custody of some association that will receive it, embracing in its objects the care of neglected or dependent children, and that has been duly accredited, as hereinafter provided. In no case shall a child beyond the age of 16 years be committed to an institution. A child committed to such an institution shall be subject to the control of the superintendent thereof, and the said superintendent shall have power to parole such children under such conditions as he may prescribe.

"Every child who shall have been adjudged delinquent, whether allowed to remain at home or placed in a home or committed to an institution, shall continue to be a ward of the court until such child shall have been discharged as such ward by order of court or shall have reached the age of 21 years, and such court may during the period of wardship cause such child to be returned to the court for further or other proceedings, including parole or release from an institution: Provided, however, That notice of all applications to the court for such parole or release shall be given to the superintendent of such institution at least 10 days before the time set for the hearing thereof, or the consent, in writing, of such superintendent to such parole or release shall be filed. The court may, however, in its discretion, cause such child to be proceeded against in accordance with the laws that may be in force governing the commission of crime.

"SEC. 9. No court or magistrate shall commit a child under 12 years of age to a jail or police station, but if such child is unable to give bail it may be committed to the care of the sheriff, police officer, or probation officer, who shall keep such child in some suitable place, which shall be provided by the city or county outside of the inclosure of the jail or police station. When any child shall be sentenced to confinement in any institution to which adult convicts are sentenced it shall be unlawful to confine such child in the same building with such adult convicts, or to confine such child in the same yard or inclosure with such adult convicts, or to bring such child into any yard or building in which adult convicts may be present.

"SEC. 10. This act shall be liberally construed, to the end that its purpose may be carried out, to wit: That the care and custody and discipline of the child shall approximate, as nearly as may be, that which should be given by its parents, and that, as far as practicable, any delinquent child shall be treated not as a criminal, but as misdirected and misguided, and needing aid, encouragement, help, and assistance.

"SEC. 11. All acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed."

A similar law to this was passed by the Legislature of Pennsylvania in 1903. Among the objections raised to such act in the supreme court of that State was the following: "That the act contained more subjects than one, some of which are not expressed in the title." The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in Commonwealth v. Fisher (213 Pa. St., 51), in discussing this proposition says:

"No new court is created by the act under consideration. In its title it is called an act to define the powers of an already existing and ancient court. In caring for the neglected or unfortunate children of the Commonwealth and in defining the powers to be exercised by that court in connection with these children, recognized by the State as its wards, requiring its care and protection, jurisdiction is conferred upon that court as the appropriate one, and not upon a new court."

And again:

"It is a mere convenient designation of the court of quarter sessions to call it when caring for children a juvenile court, but no such court as an independent tribunal is created. It is still the court of quarter sessions before which the proceedings are conducted."

Pennsylvania has a constitutional provision similar to ours relative to the title of legislative enactments; and, indeed, most, if not all, of the other States have such provision.

The question of the sufficiency of the title of legislative enactments has been frequently before the courts. The Supreme Court of California in Ex parte Liddell (93 Cal., 633) holds that—

"It is not necessary for the title of an act to embrace an abstract of its contents, but if it contains a reasonable intimation of the matters under legislative consideration it is sufficient to state the subject of the bill in general terms and with the fewest words, in accordance with general custom, to which the framers of the constitution intended the legislature to conform.

"Numerous provisions having one general object fairly indicated by the title may be united, and when the general purpose of the act is declared the details provided for the accomplishment of that purpose will be regarded as necessary incidents."

See also Montclair v. Ramsdell (107 U. S., 147); Commonwealth v. Fisher, supra.

While we think the title to the act in question could have been more complete without subjecting it to other criticism, yet it was sufficient for the purpose intended. All the provisions of this act are for one object only—the care of delinquent and dependent children, as expressed in the title.

It is next objected that the law is invalid because it takes away the exclusive jurisdiction of the district court to try felony cases.

Section 10, Article VII, of the Constitution confers on the district courts original but not exclusive jurisdiction, and even this jurisdiction is conferred subject to the limitation of section 9, Article VII, which section confers original jurisdiction only until otherwise provided by law. This question has been thoroughly considered by this court in Ex parte Whitehouse (3 Okla. Cr., 97; 104 Pac., 374), but no powers of the district courts to try felony cases is taken away by the act in question. The juvenile court, as such, can not try felony cases, nor does the act in question confer or intend to confer any such powers upon the county courts sitting in their capacity as juvenile courts. The legislature in its wisdom by this law says that a child under 16 years of age can not be guilty of the commission of a crime except in cases where it is shown that such child knew the wrongfulness of his acts at the time they were committed. The acts committed by such child which in an adult would be a crime, under this statute constitute juvenile delinquency only, except in cases of a serious character, when the juvenile court is authorized by the act supra, in its discretion, to cause such child to be proceeded against in accordance with the law that may be in force governing the commission of crime.

Prior to the enactment of the law in question the statutes provided—

"All persons are capable of committing crimes except those belonging to the following classes: 1. Children under the age of 7 years. 2. Children of the age of 7 years but under the age of 14 years, in the absence of proof that at the time of committing the act or neglect charged against them they knew its wrongfulness." (Sec. 2034, Snyder's Stats.)

The juvenile-court law under consideration, in effect, provides that children under the age of 16 are incapable of committing crime; but in order that no great wrong should be done to society the legislature took the precaution to provide that a child brought before the juvenile court on a charge of delinquency might, in its discretion, cause such child to be proceeded against in accordance with the law governing the commission of crime. See section 3, paragraph 2, act supra. This provision contemplates an investigation by the juvenile court of the acts complained of, with the view of determining whether or not the child committed them, and if so, whether or not he knew the wrongfulness thereof in a criminal sense; and should the court find affirmatively, it is then within its discretion, under the law, to hold such child to be proceeded with in the manner provided by law in a court having competent jurisdiction of the offense committed, certifying to such court both its finding as to probable cause and that the child knew the wrongfulness thereof. The finding of the juvenile court, or the county judge sitting as such, that the child knew the wrongfulness of his act and was capable of committing the offense, and did commit it, does not relieve the State of the burden of proving that the child knew the wrongfulness of its act at the time of the commission thereof upon the trial before a jury in a court of competent jurisdiction, as provided in subdivision 2, section 2034, Snyder's Statutes. The effect of the juvenile-court law under consideration has on said subdivision is simply to change the word "fourteen" to "sixteen," subsequent to the foregoing proceedings.

It is next urged that the legislature had no right under the Constitution to enact the law in question.

We are of the opinion that the legislature did have the right to enact the law. It is a fact well known to all members of the legal profession and a great number of our citizenship that all laws relating to the commitment of minors to various institutions, whether for care and guardianship or for purposes of restraint and reform, are entirely statutory and have been uniformly upheld. Such provisions found no lodgment in the common law, as is the case with most of our criminal statutes. But the legal principle involved in the construction and application of these statutes authorizing such commitments are founded on the common-law doctrine generally.

Commitments of children to juvenile institutions can be distinguished into three essential classes—commitments as a punishment for crime, commitments where the proceedings are quasi criminal, and commitments for care and guardianship.

Statutes authorizing the commitment of juvenile offenders to houses of refuge and juvenile reformatories instead of imprisonment obtain in most States. In this class of cases it is generally held that the statutes must receive the same construction as other penal statutes. Such a provision is also contained in the United States statutes. (See U. S. Rev. Stats., pars. 5544, 5550.)

The proceedings in another class of cases, referred to supra, have been designated quasi criminal. Statutory provisions are found in a number of the codes of various States authorizing the commitment of minors to reformatory institutions upon application or complaint of parents, guardians, or other responsible persons, made before civil magistrates, alleging that the minor is incorrigible and beyond domestic control. Legislation of this kind is not unconstitutional. The object of the detention in these cases is not punishment, but reform and moral training, as is the purpose of the statute before us, and proceedings under statutes authorizing such commitment have been held to be valid on the ground that the parens patriæ, or sovereign right to care for the education of its members, belongs of strict right to the State, under whose sanction the custody or charge of the minor is thus transferred from the guardian who declares his inability to fulfill the purpose of guardianship. (See Roth v. House of Refuge, 31 Md., 329; Ex parte Crouse, 4 Whart., 9.)

It is no light matter to compel a boy or girl to spend his or her childhood days in restraint, and there should be clear proof of the necessity of such a course before a child is committed under the provisions of this act. Sections 5, 6, 7, and 8 of this law provide for a system of probation, the object of which is to help the child through a correctional method by the State placing itself in loco parenti. The treatment of a child contemplated by this law is as near as may be that which should be given by its parents. The juvenile courts should, therefore, first exercise the authority conferred by the law and place the child, where possible, on probation either with the child's parents, when suitable, or, where there are no such parents, with any other fit person of good moral character, to be supervised by the probation officer, who is required to make frequent reports to the court. This act should be liberally construed in favor of the welfare and best interest of the child, and only for grave offenses, such as affect the general welfare of the public, should a child be proceeded against in accordance with the laws that may be in force governing the commission of crime. The rights of the child whose welfare is at stake, as well as the rights of his parents, must be duly regarded and protected by the court.

The last class of cases referred to supra, for which children may be committed to juvenile institutions, includes all those cases in which the State intervenes in its capacity of parens patriæ and through its officers assumes the care and education of children who are either without a guardian or place of abode, commonly designated as vagrant and destitute minors, and in some jurisdictions those who are neglected, ill treated, and not properly cared for by their guardians, appointed or natural. In this State this class are cared for in the Orphan's Home at Pryor Creek.

Interference or intervention by process of law in matters affecting the care and guardianship of minors is carried on to an extent in the United States that is unknown to many legal systems of other portions of the civilized world. For this reason it is interesting and instructive to inquire into the precise ground upon which such action rests and the direction and extent it may properly assume. The fundamental doctrine upon which governmental intervention in all such cases is based is that the moment a child is born it owes allegiance to the Government of the country of its birth, and is entitled to the protection of that Government for his person as well as his property. In order to discharge this duty of protection the Government, by way of safeguard and for the benefit of the infant, places him under guardianship, but it is only that there may be best secured to him the assistance and protection of law and that he may acquire that education which will enable him afterwards to discharge the duty which he owes to his country as well as to himself. The authority of all guardians is derived from the State, such guardians being appointed when the occasion for them arises or is expected to arise. The nature of a guardianship is that of a trust, the execution of which is at all times superintended by the State.

It has been held by the highest courts of Massachusetts, Ohio, Wisconsin, New York, and others that the legislature not only has the power to enact such provisions as those under consideration, but that it is the duty of the State in its character of parens patriæ to do so. The performance of such duty is justly regarded as one of the most important governmental functions, and a constitutional limitation must be so understood as not to interfere with its proper and legitimate exercise. See Roth v. House of Refuge, supra; Prescott v. State, 19 Ohio St. 184; Ex parte Nichol, 110 Cal. 653. The cases cited do not all discuss the identical question under consideration, but the reasoning applies with full force.

It is evident that this law was enacted by the legislature in the interest of the highest principles of humanity and for the greatest and best interests of the childhood of the State, especially that type of children who need the help and guardianship of the highest power of the State. It is but natural that the jurisdiction in this class of cases should be conferred on the county courts. The statutes already existing at the time of the passage of this law conferred upon the county courts the duty of looking after the property rights of children. In fact, the county court is properly the children's court, and the selection of the judges of these courts is usually had with this in view.

Again it is objected that this statute attempts to punish violations of the Federal laws. This point was not extensively argued. We have already determined that this is not a punitive statute, but a reformative one. It is not the purpose or intention of this statute to punish for the violation of any specific provision of any code, but merely to provide that a child who, without knowing the wrongfulness of his acts, commits such acts is guilty not of an infraction of those provisions of either nation, State, or municipalities, but is to be adjudged and considered a juvenile offender. In other words, a delinquent child as defined in the act itself. No provision of the statute under consideration prescribes a penalty for the violation of any statute, nor is a child committed for that purpose, but for the purpose of reformation, education, and development.

There is one other proposition raised by this petition that we deem it well to dispose of. That is the question of the jurisdiction of the district or other courts than the juvenile courts, to commit juvenile offenders to the Training School for Boys. Section 8539, Snyder's Statutes, is as follows:

"When complaint, the facts of which are established by due proof, shall be made to a magistrate or justice, as aforesaid, that any boy between the ages of 7 and 16 years is a proper subject for the guardianship of the State training school, in consequence of vagrancy or incorrigibly vicious conduct, and that from the moral depravity or other insuperable obstacle on the part of the parent, guardian, or next friend, in whose custody such boy may be, such parent, guardian, or next friend is incapable or unwilling to exercise the proper care and discipline over such incorrigible or vicious boy, such magistrate or justice, as the case may be, shall commit such boy to the state training school for such term as he shall deem proper within the limits prescribed in a previous section of this act."

Section 8543, Snyder's Statutes, is as follows:

"All boys committed under this act shall be committed until they arrive at the age of 21, unless sooner reformed. Boys not over 16 nor under 10 years of age may be committed to said school by any judge of the police court, county judge, or district judge, or the judge of any court of record having jurisdiction in criminal cases which may be created by law, or any conviction of any offense against the laws of the State, and any such boy convicted of any crime or offense, the punishment of which is in whole or in part confinement in the jail or penitentiary may, at the discretion of the court giving sentence, in lieu of being sent to the jail or penitentiary, be committed to the State training school."

These provisions apparently confer this jurisdiction, but these sections were enacted prior to the enactment of the law in question, and are directly in conflict with the fundamental purpose of many of its provisions.

This act in addition to providing for the jurisdiction of the county court sitting as a juvenile court has many other mandatory provisions, such as requiring the keeping of separate dockets, journals, and reports to the commissioner of charities and corrections; the appointment of probation officers, and the procedure in general to be had in dealing with children such as are not provided for nor contemplated in any other court of the State.

Section 11 of the act before us provides that "All acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed." The general provisions of Snyder's Statutes, supra, were sufficient to confer this right upon the district and other courts, but the provision last quoted clearly repeals them. Should the general provisions of sections 8539 and 8543 stand, the very purpose of the law under consideration would be destroyed. It was evidently the intention of the legislature to give this right to commit children to the State training school for the purposes of reform, education, and development into the exclusive control of the juvenile courts, and we are impelled to the conclusion that this is the effect of the law as it stands. It is also provided that a child committed under the provisions of this act shall be committed until he is 21 years of age, unless sooner reformed. A commitment to the State Training School for Boys for a definite period is not warranted by this statute. Commitment should follow statutory provisions. In the case before us the child was committed for two years.

The issues raised by the petition were orally argued and have been exhaustively briefed by Dr. J. H. Stolper, counsel for the commissioner of charities and corrections, on behalf of petitioner, and extensively argued by Robert Wimbish, county attorney for Pontotoc County, on behalf of the State.

The questions here discussed were not raised before the district court of Pontotoc County, and the attention of that court was not called to any of the provisions of this act. Had that been done it is probable that this cause would not be here on habeas corpus.

From the views expressed upon the questions raised by the petition in this case we conclude that the statute is constitutional and valid in every respect. (See Commonwealth v. Fisher, supra; Ex parte Nichol, supra; State v. Reed, 123 La., 411; 49 So., 3; Blanchard v. Raines, 20 Fla., 467; Baldwin v. Bennett, 6 Rob. (La.), 309.)

Let the writ issue and petitioner be discharged from the custody of the sheriff of Pontotoc County. Said sheriff is ordered to deliver the prisoner into the custody of the juvenile court of said county to be proceeded with according to law.

Furman, presiding judge, and Doyle, judge, concur.

LEGAL DEPARTMENT.

[Dr. J. H. Stolper, general attorney, department of charities and corrections.]

THE PRINCIPLES OF THE OKLAHOMA JUVENILE COURT, AS CONSTRUED BY OUR APPELLATE COURTS.

The juvenile-court law is, in my humble opinion, as I have recently said in briefing the matter for the Oklahoma Criminal Court of Appeals, the greatest law given to mankind since the handing down of the Ten Commandments by Moses. While the several provisions of the law, as all human laws, can be more perfect and should be improved in many details, the principle upon which the law is based is so sublime as to make it almost perfection. The principle is that, while a child can and often does commit acts which are wrong and may even cause injury either to society or to individuals, yet the average boy and girl under the age of 16—and I would be willing to go higher and say under the age of 18 years—lacks that mature conscious knowledge in a criminal sense that his or her act is wrong. Such acts, especially in younger children, are entirely without those elements of turpidity or moral depravity essential to constitute a crime in a criminal sense, and such acts of omission or commission by children never rise above mere childish wrong, which the Oklahoma law, as construed by Hon. James R. Armstrong, of the Oklahoma Criminal Court of Appeals, are designated as juvenile delinquency.

The juvenile-court law goes a great step further than the criminal law does. According to Mr. Justice Holmes, in speaking of the principle on what punishment by criminal law is based, says: "It has never ceased to be one object of punishment to satisfy the desire for vengeance. * * * The desire for vengeance imports an opinion that its object is actually and personally to blame." (The Criminal Law; The Common Law, 40 Holmes.) Again, our great justice of the Supreme Court of the United States in proving his views, says in relation to the criminal law punishment: "If punishment stood on the moral grounds which are proposed for it, the first thing to be considered would be those limitations in the capacity for choosing rightly which arise from abnormal instincts, want of education, lack of intelligence, and all other defects which are most marked in the criminal classes. I do not say they should not be, or at least I do not need to, for my argument. I do not say that the criminal law does more good than harm. I only say that it is not enacted or administered on that theory." (Holmes, The Common Law, 45.)

The juvenile law is enacted primarily with the view of prevention instead of punishment. Its object is to save the feeble child, through the parental care of the State, by placing the child—the boy and girl of to-day; the man and woman, the father and mother of to-morrow—in favorable surroundings where the child can be taught to do right and form good and proper habits. The juvenile-court law takes cognizance of all those elements which Mr. Justice Holmes says the criminal law does not. It is reformative instead of punitive, and tends to preserve the child from the evil consequences of a childish act instead of destroying the child, either physically or morally, as the criminal-law punishment does.

The juvenile-court law in the United States has become widely known through the activity of such men as Judges Hurley and Julian Mack, of Chicago; Hon. Flexner, of Kentucky; Judge Ben Lindsay, of Denver, Colo.; and others. In Oklahoma it was enacted through the efforts of the department of charities and corrections, during the administration of Miss Kate Barnard as commissioner and Hobart Huson as assistant commissioner, before the writer became connected with the department of charities and corrections; but it has been the writer's privilege to defend the children of Oklahoma coming within the operation of the juvenile-court law from being punished under the criminal law, and during such litigations to succeed in having this law adjudicated, and to give the solemn act of the wise legislature that additional force which every act receives by being construed by the two highest courts of the State.

The opinion of Judge James R. Armstrong, concurred in by the full court of the Oklahoma Criminal Court of Appeals, is epoch making. Twice was it the privilege of the writer to appear before Judge James R. Armstrong in defense of the juvenile-court law and the rights of the childhood of Oklahoma, and each time this learned judge has been called upon he has upheld the juvenile-court law. In each case, In re Habeas Corpus Ennis Tuck and In re Habeas Corpus of John Powell, he has shown himself a friend of childhood as well as a profound lawyer and judge.

The opinions of Judges Armstrong and Hayes verily deserve to be treasured next to the family Bible in each home where the are children and where the mother's and father's hearts beat with love for such children, for in these two opinions the juvenile-court law of Oklahoma is firmly and finally established. The amount of work accomplished by Judge Armstrong in the decision In re Habeas Corpus of John Powell was enormous; in fact, so great that the opposing counsel was under the impression that we would not be able to get a full construction of all the fundamental questions involved; but the reading of the decision and opinion of Judge Armstrong at once shows that there is no limit to the capacity for labor of the three great lawyers, the present judges of Oklahoma Criminal Court of Appeals. Truly have the children of Oklahoma and each true mother of Oklahoma to be grateful that, at a very critical moment of this juvenile law's existence, where every section was challenged as unconstitutional, that on the bench of Oklahoma's highest criminal court is found a judge whose love for children and for the future best interest of the State is so great that he neither spared himself nor his worthy associates, and finally by a unanimous decision of the whole court sustained the juvenile law and has protected the best interest of the childhood of the State of Oklahoma, for Judge Armstrong leaves nothing vague. It clearly and fairly adjudicates all questions pertaining to the treatment of children in Oklahoma; and may judges of other courts, especially of our beloved State of Tennessee, profit by the great classical work of Judges Armstrong, Furman, and Doyle, to whom, if justice is done, a monument of pure love should be built in the heart of every child-loving man and woman in Oklahoma and the whole world.

The Supreme Court of the State of Oklahoma, in State of Oklahoma ex rel., etc., v. The Board of County Commissioners of Seminole County, has shown itself as truly great by the clear, definite opinion written by the true law scholar, Samuel W. Hayes. It has for all time shown that the interests of the children are safe in the hands of Judges Hayes, Williams, Turner, Dunn, and Kane, for, by a unanimous opinion, these learned judges have held affirmatively that the dependent, neglected, and delinquent children of Oklahoma shall have a friend in the person of county probation officers. It is held that a probation officer, when qualified according to law and appointed by the juvenile-court judge, must be confirmed by the boards of county commissioners.

It would be unbecoming for me to comment upon the efforts and labors of the officers of the department of charities and corrections. This I leave to the unbiased judgment of Oklahoma's mothers and fathers, whose best interest it is the sincere wish of this department always to serve, as long as the present personnel have authority to act. To those who are inclined to resent the activity of the commissioner and the department of charities and corrections of Oklahoma, I beg them to remember that all the acts of this department have only one object and one purpose, which is to serve the best interest of all the people, and do our full duty, irrespective of consequences, except the welfare of the whole State of Oklahoma.

In conclusion, I beg to congratulate the people of the State of Oklahoma that our highest judiciary consists of such men as Judges Armstrong, Furman, Doyle, Samuel W. Hayes, Robert L. Williams, Dunn, Turner, and Kane. May they long live and may the State of Oklahoma be always just and generous to the children and the helpless who need the State's help.

A perusal of the opinion of Judges Armstrong and Hayes, published in this number, will convince Oklahoma's citizenship that Oklahoma's justice and law is universal law and true justice, and may it ever be so.

DR. J. H. STOLPER.

INSPECTIONS.

[Dr. R. C. Meloy, State inspector department of charities and corrections.]

The following institutions have been inspected on the dates mentioned and recommendations made, as follows:

OTTAWA COUNTY JAIL,
Miami, Okla., January 4, 1912.

This county is still using the city jail building, which is very poorly arranged for the use of the county.

Recommended: That jail be whitewashed and cells painted at once; that bedding be thoroughly washed and disinfected; that clothing be procured for such prisoners as were suffering from the want of the same; that toilet (right by the bunks, which is open) be inclosed.

CRAIG COUNTY JAIL,
Vinita, Okla., January 5, 1912.

This county having the old Federal jail at Vinita is well equipped.

Recommended: That jail be whitewashed and cells painted at once; that a lot of junk which has accumulated in basement be destroyed.

CRAIG COUNTY POOR HOME,
Vinita, Okla., January 5, 1912.

Owing to the fact that the Federal Government has a specialist on diseases of the eyes, stationed at Vinita at the present time, for the purpose of furnishing free treatment to Indians who are suffering from any such diseases, and owing to the fact that many Indians apply for treatment who have no funds out of which to maintain themselves while staying at Vinita for treatment, the county commissioners opened the county home to such as were residents of Craig County, therefore they are badly crowded, having 14 charges, aside from about an equal number of those taking treatment.

Recommended: That walls of home be treated with a coat of kalsomine, and that great care be taken to guard against the possibility of any infectious eye trouble being communicated to other inmates of the home.

MAYES COUNTY JAIL,
Pryor, Okla., January 6, 1912.

During the year 1911, Mayes County erected a new brick jail, which while not approximating a good jail, is a great improvement over former conditions.

Recommended: That a trap door be placed in the large ceiling ventilator so that it would be possible to close same during extreme cold weather; and further, that it be done at once and without delay; that beef furnished prisoners be properly cooked, and that jail be whitewashed at once.

OKLAHOMA STATE HOME,
Pryor, Okla., January 6, 1912.

Recommended: That an adequate water supply be provided for boiler of heating plant, so that it would not be necessary to again shut down the plant during zero weather, simply on account of the city water system going to the bad.

Further, that under existing circumstances the hospital building be occupied as living rooms temporarily, there being stoves therein, and no one sick at present.

WAGONER COUNTY JAIL,
Wagoner, Okla., January 8, 1912.

This jail is in very good shape and they are painting the walls at this time.

Recommended: That kitchen be cleaned up and kept in better shape.

WAGONER CITY JAIL,
Wagoner, Okla., January 8, 1912.

Recommended: That jail be cleaned up, whitewashed and painted; that proper connection be made to gas stove, the same being in a dangerous condition at present.

OKLAHOMA SCHOOL FOR THE BLIND,
Fort Gibson, Okla, January 9, 1912.

Recommended: Sewerage arrangement. Facilities at present very poor.

CHEROKEE COUNTY JAIL,
Tahlequah, Okla., January 9, 1912.

This is an old-time prison, and while furnishing plenty of room, is in very poor shape.

Recommended: That sewerage connection be made; that windows be put in place; that concrete floor be put in, the old wooden floor having rotted out; that prisoners be given a change of meat diet occasionally; that the walls of the jail be whitewashed at once.

ADAIR COUNTY JAIL,
Stilwell, Okla., January 10, 1912.

Here they occupy a large upstair room which was formerly used as a schoolroom.

Recommended: That the entire jail—walls, floor, tables, kitchen, and bedding—be given a thorough cleaning and disinfecting, and that the walls be then whitewashed.

They are badly in need of sewerage facilities, having none whatever at present.

DR. R. C. MELOY.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on this question may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Under the leave granted I desire to submit an extract from the hearing in the investigation of Indian contracts before the select committee of the House of Representatives in 1910 from the statement of E. P. Hill, as follows:

Q. Who would be the principal beneficiary if that suit was to result favorably to the plaintiff?—A. ROBERT L. OWEN the principal.

Q. Was he in the United States Senate when any of the legislation relative to this claim was enacted?—A. He was a Member of the Senate when the amendment granting Howe et al. the right to intervene was passed. He was not a member when the original act was passed.

Q. The act was to enable the estate of Charles F. Winton, Mr. Winton being dead, to recover?—A. Yes.

Q. What has been done in that case?—A. We have taken testimony in Minnesota, Colorado, Ohio, Mississippi, Oklahoma, the District of Columbia, and Missouri in that case, and the court has extended the time of taking testimony on the part of some of the intervenors until the 1st of this next October. The case will be ready for brief and argument some time this winter.

Q. Who represents Senator OWEN?—A. Mr. W. H. Robeson, of Washington, whose offices are in the Bond Building.

Q. And you and Mr. McCurtain appear for the Mississippi Choctaws?—A. Yes, sir; and Mr. George M. Anderson, of the Department of Justice, appears for the Government.

Q. Has Mr. McHarg entered an appearance for the Choctaws?—A. No, sir.

Q. Has his attention been called to the suit?—A. No, sir; not that I know of. We have not called his attention to it.

Q. How many are there of the Mississippi Choctaws?—A. My recollection is that there are some fifteen or sixteen hundred of them that were finally enrolled and secured allotments. I think it is approximately that. I might be mistaken for all that. The greatest number of the people with whom Mr. Winton secured contracts, however, were never enrolled, it appears.

Q. I wish you would identify this paper I hand you and tell what it is.—A. This is the printed copy of the record on file in the Department of the Interior at Washington that was printed on request of the department in this case, and was printed and filed in this suit in the Court of Claims and now constitutes a part of the record in this case.

Q. Can you supply this committee a few copies of that record for its information?—A. I will try to.

Q. We don't care to burden this record with that if we can have a few copies for our information.—A. Before you leave that case I want to impress this on your mind: The Supreme Court of the United States has held once unless jurisdiction lays the right of appeal may be had. I have tried to get the right of appeal in this case. It would be a calamity to these people if these claims were sustained in the courts. I have always believed that these people could defeat this act, and I think it nothing but right and just that they should at least be granted the appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Q. Do you think it important that the next omnibus Indian bill have further legislation in regard to this case?—A. I think either party should be granted the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of this case. If I had known of this last legislation, it would not have gotten through without a vigorous protest on my part. I refer to that portion incorporated in the last Indian omnibus bill of May, 1908.

Q. And the probable attorneys' fees in that case would be approximately $6,000,000?—A. It would be more than that. The suit has been a quantum meruit.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] to concur in Senate amendment 99 with an amendment.

The question being taken; on a division (demanded by Mr. BURKE of South Dakota) there were—ayes 24, noes 36.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, at this hour in the day and at this time in the session I do not want either to make the point of no quorum or to ask for the yeas and nays. I simply want to protest against the defeating of this amendment, but I refrain from calling for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The noes have it, and the motion to concur with an amendment is lost.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desire to make any further point against any of these Senate amendments?

Mr. MANN. I want to submit some remarks on several of the amendments.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. MANN. I do not know how much time; not a great deal.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman any motion to make?

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman has a motion pending to disagree to all of the Senate amendments.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; and to send the matter back to conference.

Mr. MANN. I wish to be heard on that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I call attention very briefly to Senate amendment No. 105, which provides for the construction of a sanitary sewer system in the Platt National Park, Okla., under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, at an expense of $35,000. I believe the conference report which was agreed to by the conferees provided that this should be divided equally between the Government and the local authorities.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And to be applied under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Indian Affairs has no jurisdiction of this matter. It is an item which, if it is to go into any bill, ought to go into the sundry civil bill from the Committee on Appropriations. It is a matter that has been pending for a number of years and has been rejected by the Committee on Appropriations. It proposes to involve the Government in the construction of a sewer system for the benefit of a municipality.

Mr. CARTER. It has also been adopted by the Committee on Appropriations since it was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. When?

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman from Oklahoma is mistaken.

Mr. CARTER. I can give the gentleman the citation, if he will permit me.

Mr. MANN. As I stated, I do not desire to occupy a great deal of time.

Mr. CARTER. On February 25, 1909—page 3172, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, second session Sixtieth Congress—I offered an amendment carrying $16,000, $15,000 of which was authorized to be spent for a sewer in Platt National Park when the people of Sulphur, Okla., contributed an equal amount. This amendment was adopted without a roll call, there being no opposition whatever.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. Evidently it has not been done and it ought not to be done. The Government is not under any obligation to complete sewer systems for cities. The Platt National Park does not need a sewer system and no other small park needs a sewer system.

Mr. FERRIS. Now, if the gentleman will yield for a short statement before he passes away from this, it may obviate a reply and save time. The Platt National Park was established by two different acts of Congress. It was established on either side of a ravine, and it caused the town to be moved twice. They took up the only outlet in the park that the town of Sulphur has, and that is the reason for this thing. I will say that the department has estimated for it, and the total estimate of the department is $53,455.60. There is much to be said in favor of the statement that this ought not to be on an Indian appropriation bill, but it was placed there by another body and it is here before us and agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Not agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Agreed to by the conferees; not adopted. So the proposition is not quite so ferocious as the gentleman from Illinois stated it to be.

Mr. MANN. It is exactly what I stated it to be. I have not any doubt but there are arguments to be made in favor of the proposition, or else no one would have proposed it, but the question is whether any argument can be made sufficiently strong to warrant the General Government in paying out of the Treasury for a sewer system for a city anywhere in the country.

Mr. FERRIS. The department has for three years made the estimates, and have estimated this year for $35,000.

Mr. MANN. Yes; and that estimate went to the Committee on Appropriations and was turned down, and thereupon gentlemen went to the Senate and had the item inserted in the Indian appropriation bill, where it does not belong, after the House had refused to insert it in the bill where it was proper, if it was proper at all.

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman will allow me, is not this the same proposition where Congress tried to give this park to the city or the State?

Mr. MANN. I believe so, and when the sundry civil bill was in the House the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] himself agreed to eliminate from the sundry civil bill all provision for a sewer in the park.

Mr. FERRIS. I see by reading the RECORD that the gentleman from Illinois has stated that once before. I agreed to the elimination after the gentleman made a point of order on it, which was a very natural thing to do. In other words, when you are forced to agree to a thing you can not help it, and that was the kind of an agreement this was.

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly I made the point of order on the entire paragraph. There were other things in it and the gentleman agreed to have this part stricken out in order that the other things might remain in, and I think common fairness requires the gentleman to stand by his agreement. I stood by mine, and he got in the very things he wanted, which he could not get in over the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware that this was a Senate amendment, put on in the Senate, and was germane, in accordance with their rules, and hence we were compelled to make the best agreement we could with the Senate? There are 157 amendments, and we did the best we could. We cut it in two and required the city of Sulphur to pay one-half.

Mr. MANN. I am aware of the first principles of a conference, which are if one body of Congress, either the Senate or the House, inserts a new proposition which the other body does not agree to, it has to go out in conference.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois does not think there was any lack of insistence on this side?

Mr. MANN. I do not think there was any long discussion.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I trust that is no insinuation against the members of the House conferees.

Mr. MANN. No insinuation, but a plain statement of fact. Probably both gentlemen desired to have it in, but I do not know about that. There is no reflection on the distinguished gentleman from Texas or the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, just a word. I want to relieve the gentleman from South Dakota and the gentleman from Texas, the two other managers on the part of the House, from any responsibility——

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman can not, because the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], who was one of the conferees, can not deliver the House conferees without the consent of one or the other members of the House conferees.

Mr. CARTER. I understand that; that is perfectly plain. The gentleman did not let me finish. I wanted to relieve them of responsibility to this extent—that both of them were perfectly willing to have that item go out of the bill.

Mr. MANN. If they had said so, it would have gone out.

Mr. CARTER. They did say so.

Mr. MANN. Then they said so winking the other eye.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Oh, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Dakota did not sign the conference report.

Senate amendment No. 110 proposes a departure from the theory of our Government, which in the course of a few years, if adopted, will cost the Government millions of dollars and probably change the method of controlling the public schools of the country. Years ago there was a proposition made by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, I believe, Mr. Blair, proposing that the General Government should donate certain amounts of money for the public schools of the country. That proposition was bitterly opposed by the Democratic Members of Congress, if I recall rightly, although I was not then a Member of the House, and in the end it was defeated. Here comes now a bold, simple, cold proposition that out of the Federal Treasury we shall appropriate $300,000 for the common schools of Oklahoma. Gentlemen may say they desire this money because they have Indians to educate. They have no more Indians to educate there than there are colored people to educate in the Southern States, and if the General Government is to appropriate money out of the Federal Treasury for the support of common schools in Oklahoma in order to educate the Indians, by the same reasoning we should appropriate money out of the Federal Treasury to help educate the colored people of the South or of the North or the ignorant people anywhere—or the people, regardless of ignorance—the children of the country; and when they do that they will insist upon having the control over the disposition of the money. If we enter upon this proposition of appropriating out of the General Treasury for the support of the common schools of Oklahoma, then, having common schools in Illinois, we may desire to have money appropriated out of the Federal Treasury to support our schools, if we should retain control of them, and we have no desire in our State to put money into the Treasury in order to have it paid out in Oklahoma for the support of the common schools in Oklahoma, nor do we ask that Oklahoma shall pay money in to pay out for our common schools.

Next there are amendments 111 and 112.

Mr. Speaker, I have been a Member of this House now for several years. I am not very much in favor, ordinarily, of presidential vetoes, and I never before have made this statement on the floor of the House, but if these two amendments remain in this bill I shall consider it obligatory upon myself to urge the President to veto the bill. Amendment No. 111 is, in my judgment, a cold steal for the benefit of an attorney, who has already received $26,000 for services worth nothing like that, if worth anything at all.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, that statement was made by the gentleman from Illinois when this was up before to be referred to conference. I wondered then upon what facts he based his statement. I have since made an investigation to ascertain if such facts exist. I have not been able to find them, and I should be very glad to be enlightened.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if I could get a day in the House, or two hours, I think I could convince the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There is no dispute about that.

Mr. MANN. And I am sure that I could convince the House. I have a stack of papers an inch thick upon this subject which I have gone through and which I think conclusively demonstrates that this is a proposition to take money out of the Treasury to pay an attorney for services never rendered.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman aware that there is not one cent of attorneys' fees in that item?

Mr. MANN. I am aware of what it says.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to read that amendment?

Mr. MANN. No; but I will read it if the gentleman desires me to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is not a word of anything about attorneys' fees in there at all.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will read the item. The item is for the purpose—of reimbursing the trust funds of the Kickapoo Community in Mexico, said funds having been created under the provisions of an act of Congress of April 30, 1908—

And that statement is not correct—

for legal expenses necessarily incurred in defending said community, its funds, lands, and members from fraud.

The fact is that most of the services rendered were in themselves fraudulent, for the purpose of swindling the Indians out of an appropriation which Congress made to pay them, and $26,000 was taken out of a fund of only two or three hundred thousand dollars or less, for the payment of the attorney in the case.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the gentleman and other Members of the House, I want to say that $215,000 was appropriated for the Mexican Kickapoos. The gentleman that he referred to received twelve or twelve and a half per cent of that amount. He also received $86,000 of the $215,000 which belonged to that portion of the tribe that were in Mexico. It was paid him and he retained out of that, according to his own statement, $8,000 that he said that he had expended for the Indians prior to that time, so he got $26,000 in the fee, $8,000 to reimburse himself, and then had the balance of the money to disburse supposedly for the benefit of the Indians, but he accounts to no Government official for the expenditure of the money.

Mr. MANN. He expended a part of it by buying property in Mexico for a portion of the Indians, the title to which he took in himself and now retains.

Mr. MILLER. Admitting the statement of the gentleman from South Dakota, it has not any bearing at all on the reimbursement of the Kickapoo Tribe for moneys actually expended which is the result of absolute fraudulent acts on the part of——

Mr. MANN. There is no charge.

Mr. MILLER. I make the charge now.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can make the charge, but——

Mr. MILLER. I can make the charge just as strong as the gentleman from Illinois and based on just as good facts.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can make them very strong without facts, and this is one of those times.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In order to keep the record straight, I want to say this money that is now claimed, every dollar of it, I believe, with the exception of a few hundred, was expended at the time when Congress made the appropriation of $215,000, and the appropriation expressly provided that before the money could be obtained the Indians had to file a receipt in full, and I refer the gentleman to the act, and this is simply a claim based upon the supposition that the money was expended after that, when, in fact, nearly all of it, if expended, was expended before.

Mr. MANN. Now, let us see what the Senate amendment provided—not that this money should be disbursed by the department controlling Indian affairs, not that it shall be controlled in any way, not that vouchers should be presented, not that anybody should scan the matter, but that it should be paid to one Okemah; and the House conferees agreed to it, saying that it should not be paid to one Okemah, but should be paid to Messrs. Okemah, Jim Deer, Pah ko tah, Owue mah them, and Wah pe che quah [applause], all of whom are mere puppets of the attorney against whom the charge is made, all of whom are under the thumb of the attorney, all of whom are mere puppets controlled by the attorney, who is desirous of obtaining this money for himself.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will see, I submit this, showing that the gentleman is not correct. Under the seal here are the thumb marks of these Indians, showing that they agreed to hold Okemah as trustee.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt the gentleman can get these old Indians with their thumb marks to sign anything. That is what I said—they are under the control of this man, and they will do whatever he tells them to do; and the intention is, if this item goes through, to have them pay this money over to this attorney, who himself has helped to swindle these Indians already.

Now, here is another item, 112, which provides that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to immediately cause to be deposited to the credit of the Indian owner in the First National Bank of Douglas, Ariz., all money known as lease money now on deposit with or in any manner under the control of the agents and officers of the Interior Department and all like money due or becoming due or collectible by them prior to the 1st day of January, 1904, and so forth. The receipt by such bank for any such money shall operate as a receipt of the Indian owner and as a complete release of all liability on the part of the officer paying the money as herein directed. If they have any lease money, we have adequate machinery by which we can pay it to the Indians to whom it belongs, but here is this fine-haired, delicate proposition to have the Government pay it all over to a bank and take a receipt of the bank. To do what? To do as it pleases with the money within the authorization provided.

And, by the way, I would call the attention of the conferees to the fact that, under the terms of the proposition which they submitted, the Government would now be required to send checks for all the money that would be due or collectible prior to the 1st day of January, 1914, although not yet collected; and that the Government would now pay out the money which would not be collected in for more than a year. But the proposition itself is fixed, even with the conference report, so that these checks go to the bank payable to the Indians, in order that the Indians, under the control of this same man, will turn the money over to him or pay his fees and services out of the amount. If we have any money due to these Indians, we have ample administrative machinery by which we can pay it to them.

Then there is Senate amendment numbered 114, which I think I shall not discuss to any extent. It was referred to here yesterday, I believe. I can see no reason why we should buy farms for the Apache Indians whom we discharge from their nominal confinement. Those who wish to go to another Indian reservation, I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to pay the expenses for transporting them there. I do not think the time has come when the Government of the United States is under obligations, when it discharges a man from prison, to buy him a home for him to squander or do otherwise with.

Mr. FERRIS. May I interrupt the gentleman there?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the gentleman would hardly want to state that the same rigid, harsh rules with reference to the discharge of an ordinary hardened criminal should be applied to women and children that are born in captivity, would he? Out of these 257 that are there in captivity, and have been there for 26 years, only 30 of them were even alive when the atrocities for which they were incarcerated were committed. So that the gentleman's rule might be a correct one so far as the guilty 30 are concerned, but it certainly would be an incorrect one so far as my own sense of justice is concerned as to the 227 that have been born since these atrocities were committed.

Mr. MANN. These people have been in nominal captivity. If we have retained them in captivity, that is no reason why, if we should discharge them, we should deal better by them than we do with people who have not been even in captivity. Is it proposed that we shall have to buy a farm for every Indian in the country who has not one at present, and every time a child is born to Indian parents that we will have to provide a farm for that Indian? The fact that they have been in captivity makes no difference. That has been a nominal captivity. We give them their freedom, as these people who were born in captivity were entitled to their freedom at any time.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will permit, this is a matter that comes up in my home county. If I may ask the gentleman a question, I think it will economize time. If these women and children, 227 of them that have been born and raised since the original offenders were captured, had been out of prison all these years the Federal Government has had in that time plenty of opportunities to allot them, and doubtless would have done so by giving them allotments. Now, they have been kept there homeless and defenseless all these years unable to assert their rights until the public lands that are suitable are all gone on which they can be properly allotted. Does not the gentleman think that after they have been kept there 26 years the Government ought to feel a little duty toward starting them off as other Indians are started off? If not, why not? This is not an Oklahoma item; it is a national item. If not attended to we will be subject to criticism.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has given his reasons for supporting the proposition. It is in his district. It is not to his discredit. Looking after his district, as he always ably does, he seeks to obtain for them something he would not be in favor of if they had been in my district. But we can look at the matter a little more impartially than my friend can on the ground of personal interest. I have no bias against any of these people, but where we take Indians and hold them in captivity that does not mean, when we are willing to discharge them from captivity, we are under obligations to do better by them than we would if there had never been any occasion for putting them in captivity.

Then, the Senate amendment 117 is a long amendment, in reference to various tribes of Indians in Oregon. I will confess I know nothing whatever concerning the merits of the proposition. I know it has no place in this bill.

I know it has no place in this bill. It never has been discussed here. No one has ever said a word about it in the House. It is two or three pages long, providing for the payment of a number of Indian claims. Let the Committee on Indian Affairs bring in a bill concerning the matter and let it be considered in the House, so that the House can dispose of it.

I notice among other provisions of that amendment—

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall find and investigate what attorney or attorneys, if any, have rendered services for or on behalf of said Indians, and shall fix a reasonable compensation to be paid said attorney or attorneys for their services in prosecuting the claims of said Indians hereunder.

Of course that is the real meat in the shell.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield there? That is in my district, partially.

Mr. MANN. I suppose, if the gentleman wants to get the money out of the Treasury, I will have to yield to him. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, this amendment, No. 117, provides for final settlement with six different Indian tribes for lands in the State of Oregon which they ceded by treaty to the Government over 50 years ago. They voluntarily abandoned and relinquished the possession of those lands to the Government at that time, and peaceably. The Government has got the benefit of the lands. The Indians never received the money that the Government agreed to pay them for the lands. The Indians and their descendants are now scattered all over the United States. Some of those Indians are in Oklahoma, some are in the State of Washington, and some are in the State of Oregon.

Now, two attorneys in the State of Oklahoma, one attorney in the State of Oregon—a very able attorney, too, Mr. Harris Nallon—and one attorney here in the District of Columbia have performed valuable services in presenting this whole matter to the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims found that the meager allowance of $66,000 for the six tribes was just and ought to be paid.

Now, then, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized by this amendment only to investigate and find out what reasonable amount, if anything, ought to be paid to these attorneys. The Secretary is authorized to make up a roster of the descendants of these Indians, and, if found to be lineal descendants, to pay them such proportional amounts as they may be entitled to.

Mr. BUTLER. If you do not know who these Indians are, who set this in motion?

Mr. LAFFERTY. A census of them had to be taken in order that they might be located. This matter has been going on practically ever since the treaties were made, and two of those tribes have received favorable reports from the House Indian Committee in years gone by. All of these six tribes have time and time again secured the passage of bills through the Senate for the payment of these just claims. This year the six bills were introduced in the House, and also in the Senate by the junior Senator from Oregon. The bills came up and were discussed before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Indian Affairs and favorably considered, but in the meantime the junior Senator from Oregon procured the favorable action of the Senate—procured the passage of the bills in the Senate—and when the Indian bill went over there he procured their insertion in this bill, and the House conferees agreed to it.

I know that this is a just claim. Nothing can be paid without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. He must first find out under the terms of the bill that these are the lineal descendants of the Indians who owned the land and that they have not been paid for it. They have lost all the interest and they have lost the use of the money for half a century.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] a moment ago stated—at least I understood him to state—that the money was not to be paid to the Indians unless the Secretary of the Interior found it ought to be paid to them. That is not the case under the amendment. The amendment says:

> That there be paid to the Tillamook Tribe of Indians of Oregon the sum of $10,500, to be apportioned among those now living and the lineal descendants of those who may be dead by the Secretary of the Interior as their respective rights may appear.

There are a number of other items of the same sort. It requires the payment of this sum of money to the Indians, and if there should be only one Indian found of the tribe, he is to receive the entire amount, and it is not left to the discretion of the Secretary as to whether the money is owing to the Indians at all. There is no discretion in reference to it, except the discretion of the Secretary to find the lineal descendants of the Indians. Here are claims based upon treaties made in 1851.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I think the gentleman has overlooked the proviso, in line 9 of page 51, which, if the gentleman will permit, I will read. It says:

> Provided further, That if, after investigation by the Secretary, he shall find that all of the Indians of either of said tribes or bands and their lineal descendants are dead, then none of the money hereby appropriated for such tribe or band shall be paid to any person for any purpose.

Mr. MANN. No, Mr. Speaker; I have not overlooked that provision. I said if he could find one Indian he would have to pay the entire amount to the one. The only case where he may not pay the money is where he can not find the Indian or a descendant of the Indians.

Mr. LAFFERTY. If he finds a descendant of the tribe, why should he not pay the money to the descendant of that tribe?

Mr. MANN. No, Mr. Speaker; I stated that I do not know the merits of this question. No one else here knows. Treaties were made in 1851. Claims have been handed around Congress for many years. The Committee on Indian Affairs has had the bill pending before it and has not reported upon it. Thereupon the attorneys in the case slip over and have an amendment inserted in this bill in the Senate, carefully providing that the attorneys' fees shall be paid.

It has no place in this bill. It is purely a claim. Let it come before the House in the regular manner, when it can be properly considered by the House and the Committee on Indian Affairs can make a report of the facts in the case.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me to read a few sentences from the department, in justification of this matter?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is what the department says about it:

> 117. The amendment, beginning with line 17, page 54, and running down to line 7, page 57, authorizes the payment of certain amounts to Tillamook and other tribes of Indians in Oregon. The claims of these Indians have been carefully investigated by the department. These Indians ceded large tracts of valuable land to the Government for a very nominal consideration and have never received full compensation for those lands. The records show that the lands ceded by these Indians to the Government were subsequently sold by the Government for many times what the Government promised to pay to the Indians, and it does not appear that the promise of the Government was fully kept. The department has reported favorably on Senate bills 4533 to 4537. While the department is not disposed to recommend that claims of this nature be incorporated in the Indian appropriation bill, yet if Congress sees fit to enact this legislation it will reimburse worthy bands of Indians for money that has long been due them by the Government.

And whether it comes in an Indian appropriation bill or any other kind of a bill, it is the duty of this Government to pay its debts to white, black, and red alike. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. I am sorry that the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs favors the payment of these claims. These bills have been pending before the Committee on Indian Affairs. Why has not the chairman of that committee reported bills into the House with the facts? Because they were afraid of the light of day which would be shed upon the bills when they came before the House, where they could be discussed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware of the fact——

Mr. MANN. Here are six or seven bills, included in one item in a single amendment, where it is impossible to discuss them properly and fully.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware that it is almost absolutely impossible to take care of all the various bills that come before this House, where not more than one in a hundred receives consideration?

Mr. MANN. I am aware that all the meritorious bills, as a rule, receive consideration, and I know that if the gentleman properly attends to his duties as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, as I believe he intends to, he will see that meritorious bills do receive consideration in his committee and are brought before the House. The gentleman's committee occupies as much of the time of this House as any other committee in it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. MANN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman has had a great deal of experience in serving on conference committees, and he must take into consideration the fact that in this bill the conferees eliminated several millions of dollars. The bill was doubled in the other body, as compared with what passed the House. The conferees succeeded in eliminating a very large part of that amount. These claims aggregate only about $66,000, and the State most concerned was represented on the conference committee by a Senator. The gentleman certainly will take into consideration the fact that the House conferees can not have their own way on everything.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The appropriation in this particular amendment is for attorneys' services. Were those services rendered before the committee?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that, so far as these claims are concerned, they do not stand in the class of claims that I have repeatedly objected to, where large attorneys' fees have been collected and paid where an attorney never appeared before any committee of either the House or Senate, but simply secured legislation by lobbying methods. The attorneys who have been pushing these claims are reputable attorneys, who have appeared from time to time before committees of the House and Senate and in the present Congress. The attorneys in some of these claims appeared before a subcommittee of the House Committee on Indian Affairs in the present session of Congress. The same was true in the last Congress; and in my experience on the Indian Committee I have never met attorneys who have more honestly and openly, and in a proper, lawyerlike way, presented their claims than these claims have been presented by the attorneys who represent the claims in this bill that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is objecting to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be; but if the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] be correct, that the Department of the Interior takes the position that from all the information in its possession certain sums are due these Indians for lands taken, what necessity is there for attorneys to be employed by the Indians, so that the moneys actually due them shall be reduced by some amount because of fees for the presentation by these attorneys to the committee of facts that ought to be pressed by the executive departments of the Government?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Largely because, unless a lawyer is present, the matter would not receive the attention it should by Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is rather a surprising statement, that, however meritorious a question may be, it will not receive the attention of Congress unless an attorney handles it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not want the gentleman from New York to assume that I am in favor of claims being put on Indian appropriation bills, because if I could have my way there would not be any claim on an Indian appropriation bill of any amount—more than a few hundred dollars—where there was some mistake in administration.

Mr. MANN. If you get three conferees with the proper amount of backbone, there would be no trouble about eliminating all claims. I have served on conference committees a good many times, and it is unnecessary to tell me that you have got to swap off and divide up in conference. I have gone into conference repeatedly where items were included in a bill that had no proper place there, and I never have agreed to one yet, and I never have failed to come back with a conference report. When the conferees meet and one House insists on a proposition which the other will not accede to, the House that insists must yield.

Why, here we have a conference on the sundry civil bill. The Senate of the United States is strongly in favor of a Tariff Commission. The House is strongly opposed to it. The conferees might remain in session until the lower regions froze over, and do you not know that in the end the Senate is bound to yield, because it is insisting on a new item in the bill which the House will not agree to, and it would be the same way if it were reversed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the gentleman examined the figures of the Indian appropriation bill, and does he know what we have done?

Mr. MANN. I know that I have examined the figures, and the gentleman makes a great claim that they have cut out some items to which I have called attention, one item which amounted to more than $3,000,000, which the gentleman defended and left out of the bill. That has nothing to do with it.

The other day the gentleman from Georgia went into conference on the aid to navigation bill, and there were many Senate amendments to it. When the conferees came back there was just one Senate amendment agreed to, and the rest were all disagreed to, and the Senate had receded.

I have repeatedly gone into conference on such bills when there were dozens and dozens of items. Did we go on the theory that we would give the Senate a few of the items they had inserted in the bill? Not at all. Those items which we were not convinced ought to be in the bill went out of the bill. That is where they ought to go, and that is where they will go now if the gentlemen on the conference committee have the backbone to say so. These items of claims have no place in the bill, and the Senate knows that they have no place in it. They inserted them practically by unanimous consent, and if the House says that this is not a bill where the items belong the Senate will recede.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware that the bill as it passed the Senate carried $16,383,000? After we went from conference it carried $9,836,000. We have cut it down nearly one-half. Has the gentleman ever exceeded that?

Mr. MANN. Yes; repeatedly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware that we have saved over $7,000,000?

Mr. MANN. That is no reason for allowing items to remain in the bill that ought not to be there.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is no item in the bill but that we can readily and easily defend and that the department is in favor of. We have put claims in the Indian bill that are justly due.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas how much the bill now carries in excess of the House bill as it passed?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. About a million dollars. We cut it down $7,000,000. We have agreed to $9,826,000 instead of $16,000,000, as it came from the Senate, and still the gentleman from Illinois is not satisfied.

Mr. MANN. I am not satisfied. You did cut out a lot of bad claims to which I called attention at the time. Now, go back and cut out the rest of the rotten steals in the bill, and I will be glad to approve of what you do.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly

Mr. CANNON. This is a bill for the Indian service for the fiscal year 1913, is it not?

Mr. MANN. It is.

Mr. CANNON. Do I gather from the gentleman's statement that it has been turned into a claims bill?

Mr. MANN. That is precisely what was done with it.

Mr. CANNON. For matters that are alleged to have occurred in the past? If it is to pay judgment, then another bill would carry it. If it is to pay claims, why, there are Claims and War Claims Committees to consider them. I would be very glad to be informed on the matter.

Mr. MANN. These claims to which I have just been alluding accrued over 60 years ago.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And that is a good reason why they should be paid.

Mr. MANN. That is a good reason why they should be considered in the House before they are agreed to by a conference committee on a Senate amendment, the prime purpose of them being to pay attorneys' fees.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, it is fair to say that every amendment which the gentleman has criticized is a Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. Certainly. I could not criticize anything else.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman does not desire to.

Mr. MANN. I could not criticize anything else. There is nothing else before the House.

Mr. BUTLER. Is that amendment for the public schools a Senate amendment?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What objection has the gentleman from Illinois to my motion that we send this back to conference?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have no objection to that, but I am going to ask a separate vote on certain amendments.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the conferees on this bill should agree to Senate amendment 105 in any shape. It has no place in this bill at all. It is an amendment to provide for the building of a so-called sanitary sewer through the Platt National Park. The House conferees agreed with an amendment providing that one-half should be paid by the city of Sulphur. The city of Sulphur has about 4,000 people. Two years ago, according to the Secretary of the Interior, it was bankrupt. It could not pay a dollar toward the construction of this sewer, if that were the only contribution exacted by the Federal Government. This park is the whole industry of the city of Sulphur in the State of Oklahoma. Without it there would be no city of Sulphur. These people are despoiling the park.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman aware that it is the county seat of one of the best counties in Oklahoma?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know a good deal about it, I will say to the gentleman. We tried to give this park to the State of Oklahoma—842 acres, with mineral springs of the most marvelous character ever described, whether in poetry or prose.

Mr. CARTER. Was the gentleman for or against that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. But lest the State of Oklahoma might be compelled to spend some money on it, the gentlemen from Oklahoma on the floor of the House prevented the United States Government donating the park to the State in accordance with the Indian treaty.

Mr. CARTER. Was the gentleman for or against that proposition?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was in favor of it.

Mr. CARTER. Can the gentleman tell that from reading his speech?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I think it is about time that the conferees on appropriation bills coming from this House that do not originate in the Committee on Appropriations should stop consenting to Senate amendments which do not belong on the bills. The Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction over this item for the Platt National Park.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. If this item should be submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, would the gentleman consent that it go on any of the appropriation bills?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would not.

Mr. SHERLEY. And it ought not to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It should not go on any.

Mr. MILLER. Maybe not, but we differ about that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the Committee on Appropriations has repeatedly refused to permit it to go into any appropriation bill. In this appropriation bill, and in four other appropriation bills over which other committees of the House have jurisdiction than the Committee on Appropriations, the Senate in this session of Congress have placed provisions which, after careful investigation, the Committee on Appropriations of the House has rejected, and in every instance the managers representing the House upon these bills have accepted these amendments in the first instance. I think it is about time that these gentlemen attended to their own business, and when matters over which they have no jurisdiction are placed in these bills they should do what the managers representing the Committee on Appropriations do under similar circumstances—tell the Senate to put them upon bills where they properly belong.

There is an amendment in this bill appropriating money for the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, and the Committee on Indian Affairs has no jurisdiction over that service. If the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service is required in the Indian country, application should be made to the proper committee of the House. I agree thoroughly with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as to certain other amendments.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that we look after the health of the Indians and that this Marine-Hospital Service is well equipped for that duty and could perform it more efficiently than any other department of the Government?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not. The Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service to-day claims it has not sufficient men to do the work which properly devolves upon it under the law, and because the gentleman assumes its facilities to do this work he incorporates upon this bill an appropriation of $10,000 to enable that service to make an investigation, while the President the other day requested Congress to appropriate $250,000 in order that the work be properly done.

It just shows that either the President is very much mistaken as to what is necessary or that these gentlemen, not having the information, are attempting to devolve upon a service that has no connection at all with the Indian service, has no money to spend for this service, duties that should not be devolved upon it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman believe that more than $4,000 could be used between now and next winter when the next bill will be in?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know whether it can or not, but I know the Senate amendment was $10,000, and I think the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service claims now that it has insufficient men properly to do the work at this time in the duties which it should discharge.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois did not call attention to the peculiar features of Senate amendment numbered 117, relative to these attorneys' fees. The gentleman from Texas stated that the department states there is money due these Indians, and the facts well establish it, and yet here is this provision, and most of the scandals growing out of the Indian service during my service in this House are because of provisions incorporated in the Indian appropriation bills providing for attorneys who have rendered or claimed to have rendered service to various Indians. The provision is:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall find and investigate what attorney or attorneys, if any, have rendered services for or on behalf of said Indians, and shall fix a reasonable compensation to be paid said attorney or attorneys for their services in prosecuting the claims of said Indians hereunder, which compensation, if any, shall be paid out of the sum hereby appropriated, in full payment of services rendered; and the decision of the Secretary of the Interior with respect to the attorneys and their compensation shall be final and conclusive.

My recollection is that there is a general statute which provides for contracts to be made by Indians with attorneys, with a limitation upon the amount that can be paid, and they are valid only when approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LAFFERTY. The fact is——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yielded for a question, not a speech.

Mr. LAFFERTY. The gentleman is not aware, is he, that this provision in this bill is a limitation upon the rights of these attorneys, not an extension of any rights to them, because——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has the gentleman asked his question?

Mr. LAFFERTY. The gentleman did not know that, did he?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I did not. I find that that is a provision, Mr. Speaker, which absolutely validates the claims of these attorneys without any information before the House as to whether the contract was properly approved before they started their services.

The only service rendered apparently is in presenting information to committees of the two Houses of Congress, information which existed in the Interior Department and which is of such a character that the Secretary of the Interior insists that these sums of money are due and should be paid; but it seems to be unfortunate that no individual claiming any money on a meritorious case, no matter how clear the facts, no matter how certain the claim, no matter how positively it is established by the Department, no bill can ever be considered or be favorably acted upon by Congress unless some attorneys, or some so-called attorneys, have contracts, some of them obtained during the services of some men in Congress who afterwards turn up as beneficiaries under them; others under equally unsavory circumstances, in which whatever is to be paid to the Indians must be shared by some of these so-called attorneys.

I think it is time for Congress to stop the practice. We had an illustration the other day where over $200,000 was paid out of the Ute Indian moneys for services of so-called attorneys rendered before committees of Congress. Some compensations have been paid to men who had served in one or the other Houses of Congress at the time the contracts were made under which compensation was paid. I do not believe it reflects credit upon Congress and I do not believe we can justify such action.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope this will not appear in the bill as finally agreed upon.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to have an agreement and would ask that debate on this matter close at 5.30.

Mr. MANN. How much more time does the gentleman want?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. A very few minutes on our side. Mr. Speaker, I believe the gentleman from Illinois has used one hour, and we would like to reply in half an hour, and I ask that debate close at 5.30.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks that debate on this matter close at 5.30. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FERRIS. The situation as I understand it is the chairman of the conference committee moves to disagree to all the Senate amendments.

Now, the only thing at issue is the Senate amendments. What do we gain if we debate this all day? The gentleman here seeks a vote on it; the chairman of the committee asks to disagree to everything. What is the issue here?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not tell what anybody will gain.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the debate close in five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks that debate close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] is recognized.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, I do not know how other Members feel about the business of this House, but so far as I am concerned I am growing the least bit weary of two or three men attempting to run the business of this Nation in the House of Representatives. The people of the United States elect their Representatives and send them to Washington, and when they arrive here the House is organized by the selection of its proper committees, and if we can not trust those men to do their duty honestly and faithfully, then our representative system of government is a failure and we had better have a monarchy. I do not believe in any one man setting himself up as having a monopoly upon the wisdom of this House or the wisdom of this Nation.

Now, objections have been made to amendment 117, one by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the ex-Speaker, who said this was not a proper bill on which such an amendment should be placed. The title of this bill is:

An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes.

The object of this amendment is to fulfill six treaties with six Indian tribes and their lineal descendants. Objection is made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] on the ground that the committee framing this bill, or this amendment, took the extreme precaution of providing that no lawyer or set of lawyers should collect more compensation than the Secretary of the Interior might prescribe. These lineal descendants of these Indians are now full citizens of the United States. We do not know but that they have 40 or 50 per cent contracts with some of these attorneys, and therefore the limitation in this bill is a precautionary measure rather than one extending any rights to any lawyer. For that reason the objection of the gentleman from New York falls to the ground.

I have already adverted to the gentleman from Illinois who said that this was not a proper bill in which this item should be carried. If this is not a proper bill to carry an item paying a debt which the Indian Department says the Government owes, making the statement after it had sent Indian agents to visit the various States and investigate the facts—if it can not be proper on an Indian bill, passed for the purpose of carrying out treaty obligations, I ask, in Heaven's name, in what sort of a bill could it be included?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on amendments Nos. 105, 110, 111, 112, 114, and 117.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] to further insist on amendment No. 105.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to take a separate vote on the six amendments together.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, to further insist on the disagreement to Senate amendment No. 105.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. All of them en bloc.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks for a separate vote on amendments Nos. 105, 110, 111, 112, 114, and 117. The motion of the gentleman from Texas is to further insist on the House disagreement to all of the Senate amendments and ask for a further conference.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, if there is going to be a separate vote on these different amendments, some of which I am greatly interested in——

A MEMBER. Oh, let it go.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is entirely within his rights in demanding a separate vote on these different amendments.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas as applies to these six amendments.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. A division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CARTER. In those six amendments is there included——

Mr. MANN. We are voting now.

The SPEAKER. Debate is out of order.

Mr. CARTER. Then I make a parliamentary inquiry. Does the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] include amendment 110 as to Oklahoma schools?

Mr. MANN. It does.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman wants a separate vote in order to instruct us to knock that amendment out?

The SPEAKER. The motion is not to instruct anybody as to anything.

Mr. CARTER. It is all right then.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas as to the six amendments.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes none.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The vote is now on the rest of the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] to insist on the disagreement to all the rest of these other amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Does the Senate ask for a conference?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Senate did not ask for a conference, but I am proposing to ask for a conference. They appointed conferees, but did not ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. Then the motion is to agree to a conference that has not been asked for.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Senate did not ask for a conference, I may say to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that the Senate conferees were appointed, and then the announcement of their appointment was rescinded. The Clerk will report the order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate disagrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 20728.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, that is the original order, I understand, that sent the bill to conference. There is another order there, I believe.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think it is on the other side of those papers.

The SPEAKER. That is the order made on August 19.

Mr. MANN. I understood that the Senate agreed to the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the order over again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate disagrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 20728.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I ask, Mr. Speaker, that a further conference with the Senate on this bill be asked for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House further insists on its disagreement to the Senate amendments, and asks for a further conference. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the following conferees on the part of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, Mr. CARTER, and Mr. BURKE of South Dakota.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 16571. An act to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the North Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington, July 7, 1911.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 7157. An act to make uniform charges for furnishing copies of records of the Department of the Interior and of its several bureaus;

S. 6688. An act to repeal section 13 of the act approved March 2, 1907, entitled "An act amending an act entitled 'An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes'";

S. 6763. An act to authorize the cities of Bangor and Brewer, Me., to construct or reconstruct, wholly or in part, and maintain and operate a bridge across the Penobscot River between said cities without a draw;

S. 5882. An act to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Yankton, S. Dak., by the Winnipeg, Yankton & Gulf Railroad Co.; and

S. 4753. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved April 26, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 137).

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 22871) to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, I desire to ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] whether he expects to have anything except general debate on the bill this afternoon or this evening?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that the ranking member of the Committee on Agriculture and myself have agreed that we will ask to proceed for one hour to-night with general debate, after which time we will agree to adjourn.

Mr. MANN. Pending the motion, may we not get a little further information? To-morrow is Calendar Wednesday. There is pending a bill in reference to the payment of pensions to widows of Spanish War soldiers. If no one objected, it would probably be disposed of very quickly. I apprehend a veto message will come in on the legislative appropriation bill to-morrow, and I suppose we can dispose of that to-morrow. Is there anything else that could come up to-morrow in the way of a conference report? May I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] whether the sundry civil conference report is likely to be considered to-morrow?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will not be considered to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. Is there any chance for us to get through this week, probably, with the conference reports, if things run with ordinary smoothness?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It depends upon the ability of some gentlemen to make up their minds. The House has got down to the irreducible minimum.

Mr. MANN. It does not take very long, when gentlemen get down to an irreducible minimum, to reach a conclusion of business.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We are down to that now.

Mr. MANN. This bill that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] calls up I would like to see passed. I take it that that is the last thing we are likely to do in the way of general legislation at this session.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know of nothing that the Committee on Appropriations has to present to-morrow. The sundry civil bill is still in conference. The Senate has not yet reported the general deficiency bill, and I understand——

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I can not hear the gentlemen in the private conversation they seem to be conducting. If they are trying to wind up the business of this session, I want to pass a bill for the physical valuation of railroads before the session is over.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that the general deficiency bill will very likely not be passed by the Senate until after the determination of some matters on which it is possible there may be slip-ups.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the general deficiency bill is likely to follow the usual procedure—to be passed the last thing—and that the conferees will meet on the last night and we will probably have an all-night session to dispose of it; but that is always easy to dispose of. The question is as to the other matters.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am unable to speak as to the Army bill and the Post Office bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that, unless the House directs otherwise, it is not my purpose to bring in a resolution for adjournment until all of these appropriation bills are in the hands of the President.

Mr. MANN. Of course, we would have nothing to do for a a day or two then. I think the custom has been not to wait for that, as far as the general deficiency bill is concerned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think in this instance it will be a very wise course to follow.

Mr. MANN. If we are going to stay here that long, then I will make the point now that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not going to cause any delay to wait for that.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the first time the Speaker finds a lack of something to do I hope he will recognize me to take up the physical-valuation bill.

Mr. LEVER. I renew my motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPRINT OF INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield to allow me to ask for a reprint of the Indian bill?

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the Indian appropriation bill, with the amendments numbered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the Indian appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I trust that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will withdraw his point of no quorum. There are a number of Members here who desire to speak on the agricultural extension bill, which the gentleman from South Carolina desires to call up. It is a bill of some importance. It is now only a little after 5 o'clock, and it seems to me we might go along for an hour or so and get through with some of this debate.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of no quorum?

Mr. MANN. It is my purpose, as far as I can, help to control things, to endeavor to pass this bill before we adjourn. We had a session yesterday from half past 10 o'clock in the morning until after 8 o'clock at night. We have been in session since 10 o'clock this morning. I have some other work to do. I do not think it will be any loss if we take a rest now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois insists on his point of order that no quorum is present, and evidently there is no quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Before the roll was completed the following occurred:

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I make the point of order that the motion has not been seconded.

The SPEAKER. That only applies under the automatic call. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SULZER. I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois is dilatory.

Mr. MANN. The right to demand the yeas and nays is a constitutional right, and constitutional rights are not dilatory.

The SPEAKER. They are not dilatory, but they are very aggravating sometimes. [Laughter.] Those in favor of taking the question by yeas and nays will rise and be counted. [After counting.] Thirty-two gentlemen have risen—not a sufficient number.

Mr. MANN. I demand the other side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the other side. Those opposed to taking the question by yeas and nays will rise. [After counting.] Sixty Members have risen in the negative. Thirty is a sufficient number, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 31, nays 119, answered "present" 12, not voting 229, as follows:

Mr. PETERS with Mr. MCCALL.

Mr. HOWARD with Mr. DE FOREST.

Mr. COLLIER with Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey with Mr. LONGWORTH.

Mr. WEBB with Mr. FOCHT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska with Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio.

Mr. HAMLIN with Mr. YOUNG of Kansas.

Mr. BATHRICK with Mr. ANTHONY.

Mr. BEALL of Texas with Mr. FULLER.

Mr. BOOHER with Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL.

Mr. CARTER with Mr. BARTHOLDT.

Mr. FINLEY with Mr. BURKE of South Dakota.

Mr. GRAY with Mr. GREEN of Iowa.

Mr. HOLLAND with Mr. KAHN.

Mr. LINTHICUM with Mr. MCLAUGHLIN.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana with Mr. NEEDHAM.

Mr. ROTHERMEL with Mr. OLMSTED.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri with Mr. PICKETT.

Mr. SLAYDEN with Mr. RODENBERG.

Mr. SIMS with Mr. PRAY.

Mr. STEDMAN with Mr. SWITZER.

Mr. WITHERSPOON with Mr. WILSON of Illinois.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if I am recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening when his name was called?

Mr. DOUGHTON. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded in the affirmative.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. SISSON. I desire to withdraw my vote of "no" and answer "present."

The Clerk called the name of Mr. MILLER, and he answered "Present."

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. LONGWORTH, recorded?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my vote of "no" and answer "present."

The Clerk called the name of Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, does the vote disclose the presence of a quorum on the motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. Which one, the motion to adjourn? No; it does not disclose a quorum.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It does not disclose a quorum?

The SPEAKER. It lacks two of making a quorum.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A roll call was pending and a quorum was not present, and a motion to adjourn was made and entertained by the Chair, and on the announcement of the vote on the motion to adjourn there appeared to be present 158 Members.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There were less than a quorum and a number wholly insufficient, so far as the roll call was concerned, to make a quorum.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The question is whether another motion to adjourn would be regarded as dilatory?

The SPEAKER. It would, absolutely. A man does not have to vote unless he wants, and the Chair does not know, and neither does the gentleman from Pennsylvania or anybody else know, whether the 194 we got in were all here or not. The presumption is they were.

Mr. MANN. The Chair and everybody else knows there are not 158 Members in the Hall now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know anything of the sort.

Mr. MANN. Nor in the corridors.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the Chair rule that a motion to adjourn now would be a dilatory motion?

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what the Chair rules.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Speaker has worked industriously for at least 10 hours to-day, and he worked industriously about 15 hours yesterday, and out of consideration for the Speaker and the Members alike, I should like to move to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not move to adjourn until this call of the House is over.

The Clerk completed the calling of the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he answered "Present."

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I regret that we have not been able to get a quorum to-night, but I hope on Thursday there will be a quorum here to close the debate on this bill; as we can not get them now, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is dilatory. The Chair has just stated he would hold it was dilatory.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Wednesday, August 21, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BROUSSARD, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 25762) for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Baton Rouge, La., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1227), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, authorized under H. R. 154 and H. R. 200 to inquire into the assessment and taxation of real estate in the District, submitted a report (No. 1215), which was referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. WATKINS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 25623) to authorize the transfer of Lieut. Sydney Smith from the retired to the active list of the Army, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1226), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. PEPPER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 26078) for the relief of Charles S. Kincaid, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1231), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 25301) granting a pension to Martha C. McCorkle, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CARLIN: A bill (H. R. 26354) to establish a commission; to create a national interstate highway system; to effect preliminary surveys of seven national interstate highways and the establishment of said highways, said highways to be constructed from Washington, the Capital of the United States, respectively to Portland, Me.; to Niagara Falls, N. Y.; to Seattle, Wash.; to San Francisco, Cal.; to Los Angeles, Cal.; to Austin, Tex.; and to Miami, Fla.; and for which surveys, and maps, profiles, and estimates of the same, for the use of the Congress of the United States, the sum of $1,000,000, or so much as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be expended out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, said national interstate highways to be trunk-line highways, to which branch highways and good roads can be established throughout the country; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. CURRY: A bill (H. R. 26355) to amend the homestead laws as to certain unappropriated and unreserved public lands in New Mexico; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. CRAGO: A bill (H. R. 26356) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Uniontown, Pa.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SULZER: A bill (H. R. 26357) to reduce postage rates, improve the postal service, and increase postal revenues; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. STANLEY: Resolution (H. Res. 702) authorizing the printing of the majority and minority reports of the committee to investigate violations of the antitrust act; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. NORRIS: Resolution (H. Res. 705) requesting the President to furnish information regarding the alleged killing of James W. Rodgers by British soldiers in Africa; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. JONES: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 358) requesting from the President of the United States information concerning the exemption of American importers of manila hemp from payment of the export tax thereon; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. AINEY: A bill (H. R. 26358) granting a pension to Charlotte S. Manley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26359) granting an increase of pension to Charles R. Green; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BROWN: A bill (H. R. 26360) granting a pension to Charles H. Keefer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SCULLY: Petition of John E. Bernard, of Perth Amboy, N. J., favoring passage of the immigration bill; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. WILSON of New York: Memorial of the Maritime Association of the Port of New York, favoring the building of two battleships; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, August 21, 1912.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. GALLINGER took the chair as President pro tempore under the previous order of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. BRANDEGEE and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Petitions and memorials are in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Root
Bacon	Fall	Massey	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Fletcher	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Briggs	Gallinger	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Bristow	Heyburn	O'Gorman	Smoot
Bryan	Johnston, Ala.	Oliver	Stone
Burnham	Jones	Overman	Thornton
Chamberlain	La Follette	Page	Tillman
Chilton	Lippitt	Penrose	Williams
Culberson	McCumber	Perkins	Works
Cullom	McLean	Pomerene

Mr. THORNTON. I wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. FOSTER]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names—not a quorum. The names of the absentees will be called.

The Secretary proceeded to call the names of absent Senators, and Mr. BANKHEAD and Mr. BORAH answered to their names when called.

Mr. WARREN, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. BOURNE, Mr. WETMORE, Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. CRAWFORD, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, and Mr. SWANSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. JONES. I will state that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is unavoidably detained on important business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I gave notice yesterday that I intended to rise to a privileged statement this morning at the close of the routine morning business. For certain reasons I would prefer to make that statement later in the day. I shall not, therefore, attempt to interfere with or delay the unanimous consent secured by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] for the bill relating to bills of lading, but I will ask the Senate to consent to hear me later in the afternoon.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20498) for the relief of certain homesteaders in Nebraska.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 349) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion to be held at Ada, Okla., in September, 1912, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 24224) to amend sections 5, 11, and 25 of an act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyrights," approved March 4, 1909, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WORKS presented resolutions adopted by the board of directors of the Chamber of Mines and Oil of Los Angeles, Cal., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to provide for agricultural entries on oil lands, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Coachella, Thermal, Riverside, and Indio, all in the State of California, praying that certain lands in Coachella Valley, Riverside County, Cal., now held as an Indian reservation, be disposed of in homesteads of not to exceed 10 acres each, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Muskogee, Okla., remonstrating against the establishment of a department of public health, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 25764) to subject lands of former Fort Niobrara Military Reservation and other lands to homestead entry, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 25282) to authorize the Union Pacific Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1060) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 7488) for the relief of George L. Thomas; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. BRADLEY:

A bill (S. 7489) granting an increase of pension to Solomon Riddell (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHILTON:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 135) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BRIGGS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $500 to pay William E. Burns for extra services in the Senate document room, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 25970), which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS.

Mr. THORNTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 21226) relating to the compensation of clerks of United States district courts, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

THE PLAYGROUNDS MOVEMENT (S. DOC. NO. 937).

Mr. GALLINGER presented the report of Edgar S. Martin, supervisor of playgrounds of the District, made to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia July 1, 1912, which was ordered to be printed as a Senate document.

AFFAIRS IN NICARAGUA.

Mr. BACON. I offer a resolution, which I ask may be read from the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 385), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations or a subcommittee thereof authorized and appointed under the Senate resolution 335, passed July 26, 1912, to make certain investigations and report concerning influences connected with or inciting rebellion, insurrections, or disorders in Cuba and Mexico, be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed by said committee or a subcommittee appointed or to be appointed to further inquire, investigate, ascertain, and report as to the alleged invasion of the Republic of Nicaragua by the armed sailors and marines of the Navy of the United States during the month of August, 1912, or at any other time preceding or subsequent thereto during said year; and particularly to investigate and report to the Senate:

First. Under what authority of law and by the orders of what official of the United States said armed sailors and marines were at any time during said year ordered to invade the territory of the Republic of Nicaragua.

Second. What armed officers and sailors and marines of the Navy and Marine Corps were under said orders sent into the territory of the Republic of Nicaragua.

Third. What orders were issued to said forces of the Navy and Marine Corps to be executed by the same in the Republic of Nicaragua, and what was done within the period named in pursuance thereof, and particularly what military operations were carried on within the Republic of Nicaragua by said forces in pursuance of said orders, or otherwise.

Fourth. The said committee or subcommittee is further directed to investigate and report to the Senate what citizens of the United States or other person or persons are now or have been during said year assuming to collect customs in Nicaragua, and assuming to be American customs officials, and particularly by whom said collector of customs has been appointed, by whose instigation, and the authority assumed to be exercised by said alleged American customs officials, and all the actings and doings of the same under any authority, actual or assumed.

Resolved further, That all the powers and authority conferred upon said committee or subcommittee by the said original resolution (S. Res. No. 335) of July 26, 1912, be, and the same are hereby, conferred upon said committee or subcommittee in making the additional investigation and report herein authorized and directed.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, before asking for any action in regard to the resolution, either its reference or otherwise, I wish to say just two or three words.

This resolution, Mr. President, is caused by the press dispatches narrating what is now going on in Nicaragua and the part that is being taken by the armed forces of the United States, parts of the Navy and Marine Corps, all of which matters are of public notoriety, published in our daily papers, and to which I think it is important that the attention of the Congress of the United States should be called. I do not think that the information contemplated by this resolution can be gotten in the usual way by simply making an inquiry of one of the departments. The transactions to which they relate are very far-reaching in their various ramifications. If my conclusions, deduced from other matters and within my knowledge, are correct, I believe that it is necessary that there should be an investigation by a committee of Congress.

Mr. President, I desire to say that this resolution is not exactly connected with but is cognate to the matter that I brought to the attention of the Senate a few days ago when the Army appropriation bill was before the Senate, in which I endeavored by a limitation upon the use of the appropriations to prevent the unlawful use of the Army or Navy of the United States. That was limited to the Army in assigning it to duty in foreign lands without any authority of law, and, in my opinion, in absolute violation of law, and of the fundamental law.

The action then taken upon the amendment has been published to the country as its having been rejected by the Senate of the United States. I simply desire to say that there was no action taken upon that matter when it was brought to the attention of the Senate which would indicate that the Senate was opposed to that proposed limitation upon the powers of the Executive in the use of the Army of the United States. It was proposed in the Senate on an evening when there was not a quorum present, when it was very desirable that the Army appropriation bill should be disposed of. The vote was simply taken by the sound; and, rather than make a demand which would develop the fact that there was no quorum and which would break up the evening work, I refrained from asking for either a division or for a call of the yeas and nays.

I have since introduced a bill on the subject, which I stated at the time I, of course, did not expect to have action upon at the present session of Congress, but which I did hope might receive the attention and action of Congress at the ensuing session.

Mr. President, since that time we have had these developments to which I have referred. It is true they were going on then, but they had not been so pronounced as they are now. Since that time we have the fact stated in the newspapers, and I presume there is no doubt about the correctness of the statement, that there are to-day in the interior of Nicaragua 450 of the armed forces of the United States, some of them sailors of the Navy—armed sailors—and others the marines connected with the Navy, and that they have been actually taking part in a battle between the contending armies in that country, going far beyond any possible suggestion that they are there simply upon the proper mission of protecting a consulate or the lives and property of American citizens from outlawry, rapine, and plunder.

Of course no one who is at all, at least from my point of view, familiar with the rules of international law or rights of one government inside another for the protection of its citizens, would contend that that goes to the extent of taking sides between two contending parties for the purpose of putting up one and putting down the other.

Not only is war being carried on in Nicaragua by the armed forces of the United States without the authority of Congress, but in a narration, in which the information seems to come from the State Department, it seems that this power to make war has been delegated to the American minister to Nicaragua. Speaking of the impending conflict at Managua, in an article in a recent issue of the Washington Post it is stated that—> the State Department stands ready to sanction any effective methods employed by American bluejackets and marines which George T. Weitzel, the American minister, may direct. It is suggested here that the American armed force may drive the rebels from their positions and capture the guns if the bombardment continues.

And, again, in the same article:

> How this force has been used depends entirely upon the will of American Minister Weitzel, but as he has already protested to the rebels against the bombardment of Managua, filled as it is with women and children and noncombatants, it is believed he has driven the insurgents away from their position and stopped the bombardment. If the force is not sufficient for this purpose, officials feel assured he will hold the city until reinforcements from Panama or the bluejackets of the Denver, now en route to Corinto, can be placed at his disposal.

This, sir, is war; and, however just a cause, it is for Congress, and for Congress alone, to determine when a cause, whether good or bad, shall determine the United States to go to war on account of it.

But the matter, Mr. President, that I particularly rose to speak about this morning, and only for a moment, is not limited to the matter to which I have already alluded, because these military invasions had already been brought by me to the attention of Congress; but there is a matter of the utmost vital importance, in furnishing the motive for this invasion of Nicaragua, to which I think it proper that the Congress of the United States should have its attention called.

In the published press dispatches, not only once, but several times, it is mentioned that there is in the capital of Nicaragua—Managua—an officer claiming to be an American collector of customs. I think, Mr. President, when this matter is sifted to the bottom it will be found that that is the secret of the invasion of Nicaragua by the armed forces of the United States. I will read something from these dispatches, simply to show that I am quoting correctly. In one of the dispatches, two or three days ago—I took this from the Washington Post—one of the dispatches, speaking of the operations in Nicaragua, of the battles which had occurred there, the bombardment of the city, and so forth, says this:

> The Chilean consulate and the house of Mr. Hamm, the American collector general of customs, were hit.

I am citing that just simply to show the fact of the alleged existence in Nicaragua of one who assumes to be a general collector of customs—an American collector of customs. In the further reports which were published in this morning's papers, and I suppose found not only in the Washington Post, but in all of the other papers receiving the press dispatches, there is this item. After a long account about what was going on, it says:

> For the present, Managua, the capital, with the American railroad station, steamboat wharves, legation, and the residences of the American customs officials and many others, is considered safe.

Mr. President, there is a little piece of significant history connected with this matter. Some time ago there was a treaty negotiated between this Government and Nicaragua for the purpose of securing the appointment of one who should collect the customs of Nicaragua, the proceeds to be devoted to the payment of certain Nicaraguan bonds and the interest thereon, which were to be negotiated and sold to certain American capitalists, who were to have some very extensive powers, among others the practical appointment of this customs officer, who was to be, nevertheless, clothed with the authority of the United States of collecting customs in Nicaragua and devoting the proceeds to the payment of these debts, which were to be contracted by these American capitalists. That treaty the Senate of the United States has so far refused to ratify, and I may safely say, Mr. President, that that is a treaty which the Senate of the United States will not ratify.

The purpose of that treaty, as we understand it, is to enable certain American capitalists to go into Nicaragua and reap a very high profit out of an enterprise which ordinarily would be considered as hazardous, and which, therefore, has attached to it very great profit on account of that hazard, but which would be absolutely safe when guaranteed by the Government of the United States, with the pledge on the part of the Government of the United States to make it good by supporting this American collector of Nicaraguan customs with the Army and Navy of the United States in the collection of the customs of Nicaragua and the devotion of the proceeds thereof to the payment of this indebtedness. With the United States Senate refusing to allow the Government of the United States to become a party to any such proceeding, and with the Senate of the United States standing in the attitude, where it doubtless will continue, to so refuse, while I have not the details, I have not a doubt in the world—by whose authority I know not, but by some authority—there has been the effort and is now the effort to accomplish without law that which they failed to secure law to accomplish. The purpose of the proposed treaty was to have some one appointed as an American collector of customs to collect the customs duties in Nicaragua and devote the money thus collected to the payment of certain private debts of American capitalists, and more particularly and specially to have the Government of the United Sates set up and maintain the American collector of Nicaraguan customs with the Army and Navy of the United States.

As this treaty could not be secured through its ratification by the Senate, it would appear that the effort is made to accomplish the same thing without any law to authorize it, and that in some way this so-called American collector of Nicaraguan customs has been appointed and is now on duty in Managua and that the armed forces of the United States are there now to support the party in power, which recognizes his authority, and to make war, if necessary, to accomplish it.

Mr. President, I shall not now take further the time of the Senate, but I think I have said enough to indicate that it is certainly a proper subject matter for investigation by the Senate of the United States. Not only are they endeavoring in this way to accomplish what they could not accomplish in the regular way, having the Army and the Navy and the Marine Corps of the United States used for the purpose of protecting their indebtedness and the collection of the money for its liquidation and payment, but the Government of the United States—I will not say the Government of the United States, because the Government of the United States embraces three departments—but the executive department of the United States is, if the published reports are correct, in my humble judgment, violating the law; and not only violating the law so far as it concerns us in the fact that it is our fundamental law that only Congress can declare when an armed force of the United States shall go into a foreign country for the purpose of taking part in such transactions as are going on there now, but violating the law so far as it concerns a feeble and helpless people, doing those things which we would not dare to do if they were sought to be done in a country capable of resenting such an invasion as a country of sufficient power would resent it.

Mr. President, I do not know whether this is a resolution which should be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. However, the resolution heretofore adopted, to which this is intended as an amendment, did go to that committee, and it was reported back favorably by that committee. This resolution does require additional expenditure, and I presume it would be on the safe side for it to be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate. So unless I am in error, and if my suggestion meets with the concurrence of the Chair, I will ask that that direction be given to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that as this would involve additional expenditure from the contingent fund it ought properly to be referred to that committee.

Mr. BACON. I concur in the views of the Chair in that matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had, on August 21, 1912, approved the following joint resolution:

S. J. Res. 133. Joint resolution appropriating the sum of $20,000 out of money appropriated by Senate joint resolution No. 129, for subsistence of American citizens who shall have fled or who may hereafter flee from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico into the States of the United States bordering on the Republic of Mexico.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. J. Res. 349. A joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion, to be held at Ada, Okla., in September, 1912, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DIVISION OF MARKETS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, early in the session a bill was introduced providing for the creation of a division of markets in the Agricultural Department. It was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and unanimously reported favorably by that committee.

Later on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, when considering the agricultural appropriation bill, modified somewhat the terms of the original bill and incorporated it in the appropriation bill. It was considered when the appropriation bill was before the Senate and unanimously approved. It was again considered by the Senate on the report of the conferees and again approved. In further conference upon the appropriation bill it became impossible to agree to the provision for the division of markets. Since that time the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, has considered the bill and amended it to make it conform exactly to the bill which the Senate approved as an item in the appropriation bill, with the exception of changing the salary of the chief of the proposed division to $4.000 instead of $3,000, because the Secretary of Agriculture was of the opinion that he could not obtain the character of man he desired for less than $4,000. I do not think the bill will take five minutes of time; if there is any discussion upon it, I will withdraw my request; but under the circumstances I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I have spoken to several Senators who are interested in other matters, and they expressed a willingness for the bill to take this course. There are special reasons why I would appreciate its being disposed of at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5294) to establish in the Bureau of Statistics, in the Department of Agriculture, a division of markets.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has heretofore been read and amended, and unless there is objection the reading of the bill will be dispensed with. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senate as in Committee of the Whole has already agreed to the amendment reported by the committee.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRY S. WADE.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I move that House bill 15181, which passed the Senate August 19, be recalled from the House, and I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to know what is the bill?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is a bill for the relief of Harry S. Wade, which was passed by the Senate on August 19. It was then known as Calendar No. 936. It is House bill 15181.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, and asks that the bill be recalled from the House of Representatives. Without objection, that order will be made.

ALICE V. HOUGHTON.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 5137. I beg to state that this bill was before the Senate some time ago, I think in April last, and was then passed, providing an appropriation of $3,500 to one Alice V. Houghton. Subsequently, upon a motion to reconsider, the bill was reconsidered and brought back.

I have no desire to go over the harrowing details of the awful accident which befell this young woman, Alice V. Houghton. I will say, however, for such Senators—and there are some—who were not here then, that Alice V. Houghton was an employee in the Bureau of the Census, and on January 13, 1911, was there employed. She was sitting at a tabulating machine, there being a hundred or more of them in the room, in the performance of her duties.

A few of the cards had fallen on the floor, and it was her duty to reach down and pick them up. While doing so a whirling shaft, driven by steam or electricity, horizontal with the table or stand at which she worked, caught her hair at the nape of the neck, and coiled it up until it absolutely and literally tore off her scalp, taking with it her forehead and eyebrows.

This girl has suffered the tortures of the damned since that time. Doctors have been in continual attendance upon her. It was thought that they might graft new skin on her scalp, but owing to the fact that there was so little flesh on the scalp progress was exceedingly difficult, and the operations on her have by no means been successful. Her head to-day is a running wound; and in this condition of her scalp and forehead and eyebrows, her sight is practically destroyed. In one eye the sight is entirely gone, and the other is in a very weak and watery condition. The veins on her forehead stand out in a way to make her a spectacle that no one cares to behold.

At the time of this accident she was self-supporting and dependent upon her own labor. She received, I think, $70 a month. This accident occurred January 13, 1911, since which time she has had no means of support. Her father is a very aged man and has no means of satisfying doctors' bills, much less obtaining the necessaries of life.

My heart was touched on account of the horrid situation in which this young woman had been placed; and when the bill providing an appropriation of $3,500 was passed, I felt that it was utterly inadequate, and that this great Government of the United States, having this young woman as an employee, should not stand idly by and see such suffering without aiding her and making some effort to compensate for her suffering. No money in the Treasury of the United States could compensate for the loss of the health of a man, much less compensate a young woman, not only for the loss of her health, but for the loss of that which is her greatest glory, her locks, to say nothing of the awful tortures through which she has gone.

Now, I ask the Senate in taking up this bill to amend it on line 6 by striking out the words "three thousand five hundred dollars" and inserting in lieu thereof "seven thousand five hundred dollars, to be paid as follows: Twelve hundred dollars upon the passage of this bill and $75 per month for the term of seven years."

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, this bill will take a great deal of discussion, and I do not believe that I can consent to its being taken up.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It should not provoke a great deal of discussion, permit me to say, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5137) for the relief of Alice V. Houghton.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves to reconsider the votes whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The votes were reconsidered and the bill is now here in the Senate, as I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have not been reconsidered, as the Chair understands.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I beg pardon of the Chair, and respectfully move, then, that the votes be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, be reconsidered. Is there objection?

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I must object to that in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will say, with the Senator's permission, that I have spoken to the chairman of the committee [Mr. CRAWFORD] on this matter, and he said to me "I have no objection." I said "I shall defer to you and shall not bring the matter up until you are present." That was some months ago, and he said "I have no objection to this bill at all." I say in all seriousness that this is a condition and a situation, Mr. President, in which little technicalities and paliamentary difficulties should not intervene. We are about to go to our homes and adjourn and bask under shady trees and on short-clipped lawns mayhap, and yet this poor woman, an employee of the United States, shorn of her scalp, suffering all of the tortures—more tortures than words can tell—must still go on and suffer.

I submit it is not in the heart of any Member of this body to rest complacent and satisfied that he has done justice to himself, to his country, and to his God unless he does his part in relieving this horrible situation.

Mr. BRISTOW rose.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am perfectly familiar with this case. I want to do justice in this case.

Mr. BACON. I hope more than justice.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think I am as familiar with this case as any Senator here.

Mr. BACON. I appreciate that.

Mr. BRISTOW. And I must object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. A motion is in order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I move that the Senate reconsider the votes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves that the Senate reconsider its action in ordering to a third reading and passage the bill which is now before the Senate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey whether this matter has heretofore been considered by this body?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It was considered by this body, and all the horrid details gone over. There is nothing new except that which is more aggravating, that nearly a year has elapsed——

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is not anything that is proposed to be done without investigation?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The committee have investigated it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I was unfortunately called from the Chamber when the Senator brought it up. My recollection of it is that we passed a bill for the relief of this young lady, and it went over to the House. How does it happen to be before the Senate again?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. We passed a bill appropriating $3,500. The doctors' bills of this young woman are to-day over $2,000, and, as I said, my heart was touched by this matter. I have gone into the horrid subject, and I would fail to be a man if I did not stand here and press this matter. The bill was brought back to this body. I learn from the Presiding Officer that it is before this body. My impression was it was recalled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is right.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I inquire what does the Senator want now?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask to amend, on line 6, by striking out the words "three thousand five hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof "seven thousand five hundred, to be paid as follows"——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from New Jersey will permit the Chair, the bill passed the Senate at $4,200.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I thought it was $3,500. I still press for the sum of $7,500, and I ask that it be paid as follows—it is a mere pittance for one in such a condition: Twelve hundred dollars to be paid upon the passage of the bill and $75 a month thereafter for seven years.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRISTOW. If this motion prevails, then the bill is recalled and takes its place on the calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRISTOW. If it is recalled?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been recalled. If this motion prevails, the bill will be before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRISTOW. Then would that interfere with the unanimous consent which has been given to consider the bill-of-lading bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks, the bill having been recalled from the House, the Senator from New Jersey having entered a motion to reconsider, and now makes that motion, the bill is before the Senate on the question of reconsideration.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is, the bill is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; on the motion to reconsider the vote whereby it was read a third time and passed.

Mr. BRISTOW. And that would set aside the unanimous-consent agreement?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Temporarily, the Chair thinks.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Has morning business been closed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been closed.

Mr. BRISTOW. Then it is a motion to set aside the unanimous-consent agreement?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It operates that way.

Mr. BRISTOW. Is it customary, the Senate having given unanimous consent, to take up——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that, inasmuch as the Senator in charge of the bill which was to be taken up by unanimous consent was not in the Chamber at the close of morning business, the Senate acted properly in taking up other matters.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senate has proceeded to the consideration of several bills this morning in the same way that the Senator from New Jersey is making this application.

Mr. BRISTOW. What I want to get at is——

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator from Kansas yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I was in conference this morning, and when I came in I was informed that morning business was not closed, so I made no reference to the unanimous-consent agreement. I understand that some business has intervened, and in view of that I would not now, at this particular point, undertake to take the Senator from New Jersey off the floor by insistence——

Mr. BRISTOW. It will probably take the entire morning hour to dispose of this bill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Do you refer to this bill?

Mr. BRISTOW. I certainly do.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I thought it had been so thoroughly considered that it could not provoke any amount of discussion. I have no desire to interfere with the methods of parliamentary procedure, but if there ever was a case when we ought to lay aside all technicalities——

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio will state his point of order.

Mr. POMERENE. I have no disposition to interfere with this matter if it could be disposed of without discussion.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I thought it would be.

Mr. POMERENE. I have no doubt the Senator so thought. But it seems there is a difference of opinion on the proposition. Now, the bill about which the unanimous-consent agreement was made is of such very great importance to the entire country that it seems to me the friends of that measure ought to insist upon its having its proper place.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina will state it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Chair recognized the Senator from New Jersey in pursuance of what had been done on several bills of like importance which had gone before, and the Chair recognized his right to call up this, and the mere question before the body is whether or not we shall reconsider this vote. In view of the fact that the Senator from New Jersey has the floor and the bill is now before the Senate, I should like to have the ruling of the Chair upon the question whether or not the Chair made a mistake in recognizing him for that purpose or recognizing him to make this motion. The motion now before the Senate is to reconsider the passage of this bill, and I do not think that anything else can be of greater importance than to relieve the distressful condition of the individual in behalf of whom the Senator from New Jersey has called up this bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. I make the point of order that the bill for the consideration of which unanimous consent was given has not been laid before the Senate in harmony with the unanimous-consent agreement, and that it should now, at the close of the morning business, be laid before the Senate as the result of the unanimous consent given by the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Has the Chair yet announced whether or not morning business has closed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was so announced.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Chair has announced that? I should like to have the ruling of the Chair as to whether this bill is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires, so far as the present occupant of the chair is concerned, to aid in conducting the business of the Senate properly and in strict accordance with the rules. In view of that fact the Chair desires to make a statement.

Morning business closed, and it was so announced. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] was not present in the Chamber, he being in charge of the bill which had been made in order under the unanimous-consent agreement. Very likely the Chair ought to have laid the bill before the Senate, but did not do so, having instead sent for the Senator from Minnesota to inform him that morning business had closed. Certain Senators asked unanimous consent for the consideration of bills, and it was granted, and one bill at least was passed; possibly two.

The Senator from New Jersey asked that the bill which had been returned from the House, he having entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which it was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, be laid before the Senate. That action was taken, and the Senator's motion to reconsider was in order.

Now, as to whether or not the Chair erred in not laying before the Senate the bill that was the special order is for the Senate to decide; and the Chair will submit the question to the Senate whether the motion of the Senator from New Jersey is now in order. Senators who are of the opinion that the motion of the Senator from New Jersey is now in order will say "aye." Those opposed will say "no." The ayes appear to have it. The ayes have it. It is the opinion of the Senate that the motion is in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. As it is, the Senate has set aside the unanimous-consent agreement. Unanimous consent was given for the consideration of a bill. That has been ignored. The Senate has refused to carry out what it unanimously agreed to do to-day on the conclusion of the morning business.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think that criticism is warranted. The Chair, in the absence of the Senator having in charge the bill covered by the unanimous-consent agreement, permitted other matters to be taken up. The trouble is I was out on conference, and did not know when I returned that, and had to make inquiry in order to learn that, the morning business was closed. I think the Chair acted properly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are many precedents for submitting the question involved to the Senate.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. To relieve the Senate of the situation in which it seems to be involved, I withdraw my proposition for this morning, and give notice that immediately after the morning business to-morrow I will move that this bill be taken up and proceeded with.

Mr. BORAH. I ought to say to the Senator from New Jersey that we have another unanimous-consent agreement for to-morrow morning. The Senator ought to be advised of that fact.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I was not aware of that fact, but that being the case I withdraw my suggestion, and I will stand by my guns and let us fight it out.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut will state his point of order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I think we could pass the bill in a few minutes. I can not understand how it can provoke much debate, and I do not think it reflects pleasantly upon this body that——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Kansas has stated that he would discuss this matter at length, and that it would probably take all day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will withdraw my request.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I make the point of order that the Senate can not by saying something is in order set aside a unanimous consent to take up immediately after the routine morning business this other matter. It is not within the province of the Senate, by a majority vote, to make something else in order when the Senate has made a unanimous-consent agreement to proceed with a particular measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had high authority for submitting the question to the Senate. The Chair finds that, according to Gilfry's Precedents, on February 24, 1902, the President pro tempore [Mr. Frye] stated as follows:

> The Chair can not rule upon a question arising from a unanimous-consent agreement; it is for the Senators themselves to determine what it means. The responsibility for violating the agreement must rest with the Senators themselves. The Chair has no power to enforce it.

On May 8, 1906, the question was again raised, and the Vice President [Mr. Fairbanks] submitted to the Senate whether the question was in order, notwithstanding the unanimous-consent agreement, and it was decided in the affirmative.

On May 14, 1906, the same question was presented to the Senate, and the Vice President [Mr. Fairbanks] stated that, in the opinion of the Chair, the question was settled by the Senate in its interpretation of the rule on the 8th instant.

A more recent decision was rendered by Vice President Fairbanks on March 2, 1909, on a point of order precisely similar to that raised by the Senator from Connecticut, the Vice President ruling as follows:

> The Chair is of the opinion that it is in order. In the case of a unanimous-consent agreement it is for the Senate to determine whether it will violate its agreement.

The Chair is clearly of opinion that the rulings above cited are sound.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Instead of asking that the bill be taken up to-morrow morning I will ask the Senate to take it up on Friday morning, immediately after the morning business.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLAPP. When the Senate took action on the Indian appropriation bill, the Chair substituted a conferee. The House has sent a regular communication to the Senate rejecting the conference report, and asking for a further conference; and to straighten out the parliamentary situation I presume a motion should be made. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives insisting upon its disagreements to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate concur in the request for a further conference, the Chair to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. CLAPP, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. CHAMBERLAIN.

BILLS OF LADING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unanimous-consent agreement will be stated to the Senate.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Wednesday, August 21, 1912, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill—Calendar No. 651—(S. 957) relating to bills of lading; such consideration, however, not to interfere with the consideration of appropriation bills or reports of committees of conference.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 957) relating to bills of lading, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

The words "bill of lading" when used in this act shall apply to a bill of lading for the transportation from a place in any State, Territory, possession, or District of the United States to any State, Territory, possession, or District of the United States, and from any place in any State, Territory, possession, or District of the United States to any foreign country.

SEC. 2. That every carrier which by itself or its agent or servant, authorized to issue bills of lading, shall issue a bill of lading before the property described therein shall have been actually received and at the time under the actual control of such carrier to be transported, or who shall issue a second or duplicate bill of lading for the same property, in whole or in part, for which a former bill of lading has been issued and remains outstanding and uncanceled, without prominently marking across the face of the same the word "duplicate," shall be estopped as against the consignee, and every other person who shall acquire, by written assignment, transfer, or indorsement thereon, any such bill of lading in good faith and for value, to deny receipt of the property as described therein, or to assert that a former bill of lading has been issued and remains outstanding and uncanceled against the same property, as the case may be: Provided, That where a bill of lading is issued for property billed "shipper's load and count," indicating that the goods were loaded by the shipper and the description of them made by him, if the goods were so loaded voluntarily by the shipper only and the description made by the shipper only and the carrier or its agent had no knowledge of such count or description, this act shall not apply.

SEC. 3. That any carrier who shall deliver the property described in a bill of lading, drawn to a consignee or order, without requiring surrender and making cancellation of such bill, or in case of partial delivery, indorsing thereon a statement of the property delivered, shall be estopped as against all and every person or persons who have acquired or who hereafter shall acquire, in good faith and for value, any such bill of lading, from asserting that the property described therein has been delivered, or partially delivered; and such carrier shall be liable to every such person for the damages which he may have sustained because of reliance upon such bill.

SEC. 4. That no carrier shall be liable under the provision of this act where the property is replevined, or removed from the possession of the carrier by other legal process, or has been lawfully sold to satisfy the carrier's lien, or in case of sale or disposition of perishable, hazardous, or unclaimed goods, in accordance with law or the terms of the bill of lading.

SEC. 5. That any alteration in a bill of lading after its issue and without authority from the carrier issuing the same, either in writing or note on the bill of lading, shall be void, but such bill of lading shall be enforceable according to its original tenor.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I desire to make a very brief statement concerning this measure.

Owing to the decision of the courts as to the liability of common carriers where the bill of lading recited the receipt of goods which in fact were not received by the common carrier, a general complaint came up from all over the country. For at least three or four years there has been pending in the two Houses an effort to remedy that situation. Finally, in order to bring the matter before the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I introduced a bill similar to one which had previously been reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House. After the bill was referred to the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] introduced a bill which not only covered the question of the liability of the common carrier for an act of his agent in giving a receipt where the goods had not in fact been delivered, but which also seeks in a measure to codify the law relating to the liabilities and responsibilities accompanying the transfer of bills of lading with reference to their negotiability.

It was thought in the committee that it would be better to report out the short bill. Therefore I reported out the short bill, but it was the consensus of many members of the committee, including myself, that if it were possible it would be much preferable to pass the bill as offered by the Senator from Ohio. Since the report has been made the Senator from Ohio has perfected his bill, and I desire to say that for one I very much favor the passage of the bill of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. The other day I offered Senate bill 6810 as reprinted July 24, 1912, as a substitute for the pending bill. I understand that is the status of the bill now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the reading of the original bill will be dispensed with and the amendment of the committee will be read.

Mr. NELSON. The bill on our table contains a substitute for the entire original bill. The substitute reported by the committee is not the same as what the Senator from Ohio is about to offer, but is a separate measure.

Mr. POMERENE. The bill that I have offered is a substitute for the amended bill which was reported out of the committee.

Mr. NELSON. It is a substitute for the amendment reported by the Senate committee.

Mr. POMERENE. It is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment reported by the committee will be read.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the committee, insert the following after the enacting clause:

That bills of lading issued by any common carrier for the transportation of goods from a place in a State to a place in a foreign country or from a place in one State to a place in another State shall be governed by this act.

SEC. 2. That every bill must embody within its written or printed terms—

(a) The date of its issue;
(b) The name of the person from whom the goods have been received;
(c) The place where the goods have been received;
(d) The place to which the goods are to be transported;
(e) A statement whether the goods received will be delivered to a specified person or to the order of a specified person;
(f) A description of the goods or of the packages containing them; and
(g) The signature of the carrier.

An order bill shall have the words "order of" printed thereon immediately before the name of the person upon whose order the goods received are deliverable.

A carrier shall be liable to any person injured thereby for the damage caused by the omission from an order bill of any of the provisions required in this section.

SEC. 3. That a carrier may insert in a bill issued by him any other terms and conditions: Provided, That such terms and conditions shall not be contrary to law or public policy.

SEC. 4. That a bill in which it is stated that the goods are consigned or destined to a specified person is a straight bill.

SEC. 5. That a bill in which it is stated that the goods are consigned or destined to the order of any person named in such bill is an order bill. Any provision in such a bill that is nonnegotiable shall not affect its negotiability within the meaning of this act.

SEC. 6. That order bills issued in a State for the transportation of goods to any place in the United States on the Continent of North America, except Alaska and Panama, shall not be issued in parts or sets. If so issued, the carrier issuing them shall be liable for failure to deliver the goods described therein to anyone who purchases a part for value in good faith, even though the purchase be after the delivery of the goods by the carrier to a holder of one of the other parts: Provided, however, That nothing contained in this section shall be interpreted or construed to forbid the issuing of order bills in parts or sets for such transportation of goods to Alaska, Panama, Porto Rico, the Philippines, Hawaii, or foreign countries, or to impose the liabilities set forth in this section for so doing.

SEC. 7. That when more than one order bill is issued in a State for the same goods to be transported to any place in the United States on the Continent of North America, except Alaska and Panama, the word "duplicate," or some other word or words indicating that the document is not an original bill, shall be placed plainly upon the face of every such bill except the one first issued. A carrier shall be liable for the damage caused by his failure so to do to anyone who has purchased the bill for value in good faith as an original, even though the purchase be after the delivery of the goods by the carrier to the holder of the original bill: Provided, however, That nothing contained in this section shall in such case for such transportation of goods to Alaska, Panama, Porto Rico, the Philippines, Hawaii, or foreign countries be interpreted or construed so as to require the placing of the word "duplicate" thereon, or to impose the liabilities set forth in this section for failure so to do.

SEC. 8. That a straight bill shall have placed plainly upon its face by the carrier issuing it "nonnegotiable" or "not negotiable."

This section shall not apply, however, to memoranda or acknowledgments of an informal character.

SEC. 9. That the insertion in an order bill of the name of a person to be notified of the arrival of the goods shall not limit the negotiability of the bill or constitute notice to a purchaser thereof of any rights or equities of such person in the goods.

SEC. 10. That except as otherwise provided in this act, where a consignor receives a bill and makes no objection to its terms or conditions at the time he receives it, neither the consignor, nor any person who accepts delivery of the goods, nor any person who seeks to enforce any provisions of the bill, shall be allowed to deny that he is bound by such terms and conditions so far as they are not contrary to law or public policy.

SEC. 11. That a carrier, in the absence of some lawful excuse, is bound to deliver goods upon a demand made either by the consignee named in the bill for the goods or, if the bill is an order bill, by the holder thereof, if such a demand is accompanied by—

(a) An offer in good faith to satisfy the carrier's lawful lien upon the goods;
(b) An offer in good faith to surrender, properly indorsed, the bill which was issued for the goods, if the bill is an order bill; and
(c) A readiness and willingness to sign, when the goods are delivered, an acknowledgment that they have been delivered, if such signature is requested by the carrier.

In case the carrier refuses or fails to deliver the goods, in compliance with a demand by the consignee or holder so accompanied, the burden shall be upon the carrier to establish the existence of a lawful excuse for such refusal or failure.

SEC. 12. That a carrier is justified, subject to the provisions of the three following sections, in delivering goods to one who is—

(a) A person lawfully entitled to the possession of the goods; or
(b) The consignee named in a straight bill for the goods, or
(c) A person in possession of an order bill for the goods, by the terms of which the goods are deliverable to his order; or which has been indorsed to him, or in blank by the consignee, or by the mediate or immediate indorsee of the consignee.

SEC. 13. That where a carrier delivers goods to one who is not lawfully entitled to the possession of them, the carrier shall be liable to anyone having a right of property or possession in the goods if he delivered the goods otherwise than as authorized by subdivisions (b) and (c) of the preceding section; and, though he delivered the goods as authorized by either of said subdivisions, he shall be so liable if prior to such delivery he—

(a) Had been requested, by or on behalf of a person having a right of property or possession in the goods, not to make such delivery, or

(b) Had information at the time of the delivery that it was to a person not lawfully entitled to the possession of the goods.

Such request or information, to be effective within the meaning of this section, must be given to an officer or agent of the carrier, the actual or apparent scope of whose duties includes action upon such a request or information, and must be given in time to enable the officer or agent to whom it is given, acting with reasonable diligence, to stop delivery of the goods.

SEC. 14. That except as provided in section 29, and except when compelled by legal process, if a carrier delivers goods for which an order bill had been issued, the negotiation of which would transfer the right to the possession of the goods, and fails to take up and cancel the bill, such carrier shall be liable for failure to deliver the goods to anyone who for value and in good faith purchases such bill, whether such purchaser acquired title to the bill before or after the delivery of the goods by the carrier and notwithstanding delivery was made to the person entitled thereto.

SEC. 15. That except as provided in section 29, and except when compelled by legal process, if a carrier delivers part of the goods for which an order bill had been issued and fails either—

(a) To take up and cancel the bill, or

(b) To place plainly upon it a statement that a portion of the goods has been delivered with a description which may be in general terms either of the goods or packages that have been so delivered or of the goods or packages which still remain in the carrier's possession, he shall be liable for failure to deliver all the goods specified in the bill to anyone who for value and in good faith purchases it, whether such purchaser acquired title to it before or after the delivery of any portion of the goods by the carrier, and notwithstanding such delivery was made to the person entitled thereto.

SEC. 16. That any alteration, addition, or erasure in a bill after its issue without authority from the carrier issuing the same, either in writing or noted on the bill, shall be void, whatever be the nature and purpose of the change, and the bill shall be enforceable according to its original tenor.

SEC. 17. That where an order bill has been lost or destroyed a court of competent jurisdiction may order the delivery of the goods upon satisfactory proof of such loss or destruction; and upon the giving of a bond, with sufficient surety, to be approved by the court, to protect the carrier or any person injured by such delivery from any liability or loss incurred by reason of the original bill remaining outstanding, the court may also in its discretion order the payment of the carrier's reasonable costs and counsel fees.

The delivery of the goods under an order of the court, as provided in this section, shall not relieve the carrier from liability to a person to whom the order bill has been or shall be negotiated for value without notice of the proceedings or of the delivery of the goods.

SEC. 18. That a bill, upon the face of which the word "duplicate" or some other word or words indicating that the document is not an original bill is placed, plainly shall impose upon the carrier issuing the same the liability of one who represents and warrants that such bill is an accurate copy of an original bill properly issued, but no other liability.

SEC. 19. That no title to goods or right to their possession asserted by a carrier for his own benefit shall excuse him from liability for refusing to deliver the goods according to the terms of a bill issued for them, unless such title or right is derived directly or indirectly from a transfer made by the consignor or consignee after the shipment, or from the carrier's lien.

SEC. 20. That if more than one person claim the title or possession of goods, the carrier may require all known claimants to interplead, either as a defense to an action brought against him for nondelivery of the goods or as an original suit, whichever is appropriate.

SEC. 21. That if some one other than the consignee or the person in possession of the bill has a claim to the title or possession of the goods, and the carrier has information of such claim, the carrier shall be excused from liability for refusing to deliver the goods, either to the consignee or person in possession of the bill or to the adverse claimant, until the carrier has had a reasonable time to ascertain the validity of the adverse claim or to bring legal proceedings to compel all claimants to interplead.

SEC. 22. That except as provided in the two preceding sections and in section 12 no right or title of a third person, unless enforced by legal process, shall be a defense to an action brought by the consignee of a straight bill or by the holder of an order bill against the carrier for failure to deliver the goods on demand.

SEC. 23. That when goods are loaded by a carrier such carrier shall count the packages of goods, if package freight, and ascertain the kind and quantity if bulk freight, and such carrier shall not, in such cases, insert in the bill of lading "Shipper's load and count," or other words of like purport, indicating that the goods were loaded by the shipper and the description of them made by him. If so inserted, contrary to the provisions of this section, said words shall be treated as null and void and as if not inserted therein.

SEC. 24. That when goods are loaded by a shipper, at a place where the carrier maintains an agency, such carrier shall, on written request of such shipper, and when given a reasonable opportunity by the shipper so to do, count the packages of goods if package freight and ascertain the kind and quantity if bulk freight, within a reasonable time after such written request, and such carrier shall not, in such cases, insert in the bill of lading "Shipper's load and count," or other words of like purport indicating that the goods were loaded by the shipper and the description of them made by him. If so inserted, contrary to the provisions of this section, said words shall be treated as null and void and as if not inserted therein.

SEC. 25. That if a bill of lading has been issued by a carrier or on his behalf by an agent or employee the scope of whose actual or apparent authority includes the issuing of bills of lading, the carrier shall be liable to (a) the consignee named in a straight bill or (b) the holder of an order bill, who has given value in good faith, relying upon the description therein of the goods, for damages caused by the nonreceipt by the carrier of all or part of the goods or their failure to correspond with the description thereof in the bill at the time of its issue.

SEC. 26. That if goods are delivered to a carrier by the owner or by a person whose act in conveying the title to them to a purchaser for value in good faith would bind the owner, and an order bill is issued for them, they can not thereafter, while in the possession of the carrier, be attached by garnishment or otherwise or be levied upon under an execution unless the bill be first surrendered to the carrier or its negotiation enjoined. The carrier shall in no such case be compelled to deliver the actual possession of the goods until the bill is surrendered to him or impounded by the court.

SEC. 27. That a creditor whose debtor is the owner of an order bill shall be entitled to such aid from courts of appropriate jurisdiction by injunction or otherwise in attaching such bill or in satisfying the claim by means thereof as is allowed at law or in equity in regard to property which can not readily be attached or levied upon by ordinary legal process.

SEC. 28. That if an order bill is issued the carrier shall have no lien on the goods therein mentioned except for charges on those goods for freight, storage, demurrage, and terminal charges, and expenses necessary for the preservation of the goods or incident to their transportation subsequent to the date of the bill, unless the bill expressly enumerates other charges for which a lien is claimed. In such case there shall also be a lien for the charges enumerated so far as they are allowed by law and the contract between the consignor and the carrier.

SEC. 29. That after goods have been lawfully sold to satisfy a carrier's lien, or because they have not been claimed, or because they are perishable or hazardous, the carrier shall not thereafter be liable for failure to deliver the goods themselves to the consignee or owner of the goods, or to a holder of the bill given for the goods when they were shipped, even if such bill be an order bill.

SEC. 30. That an order bill may be negotiated by delivery where, by the terms of the bill, the carrier undertakes to deliver the goods to the order of a specified person, and such person or a subsequent indorsee of the bill has indorsed it in blank.

SEC. 31. That an order bill may be negotiated by the indorsement of the person to whose order the goods are deliverable by the tenor of the bill. Such indorsement may be in blank or to a specified person. If indorsed to a specified person, it may be negotiated again by the indorsement of such person in blank or to another specified person. Subsequent negotiation may be made in like manner.

SEC. 32. That a bill may be transferred by the holder by delivery, accompanied with an agreement, express or implied, to transfer the title to the bill or to the goods represented thereby. A straight bill can not be negotiated, and the indorsement of such a bill gives the transferee no additional right.

SEC. 33. That an order bill may be negotiated by any person in possession of the same, however such possession may have been acquired, if by the terms of the bill the carrier undertakes to deliver the goods to the order of such person, or if at the time of negotiation the bill is in such form that it may be negotiated by delivery.

SEC. 34. That a person to whom an order bill has been duly negotiated acquires thereby—

(a) Such title to the goods as the person negotiating the bill to him had or had ability to convey to a purchaser in good faith for value, and also such title to the goods as the consignee and consignor had or had power to convey to a purchaser in good faith for value; and

(b) The direct obligation of the carrier to hold possession of the goods for him according to the terms of the bill as fully as if the carrier had contracted directly with him.

SEC. 35. That a person to whom a bill has been transferred, but not negotiated, acquires thereby as against the transferor the title to the goods, subject to the terms of any agreement with the transferor. If the bill is a straight bill, such person also acquires the right to notify the carrier of the transfer to him of such bill and thereby to become the direct obligee of whatever obligations the carrier owed to the transferor of the bill immediately before the notification.

Prior to the notification of the carrier by the transferor or transferee of a straight bill the title of the transferee to the goods and the right to acquire the obligation of the carrier may be defeated by garnishment or by attachment or execution upon the goods by a creditor of the transferor, or by a notification to the carrier by the transferor or a subsequent purchaser from the transferor of a subsequent sale of the goods by the transferor.

A carrier has not received notification within the meaning of this section unless an officer or agent of the carrier, the actual or apparent scope of whose duties includes action upon such a notification, has been notified; and no notification shall be effective until the officer or agent to whom it is given has had time, with the exercise of reasonable diligence, to communicate with the agent or agents having actual possession or control of the goods.

SEC. 36. That where an order bill is transferred for value by delivery, and the indorsement of the transferor is essential for negotiation, the transferee acquires a right against the transferor to compel him to indorse the bill, unless a contrary intention appears. The negotiation shall take effect as of the time when the indorsement is actually made. This obligation may be specifically enforced.

SEC. 37. That where a person who negotiates or transfers for value a bill by indorsement or delivery, unless a contrary intention appears, warrants—

(a) That the bill is genuine;

(b) That he has a legal right to transfer it;

(c) That he has knowledge of no fact which would impair the validity or worth of the bill;

(d) That he has a right to transfer the title to the goods, and that the goods are merchantable or fit for a particular purpose whenever such warranties would have been implied if the contract of the parties had been to transfer without a bill the goods represented thereby.

SEC. 38. That the indorsement of a bill shall not make the indorser liable for any failure on the part of the carrier or previous indorsers of the bill to fulfill their respective obligations.

SEC. 39. That a mortgagee or pledgee or other holder of a bill for security who in good faith demands or receives payment of the debt for which such bill is security, whether from a party to a draft drawn for such debt or from any other person, shall not be deemed by so doing to represent or warrant the genuineness of such bill or the quantity or quality of the goods therein described.

SEC. 40. That the validity of the negotiation of a bill is not impaired by the fact that such negotiation was a breach of duty on the part of the person making the negotiation, or by the fact that the owner of the bill was deprived of the possession of the same by fraud, accident, mistake, duress, or conversion, if the person to whom the bill was negotiated, or a person to whom the bill was subsequently negotiated, gave value therefor in good faith, without notice of the breach of duty, or fraud, accident, mistake, duress, or conversion.

SEC. 41. That where a person, having sold, mortgaged, or pledged goods which are in a carrier's possession and for which an order bill has been issued, or having sold, mortgaged, or pledged the order bill representing such goods, continues in possession of the order bill, the subsequent negotiation thereof by that person under any sale, pledge, or other disposition thereof to any person receiving the same in good faith, for value and without notice of the previous sale, shall have the same effect as if the first purchaser of the goods or bill had expressly authorized the subsequent negotiation.

SEC. 42. That where an order bill has been issued for goods no seller's lien or right of stoppage in transitu shall defeat the rights of any purchaser for value in good faith to whom such bill has been negotiated, whether such negotiation be prior or subsequent to the notification to the carrier who issued such bill of the seller's claim to a lien or right of stoppage in transitu. Nor shall the carrier be obliged to deliver or justified in delivering the goods to an unpaid seller unless such bill is first surrendered for cancellation.

SEC. 43. That, except as provided in section 42, nothing in this act shall limit the rights and remedies of a mortgagee or lien holder whose mortgage or lien on goods would be valid, apart from this act, as against one who for value and in good faith purchased from the owner, immediately prior to the time of their delivery to the carrier, the goods which are subject to the mortgage or lien and obtained possession of them.

SEC. 44. That any person who, knowingly or with intent to defraud, falsely makes, alters, forges, counterfeits, prints or photographs any bill of lading, or with like intent utters or publishes as true and genuine any such falsely altered, forged, counterfeited, falsely printed or photographed bill of lading, knowing it to be falsely altered, forged, counterfeited, falsely printed or photographed, or aids in making, altering, forging, counterfeiting, printing or photographing, or uttering or publishing the same, or issues or aids in issuing or procuring the issue of, or negotiates or transfers for value a bill which contains a false statement as to the receipt of the goods, or as to any other matter, or who, with intent to defraud, violates, or fails to comply with, or aids in any violation of, or failure to comply with any provision of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be punished for each offense by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or both.

SEC. 45. That in any case not provided for in this act the rules of law and equity, including the law merchant, shall govern.

SEC. 46. First. That in this act, unless the context or subject matter otherwise requires—

"Action" includes counter claim, set-off, and suit in equity.

"Bill" means bill of lading governed by this act.

"Consignee" means the person named in the bill as the person to whom delivery of the goods is to be made.

"Consignor" means the person named in the bill as the person from whom the goods have been received for shipment.

"Goods" means merchandise or chattels in course of transportation or which have been or are about to be transported.

"Holder" of a bill means a person who has both actual possession of such bill and a right of property therein.

"Order" means an order by indorsement on the bill.

"Owner" does not include mortgagee or pledgee.

"Person" includes a corporation or partnership, or two or more persons having a joint or common interest.

To "purchase" includes to take as mortgagee and to take as pledgee.

"Purchaser" includes mortgagee and pledgee.

"State" includes any Territory, District, insular possession, or Isthmian possession.

Second. A thing is done "in good faith" within the meaning of this act when it is in fact done honestly, whether it be done negligently or not.

SEC. 47. That the provisions of this act do not apply to bills made and delivered prior to the taking effect thereof.

SEC. 48. That the sections of this act are independent and severable, and the declaring of any section or sections unconstitutional shall not impair or render unconstitutional any other section.

SEC. 49. That this act shall take effect on the 1st day of January, 1913.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], which has been reported.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the subject of bills of lading occupied considerable of the time of the Interstate Commerce Committee. Testimony was taken for and against these measures covering a period of days, and there are probably four or five hundred pages of printed testimony in reference to them. I do not care to discuss the matter in detail, except to give to the Senate something of the history of the legislation upon this subject.

Mr. President, a number of years ago the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Friedlander against Texas & Pacific Railway Co., in One hundred and thirtieth United States, page 416, had before it a case which involved the validity of a bill of lading and the liability of the railroad company under the terms of that bill of lading. The facts in that case, briefly stated, were these: A conspiracy was entered into between a certain shipper and a freight agent, whereby the freight agent issued to the shipper a bill of lading without the receipt of the goods. The Supreme Court of the United States decided that the railroad company was not liable, in view of the fact that the bill of lading had been issued without the receipt of the goods; and the proposition of law laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States, as it is found in the syllabus, is as follows:

A bill of lading fraudulently issued by the station agent of a railroad company without receiving the goods named in it for transportation but in other respects according to the customary course of business imposes no liability upon the company to an innocent holder who receives it without knowledge or notice of the fraud and for a valuable consideration. And this general rule is not affected in Texas by the statutes of that State.

I may say, without going into the details of this matter, that some of the States have held differently upon this proposition.

About five or six years ago the American Bar Association referred this matter to the commission on uniform State legislation. A bill was prepared by that commission primarily for the States, and it has now been adopted in 10 different States, Maryland, Massachusetts, New York, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, Ohio, and, within the last four weeks, by the State of Louisiana.

I need not suggest to Senators the importance of having uniformity, if possible, between State legislation and Federal legislation. This bill was under discussion for a period of, perhaps, four years. The commission employed Prof. Williston, of the Harvard Law University, to draft the bill after the subject had been thoroughly discussed by the commission. The commission met with lawyers and representatives of the various bankers' associations, shippers' associations, and railway associations; and the bill prepared by Prof. Williston represented the matured views of all of those interests. Some time later the bankers, as I understand—and I think I state their position correctly—fearing that there might be some delay in legislation upon a subject which was so broad, employed the same Prof. Williston to prepare a shorter form of a bill, which appears in the measure presented by the chairman of the committee, and known as Senate bill 957.

I may say that the object of this bill was simply to correct or change the rule of law as laid down in the Friedlander case. The substitute bill, S. 6810, which I have offered contains everything that is in the shorter form of the bill, and seeks to codify the law of the rights and liabilities of the consignor, the consignee, and the common carrier, as well as the indorsers, the indorsees, and the transferrers and transferees of the various bills of lading.

The demand in the commercial world is almost universal that there be some legislation which will correct the difficulties which confront shippers and bankers and railway companies.

Just a word—and I am going to be very brief upon this subject—to show the importance of this measure. It appeared before the Interstate Commerce Committee that bills of lading were issued in this country aggregating about $25,000,000,000 annually, and that upon those bills of lading thus issued, banks make loans annually aggregating about $5,000,000,000 in cash. It is estimated, and was so testified to before the committee, that about 99 per cent in value of the bills of lading pertain to interstate and foreign commerce, leaving only about 1 per cent having relation exclusively to intrastate traffic.

It is not necessary, I take it, for me to describe the advantages that are to be derived in a commercial way from the issuance of these bills of lading. Usually, when shipments are made and a draft is drawn upon the consignee, the bill of lading is attached, and this bill of lading, with the draft attached, is practically the same as commercial paper.

In the original draft of the bill the word "negotiable" was used in describing the one class of bills of lading—they were then divided by the bill into straight bills of lading and negotiable bills of lading—and the word "order" was substituted for the word "negotiable," it being thought—and I believe rightly—that if we were to use the word "negotiable" it might be confused with the words "negotiable instrument," as we commonly understand them. The order bill of lading has many of the features of a negotiable bill of exchange, but not in every particular.

The feeling is general that we ought to have some uniform legislation on this subject. There have been many frauds perpetrated upon banks and upon consignees by the issuance of fraudulent bills of lading, and these frauds have gone on to such an extent that it has cast discredit, particularly in foreign markets, upon the bills of lading which are issued by those merchants who ship their goods abroad.

It is the belief of the friends of the measure that the bill should pass. It would give a greater and a better commercial character to bills of lading generally.

I do not understand that there was any opposition whatsoever to the longer form of bill on this subject, except that at the time it was under consideration it was thought that if we were to take up the shorter bill the legislation could be completed at this session. I do not anticipate that that can be done now. I do not believe that it would be wise to make two bites of this cherry, and it seems to me that when we have the subject before us, with a bill as carefully prepared as this one which I present on behalf of the shipping interests, the bankers, and the railway people, and particularly a bill which represents the mature views of the commission on uniform legislation, there ought not to be any hesitation now in adopting that measure.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, I wish briefly to supplement the introductory remarks of the Senator from Ohio, who has charge of this bill on the floor of the Senate. As he has stated, this bill is really a bill formulated by the National Conference on Uniform Laws of the United States, changed so as to make it conform to interstate and foreign commerce. Inasmuch as I have the honor of being a member of the conference on uniform laws of the United States, having been a member from the State of Louisiana since the legislature of that State passed an act authorizing the governor to appoint a delegation to that body, and, as a matter of fact, being the president of the board of the Louisiana delegation and having attended all the meetings for many years, I am in a position to state to the Senate some things in reference to the care that is used by the conference on uniform State laws in formulating measures which it presents to the legislatures of different States and asks them to adopt.

This body is really the result of the effort of the American Bar Association, which twenty-odd years ago—about 21 years, I think—recognizing the importance of such a body, so that through its action the various States of the Union could have uniform laws on subjects that were of vital importance to all of the States, advocated the creation of such a board. The governors of the different States, recognizing the importance of the subject as presented to them through the memorial of the American Bar Association, appointed delegates; that is to say, nearly all did; possibly there may be two States in the Union that are not now represented in the conference on uniform laws. They meet always at the same place that the American Bar Association annually meets, and always a few days, at least a week, in advance, because every one of the members of the conference on uniform State laws is also a member of the American Bar Association, and several of its members are the chairmen of some of the most important committees of the bar association, and one of its members three years ago was its president.

I say this in order that the Senate may understand that the legal standing of the members of the conference on uniform State laws is considered by the American Bar Association to be quite as high as its own.

The American Bar Association contributes $2,000 a year toward that association. Many of the States contribute also. My own State is among that number. The American Bankers' Association and the National Traffic Association and some other bodies that recognize the importance of the work being carried on by the conference have likewise done so. None of the representatives receives any compensation for his services. In some cases the legislatures of the States pay their actual traveling expenses, but nothing more.

In no instance has any law been adopted by the conference on uniform State laws to be presented to the various States short of three years of consideration and most earnest consideration by the committee in charge of it, when the conference is not in session, and by the conference itself when it is in session.

After that is done it is submitted to the committee of the American Bar Association and has to run that gauntlet; though, as a matter of fact, no bill which has ever been prepared for adoption and turned over to that body has failed of approval by it.

Now, then, I say this to let the Senate understand that all legislation recommended by that body has been most carefully considered. It does not follow that because of that their judgment is correct, but it does follow that their judgment is not immature, at least, in the matter; that all things have been carefully considered.

Now, in reference to the particular bill which is under consideration, I will give the Senate its history. I shall quote from an address delivered by Mr. W. O. Hart, of New Orleans, La., one of the Louisiana commissioners, before the Bar Association of Arkansas, at Pine Bluff, on June 2, 1910. Among other things, he cites the history of this particular bill, which had then been perfected, and for the correctness of which I can vouch. I will now quote:

> In 1905 the commissioners on uniform State laws employed Prof. Samuel Williston, of the Harvard Law School, to prepare an act to make uniform the law of bills of lading. The first draft was submitted to the committee on commercial law at St. Paul, Minn., August 23, 1906, and received some consideration at its hands. The commissioners deferred its discussion for a year, so that it might be submitted to shippers, bankers, and carriers. The committee on commercial law held a meeting at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia, Pa., May 13 and 14, 1907, at which all these interests were represented. As a result of the discussion a second draft was prepared and considered by the committee on commercial law at Portland, Me., Wednesday, August 21, 1907, and by the commissioners at the same place August 22, 23, and 24.
> A third tentative draft was distributed June 1, 1908. The commissioners, at their annual conference held at the New Washington Hotel, Seattle, Wash., August 21, 22, and 24, 1908, recommitted the draft to the committee on commercial law for the purpose of securing additional expert information in perfecting the act. The committee on commercial law held a meeting at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York City, April 19 and 20, 1909, at which were present representatives of the American Bankers' Association, the American Warehousemen's Association, the National Board of Trade, Merchant's Association of New York City, the Chamber of Commerce, of Richmond, Va., the National Industrial Traffic League, the National Manufacturers' Association, the Erie Railroad, the Pennsylvania Railroad, the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, the Old Dominion Steamship Co., the bills of lading committee of railroads in official territory, the Harvard Law School, and the law departments of Columbia University and the University of Pennsylvania. In addition written communications were considered from numerous individuals and from commercial organizations. A fourth tentative draft was circulated July 17, 1909, and exhaustively discussed at a meeting of the committee on commercial law at the Hotel Pontchartrain, Detroit, Mich., August 17 and 18, 1909. At this meeting the following organizations and individuals were represented either in person or by letter: The American Bankers' Association, the National Association of Manufacturers, the American Warehousemen's Association, the National Board of Trade, the National Association of Credit Men, the Michigan Central Railway, the Pennsylvania Railroad, the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, the bills of lading committee of railroads in official territory, the National Industrial Traffic League, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Co., the Colorado & Southern Railway Co., Albert Strauss, of J. & W. Seligman & Co., of New York, James Barr Ames, dean of Harvard Law School, and Samuel Williston, Harvard Law School, Cambridge, Mass.
> The commissioners on uniform State laws, at their nineteenth national conference, held at the Wayne County courthouse, Detroit, Mich., August 19, 20, 21, and 23, 1909, carefully considered the same, section by section, and duly indorsed the act and recommended it to the legislatures of the various States for passage.
> On September 13, 1909, a conference on the whole subject of bills of lading was held at the Auditorium Hotel, Chicago, Ill., under the auspices of the American Bankers' Association, at which all of the diversified commercial interests of the United States were represented. The conference unanimously indorsed the uniform bills of lading act.
> The National Industrial Traffic League, at its annual convention held in the city of Chicago, November 11, 1909, unanimously indorsed the uniform bills of lading act. Similar action was taken by the Ohio State Board of Commerce at its annual meeting held in the city of Columbus, Ohio, November 12, 1909.
> The American Bankers' Association, pending the consideration of this act through their general counsel, Mr. Thomas B. Paton, of New York, prepared a uniform bill of lading and it passed in some of the States; but after the act of the conference had been perfected, gave to it unqualified support and will urge its adoption throughout the country, even in those States which had already adopted the one the association fathered. Very few legislative sessions have been held this year, and so far this law has been adopted but in Maryland, though we expect to have it adopted in Louisiana, where our legislature is now in session.

Since that time, as has been stated by the Senator from Ohio, 9 or 10 States have adopted it, including my own. We should have adopted it two years ago, at the first session after it had been introduced, but on account of the difference of opinion in regard to what was then section 6—now section 25—of this act, the legislature was unwilling to do it, because of the decision of the Supreme Court of Louisiana, in conformity with the case which has been cited by the Senator from Ohio. But the commissioners considered it one of the most vital, if not the most vital, features in the whole business, and said they would wait until the next legislature; and the next legislature, as has been stated by the Senator from Ohio, passed it.

I have taken up this time in order to inform the Senate of the great care used in the preparation of this bill by the conference on uniform laws, the same care that has been exercised by it in all other laws, some half dozen of which now, including the great negotiable instruments act, have been adopted by many of the great States of the Union.

Therefore, while it may not be correct in all its details, I wish the Senate to understand that if so, it is not from any lack of care having been exercised in its preparation by the conference on uniform State laws.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I had intended to say a few words on this bill, but in view of the fact that the unfinished business will come before the Senate within five or six minutes, at 1 o'clock, which would put this over, and in view of the desire to get a vote, I refrain from saying what I intended to say.

But I want to put into the RECORD a reference to Senate Document No. 650, which contains the testimony before the committee, the hearings on this bill, and to say briefly that I agree with what the Senator from Louisiana has said with reference to the extreme care which has been taken by all the parties in interest in the preparation of this bill and of the care which the committee exercised.

There are certain questions which perhaps may be raised, as in all matters of legislation, but I am satisfied that if in experience—in the working of this bill—errors shall be discovered, they can be easily corrected by future legislation, and undoubtedly the decisions of the courts will simplify some of the controverted matters.

My judgment is that the substitute proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is better, as it is a more comprehensive bill than the one that was reported by the Senator from Minnesota, and I will say that my understanding of the situation was that the bill reported by the Senator from Minnesota, which is a shorter bill, dealing with only the principal feature of the questions at issue, was reported because it was assumed that, being shorter and simpler, it would be more likely to receive the approval of the other branch of the Congress. But I earnestly hope that this substitute may prevail and that the bill, if the substitute is adopted, will pass.

Mr. CUMMINS. As a member of the committee which reported the bill now before the Senate, I desire to say that I also am very much in favor of the substitute offered by the Senator from Ohio. I believe it was the opinion of nearly every member of the committee that the bill which he has brought forward is more complete and will be more efficient than the bill reported by the committee, and I hope it will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], between whom and me there had been a pleasant passage of arms about the comparative recklessness of written expressions by Gov. Wilson, of New Jersey, and the ex-President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt, got permission, and I got permission, to insert quotations in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

When I came to prepare for the printer the quotations, I found it impossible to put them in the RECORD without some preamble—some connecting phraseology, by way of comment, and some explanatory phraseology, by way of comment, prepared by myself. I therefore did not think it would be fair to the Senate to take advantage of the leave which it had given me. I thought I had better be upon the perfectly safe side and say what I had to say upon this subject in the open Senate.

I have had submitted to me by the Senator from Idaho a quotation which he wanted to make from Gov. Wilson concerning President Jefferson. I am confirmed in what I thought before he produced it. There was nothing personal, contemptuous, disrespectful, or uncomplimentary to Mr. Jefferson in what he said. It was a discriminating analysis of a very subtle nature that desired to take things by the smooth handle, and it sometimes led to an appearance of insincerity. I agree with Gov. Wilson in his view substantially.

In the passage of arms between the Senator from Idaho and myself I challenged the recklessness of phraseology and statement of the late President of the United States. I shall now proceed to demonstrate his utter disregard of any connection between words and facts when he was seeking to express himself strongly.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I interrupt the Senator from Mississippi for a moment? I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the unfinished business, the subject upon which the Senator from Mississippi is now speaking.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly. I am very glad to yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time had not quite arrived; but the Chair will now lay before the Senate the unfinished business. It will be stated:

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not want to interrupt the Senator from Mississippi, but I simply wanted to have the unfinished business laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa ask that it be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; the Senator from Mississippi is speaking on this subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, among the unnecessary, unjust, and historically unveracious things that his late excellency ex-President Theodore Roosevelt has said concerning the great men who have formed this great line of American Presidents to whom I referred the other day, in favorable contrast with any equally numerous line of kings who ever reigned anywhere, not one of whom alone but very many of whom were men "the latchets of whose shoes" his late excellency is "unworthy to untie," I shall quote what follows.

The chief object of his intemperate, if not vicious, animosity seems to have been Thomas Jefferson, hated dead almost as much as he was when alive, in that respect differing from other great Americans; especially the hatred of the so-called better element, because Jefferson incurred the hatred of classes rather than of individuals. Individual hatred ceases with the life of its object; class hatred never. Roosevelt could not write a book without paying his slanderous respects to Mr. Jefferson. In his "Winning of the West," in his "Naval War of 1812," in his "Life of Thomas H. Benton" the following adjectives are to be found as expressing the late President's contempt and hatred of Jefferson. In one place he calls him "vacillating," in another "timid," in another "incompetent," in another "ungrateful," and this celebrated phrasemonger denounced him as "intriguing against Washington," as "secretly aiding the French," as exercising "an influence distinctly evil," and finally—probably shaking his right hand with his left and congratulating himself upon the phrase—pronounced Jefferson to be "the most incapable Executive that ever filled the presidential chair," and then, to cap the climax, this man whose phrase-making ability is at least equal to his love of truth, probably superior to it, studies out another phrase, whose cunning diabolism of untruth he expected all posterity to applaud when he says that Jefferson was "constitutionally unable to put the proper value on truthfulness."

I will not stop to remind American listeners that the man of whom he spoke was the author of "The Summary Statement of the Rights of British North America," the author of the "Declaration of Independence," of the first State "Statute of Religious Freedom," of the first inaugural address, as contradistinguished from a semimonarchial speech from the throne, which has constituted since then a "sermon upon the mount" to all men who love democratic institutions, nor to remind the hearer that Jefferson's photograph was hung up at the late "bull moose" convention, while professions of faith to "Jeffersonian democracy" were being loud voiced, nor will I stop to remind the hearer that Senator Hoar said, "When we recall Jefferson, we recall him with the Declaration of Independence in one hand and the treaty for the annexation of the Louisiana Territory in the other."

Mr. Roosevelt is not quite as hard on Madison, but he applies to him the adjective "timid," and the adjective "incapable," the adjective "feeble," and accuses him of "imbecile incapacity," and of bringing "shame and disgrace to America."

I will not stop to remind the hearer that Madison was "The Father of the Constitution"; one of the three authors of the Federalist; one of the best-educated men of his day; admitted on all hands to be the most learned of all men of his time in past and current political history.

Mr. Roosevelt says of Monroe that he possessed no "especial ability," and, with his love of phrase coining, regardless of historical veracity, says that he was, as Secretary of War, a "triumph of imbecility to the last." When he wrote that phrase I have no doubt that he shook his left hand with his right and said, "Delightful!" Then he calls Monroe a "figurehead." He evidently has two distinct ideas of what the word "figurehead" means, because in another place he calls Andrew Jackson a "figurehead"—Jackson, the man who in his day and generation was sometimes accused of bullheadedness, of arbitrariness, of being "guided by nobody," and of "wanting to run everything," but never accused of being a "figurehead." It was left to Mr. Roosevelt's wild anti-Democratic partisan hate, stimulated by a brilliant imagination, to couple that noun with the name of Old Hickory. In keeping with it, he says that Jackson was "managed by politicians"—this man whom his contemporaries accused of trying to manage everybody.

In connection with Monroe and Jackson I need not take the time of my audience to remind them that James Monroe was one of the bravest soldiers and officers in the Revolutionary Army; that he became so popular with the American people that his régime has gone down to history as the "era of good feeling"; that Thomas Jefferson said of him that he was "so honest that you might turn him inside out and find not a flaw"; that George Washington always professed the highest regard for him and confidence in him.

I need not take up the time of my hearers to remind them that Andrew Jackson was pretty much the same sort of character as Theodore Roosevelt is, except that Jackson had more self-control, less ambition, and less selfish unscrupulousness, and that if Jackson was ever "managed" by anybody or vouched for by anybody it was not, at any rate, by the money power, either in campaign contributions or otherwise; nor to remind them that Andrew Jackson was the commanding officer in the only substantial battle gained in the War of 1812—the Battle of New Orleans.

The ex-President says of Van Buren that he "faithfully served the mammon of unrighteousness." I shall not quarrel with that. There may be some truth in it. Then, with his love of phrase making, regardless of what it means or whether true or false, he adds of that same President that "he succeeded because of, and not in spite of, his moral shortcomings." This ceases to be a criticism of Van Buren and becomes a criticism of the American people, because a man elected "because of his shortcomings" must have been elected either by a very stupid or a very corrupt people.

Harrison, the hero of Tippecanoe, and old "Rough and Ready"—Zachary Taylor—the hero of Buena Vista, both of them dying before they had had any opportunity to show what sort of Presidents they could make, are designated by him as "small Presidents." So is Fillmore. In his love of extreme utterance, the ex-President refers to Tyler as a "politician of monumental littleness," and then, as if to add "perfume to the violet," he adds that "to call him a mediocre man is unwarranted flattery." Doubtless he congratulated himself and swelled his head when he revised that phrase for the press.

James K. Polk was once or twice Speaker of the House of Representatives, and, with the possible exception of three of the Speakers, he was the equal in intelligence and influence of any man who ever held that office. He was the President who boldly defended American honor after the admission of Texas to the Union by ordering our Army to take possession of every foot of territory belonging to the State of Texas, and therefore constituting a part of the United States. In the great State of Tennessee, always replete with great men, he had stood easily the equal of all with whom he fenced. But concerning Polk this man Roosevelt, the bull moose, said: "He was the very smallest, excepting Tyler, of the line of small Presidents who came in between Jackson and Lincoln." I do not know why he started with Jackson, because he had already said that Jackson was a "figurehead," and that he was "ignorant," and that "low politicians molded him to their will," and that his administration "corrupted the public service in every way"; but I suppose he had to have a starting point somewhere and a stopping point in order to get all the other Presidents in to whom he had not paid especial contemptuous attention. His envy dared not go to Lincoln. If it had, he could not have won office.

Not satisfied with including all the other Presidents generally, he says of Pierce that he was a "truckling, timeserving, northern politician," and in another place, "a small politician of low capacity and mean surroundings." True, Pierce was a brave soldier, as he proved himself to be in the Mexican War in a record ten times greater than any made at San Juan, and a courteous gentleman; true, he gave the country a most prosperous and successful administration; but what difference does that make when there is an opportunity to coin a phrase?

When the Senator from Idaho would suggest that the nominee of the Democratic Party, Hon. Woodrow Wilson, has expressed some opinions that have not stood the test of time—as I doubt not he has in the course of much living and much writing——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Idaho did not make that statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, I so understood the Senator from Idaho. I did not find any reason for the reference of the Senator from Idaho to Woodrow Wilson's expression about Jefferson except that the Senator from Idaho thought it an unwarranted opinion of Mr. Jefferson.

Mr. BORAH. The occasion for inserting Prof. Wilson's view of Mr. Jefferson was the fact that the Senator from Mississippi had called attention to Col. Roosevelt's view of Mr. Jefferson.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; the Senator from Idaho will pardon me.

Mr. BORAH. The RECORD is here before me, and there will be no difficulty in sustaining what I say. The Senator from Mississippi had stated what Col. Roosevelt had said about Jefferson, and I said that Dr. Wilson also uttered some views along the same line, and I read them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I remember the language of the Senator from Idaho, it was that Mr. Wilson had expressed opinions essentially the same. But concerning that we need not talk. However, before that the Senator from Idaho had called attention to what he seemed to think was an inconsistency between the Democratic platform and the speech of acceptance of Mr. Woodrow Wilson, and in that connection the pleasant passage of arms between him and me arose. Now, to go on. I will change this, then, if the Senator from Idaho would suggest that the nominee of the Democratic Party, Hon. Woodrow Wilson, has expressed some opinions that have not stood the test of time—as I doubt not he has in the course of much living and much writing—he forgets the old doctrine that "he who lives in glass houses should not throw stones." No man ever lived who ever figured nationally or internationally as a personage of importance, who was as absolutely careless and as thoroughly reckless in the use of words as alleged representatives of facts as Roosevelt has been. He began to write rather young, and I for one have been unwilling to hold him to a strict accounting for all that he ever said, until his adherents began to attack others, notably Woodrow Wilson, for less faults of similar character.

In my reference to these attacks I am not including the Senator from Idaho; but the Republican campaign committee gathered up every unthought phrase that was ever written, or every immature opinion that was ever put in print by Woodrow Wilson, and they are about to distribute it.

Here lately Republicans have had a great deal to say because Mr. Wilson at one time, in one of his books, said that there "began to appear" upon our shores a great many "foreigners of the meaner sort," who did not understand our institutions, and who were a cause of much civil and criminal difficulty. On page 71 of volume 1 of Mr. Roosevelt's American Ideals, he says this of foreigners, when discussing bad legislators:

> It is from these same great cities that the worst legislators come. It is true that there are always among them a few cultivated and scholarly men who are well educated, and who stand on a higher and broader intellectual and moral plane than the country members—

By the way, it seems to be a point of religion with him that where a man does live in a city and is well informed he is broader and wiser than men who live in the country. Oliver Cromwell lived in the country, Hampden lived in the country, Washington lived in the country, Jefferson lived in the country, Madison lived in the country, Monroe lived there, the great men who died for English freedom in the old country, the freedom of the English-speaking race, nearly to a man were country gentlemen. But let us go on with this quotation from ex-President Roosevelt, because that is not the point I am up to right now—> the bulk are very low indeed. They are usually foreigners, of little or no education, with exceedingly misty ideas as to morality, and possessed of an ignorance so profound that it could only be called comic were it not for the fact that it has at times such serious effects upon our laws.

That is strong phrasing, too. There was another American President, although not a President of the United States, he having been for five years a President of only a part of the United States. I allude to Jefferson Davis, of Mississippi. His late Excellency ex-President Roosevelt did not seem to think that his task had been completed until Jeff Davis also had been slandered. He says of him, in his Life of Thomas H. Benton, I think, that having been "an archrepudiator in his own State, it was no wonder that he afterwards became an archtraitor." These may not be the exact words, I have them not before me, but they are very near it.

There are two objections to this statement. The first is that Mr. Davis never was a repudiator. He earnestly opposed the action of Mississippi to which the author refers, and which he designates as "repudiation," and he always opposed it. The second objection is that if Mr. Davis were guilty of treason, nobody ever dared try him for it and leave the Supreme Court of the United States to define that secession was treason, although Mr. Davis begged for a trial. I am not raking up any embers of civil strife. God grant the thing may rest always buried. But I am protesting against anybody else raking them up, and especially against the utterance of charges that are historically untrue, the untruth of which a modicum of research might have taught the author. I understand that he relied for his authority upon the autobiography of Gen. Winfield Scott, a man whose favorite passion was hatred of Jefferson Davis because Jefferson Davis had not wanted to continue the office of Lieutenant General of the Army. But leave all that go as it may.

Mr. Roosevelt knows that this charge of repudiation against Mr. Davis is erroneous, and yet he has never corrected it. As to the charge of treason, of course the unsuccessful party in a civil war is always in a certain sense a traitor. He is accounted at any rate as guilty of treason, guilty of rebellion. A successful rebel becomes a patriot, but an unsuccessful rebel continues to wear the badge of his unsuccess. Nobody would quarrel at calling any Confederate soldier guilty of treason if anybody chooses to do so, but there was no reason at all to say that Mr. Davis was guilty of repudiation.

But the most cruel thing that he ever said was about the Populists, especially in view of the fact that his so-called "National Progressive Party" has stolen every plank in its late platform from the old Populists—initiative, referendum, recall, a squint at possible Government ownership of railroads, distrust of the judiciary—et id omne genus.

In his American Ideals (v. 2, p. 23) this language about the Populists occurs:

> Refinement and comfort they are apt to consider quite as objectionable as immorality. * * * A taste for learning and cultivated friends, and a tendency to bathe frequently causes them the deepest suspicion. * * * Though they often make war on vice, they rather prefer making war on prosperity and refinement.

And in the campaign of 1896, in a pamphlet which he wrote, this language occurs:

> Thrift, industry, and business energy are qualities which are quite incompatible with the true Populist feeling. Payments of debts, like the suppression of riots, is abhorrent to the Populist mind. Such conduct strikes the Populist as immoral.

Now, I should not doubt if that was his real opinion to-day of the people with whom he is at present cooperating, who are historically and politically the receivers of Populist goods though called "National Progressives." For my own part, I thought the Populist somewhat too radical, but I never did imagine that "the payment of debts, like the suppression of riots, was abhorrent to the Populist mind," nor to the bull moose mind, its intellectual and political supplanter; nor did I ever imagine that "a tendency to bathe frequently caused them the deepest suspicion." These are the words of the present leader of the new Populist Party—not mine. I resent their application to good, honest men, who at worst are only mistaken in the length to which they would go.

If I am not mistaken, one of the planks in the present National Progressive platform is in favor of curbing the operation of the writ of injunction when applied to laboring men. But in Mr. Roosevelt's American Ideals (vol. 2, p. 18) there occurs this language:

> The men who object to what they style "government by injunction" are, as regards the essential principles of government, in hearty sympathy with their remote skin-clad ancestors who lived in caves, fought one another with stone-headed axes, and ate the mammoth and woolly rhinoceros.
> They are interesting as representing a geological survival, but they are dangerous whenever there is the least chance of their making the principles of this ages-buried past living factors of our present life.
> They are not in sympathy with men of good minds and sound civic morality.

This man always mistakes a phrase for an idea. What great man, what class of men have escaped his contemptuous sneers? Take this about the Quakers, the sweetest, by the way, of all the sects. Charles Lamb, one of the sweetest of men, said that if you wanted to learn how good human nature could be, you ought to read the lives of Fox and the early Quakers. It occurs in his Life of Thomas H. Benton, page 37:

> A class of professional noncombatants is as hurtful to the real healthy growth of a nation as is a class of fire eaters, for a weakness or folly is nationally as bad as vice or worse, and in the long run a Quaker may be quite as undesirable a citizen as is a duelist.

I do not think either one of them belong to the most undesirable class—

> No man who is not willing to bear arms and to fight for his rights can give a good reason why he should be entitled to the privilege of living in a free community.

Then take this about the farmers and mechanics, which is to be found in his Ranch Life and Hunting Trail, pages 9 and 10. After having spoken of the cowboys as "brutally dissipated," and as "cutting mad antics" when "drunk on villainous whisky," "riding horses in saloons, firing their pistols right and left," he adds, however, that "they are much better fellows and pleasanter companions than small farmers or agricultural laborers; nor are the mechanics and workmen of a great city to be mentioned in the same breath."

Now, he may have slandered the cowboys, and I think he did. I know the Senator from Arizona thinks that he did. But that was his opinion of the cowboys. Then he proceeds with a comparison between them and the small farmers and mechanics, and that is where he brings them out. The old Alexander Hamilton federalistic contempt for the common people will crop out of him even when he is seeking their votes to placate an insatiable sense of superiority.

I have taken the above quotations for the most part from a speech made in the House of Representatives on Friday, April 22, 1904, by the Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN, of the State of North Carolina. More of the same sort will be found by recurrence to the speech as published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I wish I had had time and opportunity to have pursued an independent research in order to have added still more to what the Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN said and to what I happen to remember.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Crawford	McLean	Shively
Bacon	Cullom	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Borah	Cummins	Massey	Smith, Ariz.
Bourne	Curtis	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Bradley	du Pont	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Fall	Newlands	Smoot
Bristow	Fletcher	O'Gorman	Stone
Bryan	Gallinger	Oliver	Swanson
Burnham	Heyburn	Overman	Thornton
Chamberlain	Johnston, Ala.	Page	Townsend
Chilton	Jones	Penrose	Wetmore
Clarke, Ark.	La Follette	Perkins	Williams
Crane	McCumber	Pomerene

Mr. THORNTON. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. FOSTER], and I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I wish to make a few remarks in regard to the pending joint resolution. I have no carefully prepared speech to make, and shall detain the Senate but a few moments.

As has been said, a proposal of this kind to submit to the various States of this Union a fundamental change in our organic law is no light matter, but is one which all will concede not only deserves but commands the most grave and serious consideration. It occurs to me that at best when there is a widespread and a strong demand everywhere for a change in the Constitution of the United States Members of the Senate have an individual responsibility in determining whether they shall vote to submit a proposal to amend, and they can not remove the individual responsibility from their shoulders and shift it over upon the fact that there is a demand for it.

I do not believe it will do for a Member of the Senate to say to himself, "Personally my convictions are very deep against the advisability of amending the Constitution in the respect proposed, but because a very large number of people throughout the country are asking to have the proposal submitted I will obliterate myself, except in so far as to merely place upon record a vote that will transfer the question of determining whether or not the Constitution shall be amended to the legislatures of the several States. Personally I relieve myself of all duty to consider the question; I relieve myself of all responsibility as to what the consequences may be, because it is not proper that I should obstruct the most free and unrestrained passing from this forum to other forums throughout the Union of grave and serious questions relating to changes in our fundamental law." I can not agree with that view, Mr. President.

I believe the fathers intended, when they said that no proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States should be submitted to the several States for the consideration of their legislatures except upon the vote of two-thirds of the Members of the Senate and of the other House, that they had in mind the fact that a proposition of this kind is so serious that before the initiative could be taken it must meet with the approval of the judgment, the individual judgment and conscience, of at least two-thirds of the membership of this and the other body.

The amendment of the Constitution of the United States, to my mind, is a very much more grave and serious thing than an amendment of a constitution of a State; and yet, under the provisions in the constitutions of a very large number of our States, not only must a majority of the legislature pass the proposed resolution providing for amending, but it is required that a subsequent legislature shall also pass it by a majority, and often by two-thirds, of the votes before it is competent to submit to the electors of a State the question as to whether or not a State constitution shall be amended.

That indicates that, even with relation to proposals to amend the constitutions of the several States, the people have recognized the fact that there should be some stability in the underlying, fundamental, organic law of the State, and that it should not be susceptible to change by the ephemeral, emotional conditions of the people as they may change from time to time; and yet, with reference to the amendment of the organic law of a State, much may be said in behalf of an easy and liberal method of amendment which can not be said with reference to the amendment of the Constitution of the United States. The constitution or the organic law of a State, particularly in that vast field in which it furnishes the base for erecting legislation in the exercise of police powers, is a field peculiarly within the province of the people of the State, and I myself am inclined to believe that there should be an easy method and means by which the constitutions of the several States may be amended; but as to the fundamental law, which is at the foundation of the great Republic, comprised of 48 States, with the vastness of territory that the American Republic covers, with its varying conditions in different parts of the country, it is, to my mind, dangerous to remove those safeguards which were deliberately placed around it to secure serious and deliberate consideration and investigation before it can be amended.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It may be that the Senator intended to put in his remarks the article of the Constitution which provides for its amendment; but I rose for the purpose of asking him if he objects to having it put in?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Not at all; it may be inserted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator has used the words "whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall approve an amendment." The first two or three lines of Article V provide:

> The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution.

Mr. CRAWFORD. "Shall deem it necessary." I am glad the Senator has called my attention to that. It makes still more emphatic the thought that I was trying to express, that each Member of this body must come to the conclusion that the public welfare makes it necessary, in his opinion, to submit such a proposal for a change.

Mr. President, when we come to consider the immediate resolution now before the Senate, I ask again, as I did the other day when the Senator from the State of Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] was discussing this question, where do we find any evidence whatever of a widespread, persistent demand that the Constitution be amended by excluding the Chief Magistrate from holding his great position for more than one term or for a longer period than a term of six years? Nearly every day in the life of a session of the Senate during the morning hour, especially during the first half of a session, petitions are presented by Senators from nearly every State in the Union upon nearly every question which the human mind can be supposed to entertain, and such petitions are put into the RECORD. Over and over again a demand was presented in the form of petitions asking that the manner of electing Members of the Senate should be changed and that instead of being elected by the legislatures of the States they should be elected directly by the people. Here and there for several years now we have heard a demand, made in one form and another, that the tenure of office of the members of the judiciary shall be changed, either by a limitation of the term or by subjecting them to a recall, and things of that sort; but I undertake to say, so far as any expression coming to this body indicating a demand that can be called an extensive and widespread demand that the Constitution of the United States should be amended as proposed in this joint resolution, we are without any evidence whatsoever.

In a situation like this, with a joint resolution offered only a short time ago, reported back in the closing days of this session, involving a change in our fundamental law, which, to say the least, is most grave, serious, and far-reaching in its consequences, are we to say that Members of the Senate shall not exercise any individual thoughtfulness, care, deliberation, and judgment in regard to it, and because some one says that somewhere in some locality it is demanded—whether in California or in some other locality—we must submit it now, without serious debate and discussion upon its merits, before this session of Congress shall adjourn, and that we will be derelict in the performance of our duties if we allow it to lie over even until next December? It seems to me it is giving the question of discussion and deliberation and the element of time for the purpose of having the country discuss it, for the purpose of having public opinion throughout the United States have an opportunity to be informed in regard to it, scant attention, indeed, to press it here in the closing hours of this session, as if it were a matter demanding immediate action on our part.

So, Mr. President, I do not feel, under the circumstances in which this joint resolution is now placed before the Senate, that I am called upon to put aside whatever my personal conviction or judgment may be as to its merits and vote to submit it because of a claim that there is a widespread demand for it, when there is an entire absence of any evidence that there is such demand anywhere to any material extent whatsoever. So, for only a short time, I desire to make a few observations in regard to the merits of the proposed joint resolution itself.

Mr. President, what is the reason for the proposal that the term of office of the President of the United States shall be limited to only six years and that he shall then be ineligible to hold another term?

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire of the Senator from South Dakota if he does not feel that this proposed amendment, if adopted, would be the most radical change in the fundamental law of the Nation that has been made in it since the Government was established?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think it would be one of the most radical and far-reaching.

Mr. President, what is the reason for this proposal? If it is in the interest of the public welfare to limit the term of the President of the United States to four years or six years, by a parity of reasoning why should not a provision be adopted making a Member of the Senate ineligible for more than a term of six years? We are told that the position held by the President is one in which there is an extraordinary and dangerous power. Mr. President, I undertake to say that the position held by Members of the Senate is one clothed with extraordinary power, and a power which, if wrongfully exercised, may be very, very dangerous; and if the reasoning is good in one case, why is it not in the other?

But we are told that with the President there is from the time that he enters into that office until the close of his term a temptation to connive, conspire, plan, and plot, and to use the influence of his great office for the purpose of having himself reelected. Any charge of that kind, so far as there is any merit back of it, can be made with equal force against Members of the Senate or Members of the House of Representatives. There is just as much foundation for saying that a Senator immediately after he takes his oath of office, if he has personal ambition, if he has a desire to continue in the service of the country in this body, begins to plan and to so shape his course as to meet the approval of his people, so that he may be reelected. If patronage can be used for the purpose of strengthening the hold of a public officer upon the support of the people, a Senator has opportunity to use official patronage for the purpose of continuing himself in office, and if the temptation is a dangerous one with reference to the Chief Executive, why is it not a dangerous one in this body to permit Senators to use it?

Mr. President, I undertake to say that, when you analyze the situation, patronage, about which we hear so much in this discussion, is used more directly to help Members of the House of Representatives and Members of the Senate of the United States to secure their continuance in office than it is in any direct way used for the purpose of aiding the President of the United States to reelect himself.

Take the army of postmasters throughout the United States, about whose participation in political campaigns in the selection of delegates and in the running of conventions we hear so much. It is a matter of common knowledge that every one of them residing in districts represented in Congress by members of the party to which the President belongs is named by the Representative. The effect of that is not so much to help the President as it is to help that Representative in his district. Let us be fair in the discussion of this question. If we want to remove whatever abuse there is connected with the use of patronage, as there undoubtedly is some abuse, let us get at it in the right way. We can put all these officials under civil-service rules, if we so desire; we can make them all nonpartisan officers, if we so desire; we can do away with the delegate system, if we so desire; we can, by direct application of remedies, remove the evils that are incident to the use of patronage; but it looks to me as a very inconsistent thing, indeed, for us to say that a Representative shall be allowed to take advantage of all the abuses connected with the distribution of patronage to build up organizations for the purpose of reelecting himself, he being really the direct beneficiary of it, while it is so dangerous in the hands of a President of the United States, that he may so misuse the distribution of patronage that it is necessary to turn him out of office at the end of one term in order to get rid of this abuse.

Mr. President, take it in the other fields of patronage. Appointments of United States marshals, revenue collectors, appraisers of customs, and all the great corps of officeholders, even including the appointment of foreign ambassadors, are made by the President of the United States upon the recommendation of Senators; but when you analyze it for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not there is a dangerous power in it and whether that power may be used for the purpose of building up a machine and who the beneficiaries of it are, I undertake to say that the men who use it the most skillfully and with the greatest profit to themselves are not Presidents of the United States but Members of the Senate.

Let the President make appointments of marshals and revenue collectors and different officers in the State of one of those Senators, without advising with Senators, and then ask the Senate to confirm the nomination, and he is in a hornets' nest immediately. Plead guilty on both sides of this Chamber. Why? Because Members of the Senate want to exercise power in regard to that patronage, for their own purposes; and yet we, as Senators, propose to remain here during six years, and to get reelected as often as we can, and to hold office in this body all our lives, if we can, while claiming that the public welfare demands that the President of the United States, who uses this patronage in nine cases out of ten for the purpose of assisting the Members of this body or of the other body rather than himself, shall be ineligible to remain in office more than four years or six years.

To my mind it is ludicrous when you look at the real facts in relation to it. I undertake to say that so far as concerns Presidents of the United States, when it comes to the real question whether or not they shall receive the approval of the American people for reelection, patronage has been a curse to them rather than a help. It has been a leaden weight which has taken them down to defeat more often than it has been the means of lifting them to successful results.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from South Dakota suspend for a moment in order that the Senate may receive a message from the House of Representatives?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the bill (H. R. 26321) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, with his objections thereto, the House had proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the same and had passed the bill by a two-thirds vote, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 26236. An act conferring upon the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co. the privileges, rights, and conditions heretofore granted the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Co. to construct a railroad across certain lands in Comanche County, Okla.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
August 21, 1912.

The President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the bill (H. R. 26321) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, with his objections thereto, the House proceeded in pursuance of the Constitution to reconsider the same; and

Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same. Together with said bill is transmitted to the Senate the objections of the President thereto.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the matter before the Senate which has just come from the House is, of course, important and should be considered without delay. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	Myers	Smith, Md.
Bradley	Dillingham	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	du Pont	Newlands	Smoot
Briggs	Fletcher	Oliver	Stone
Bristow	Gallinger	Overman	Swanson
Bryan	Guggenheim	Page	Thornton
Burnham	Heyburn	Perkins	Tillman
Catron	Johnston, Ala.	Pomerene	Townsend
Clapp	Jones	Root	Warren
Clarke, Ark.	La Follette	Sanders	Wetmore
Crane	Lippitt	Shively	Williams
Crawford	McCumber	Simmons	Works
Culberson	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.
Cullom	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the absence from the city of my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. He has a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. I also desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objection of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

It has been the custom, and it is very likely the duty, of the Senate to have the bill and the message printed in the RECORD and in the Journal of the Senate, and if there be no objection, that order will be made without the reading of the bill and the message.

The message of the President of the United States and the bill are as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith H. R. 26321, an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," without my approval, because the bill still contains in section 9 a provision for the repeal of the act establishing the Commerce Court.

My objections to this repeal are stated in my message returning without approval H. R. 24023, communicated to the House of Representatives on August 15 last.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 21, 1912.

Court of Claims: Chief justice, $6,500; 4 judges, at $6,000 each; chief clerk, $3,500; assistant clerk, $2,500; bailiff, $1,500; clerks—1 at $1,600, 2 at $1,400 each, 3 at $1,200 each; stenographer, $1,200; chief messenger, $1,000; 3 firemen; 3 watchmen; elevator conductor, $720; 2 assistant messengers; 2 laborers; 2 charwomen; in all, $56,480.

For auditors and additional stenographers, when deemed necessary, in the Court of Claims, and for a stenographer, at $1,600, for the chief justice, to be disbursed under the direction of the court, $6,000.

For stationery, court library, repairs, including repairs to bicycles, fuel, electric light, electric elevator, and other miscellaneous expenses, $3,900.

For reporting the decisions of the court and superintending the printing of the forty-seventh volume of the reports of the Court of Claims, $1,000, to be paid on the order of the court, notwithstanding section 1765 of the Revised Statutes or section 3 of the act of June 20, 1874.

For pay of a custodian of the building occupied by the Court of Claims, $500, to be paid on the order of the court, notwithstanding section 1765 of the Revised Statutes or section 3 of the act of June 20, 1874.

SEC. 2. The pay of telephone-switchboard operators, assistant messengers, firemen, watchmen, laborers, and charwomen provided for in this act, except those employed in mints and assay offices, unless otherwise specially stated, shall be as follows: For telephone-switchboard operators, assistant messengers, firemen, and watchmen, at the rate of $720 per annum each; for laborers, at the rate of $660 per annum each; assistant telephone-switchboard operators, at the rate of $600 each, and for charwomen, at the rate of $240 per annum each.

SEC. 3. That the appropriations herein made for the officers, clerks, and persons employed in the public service shall not be available for the compensation of any persons incapacitated otherwise than temporarily for performing such service: Provided, That no part of any money appropriated in lump sum in this act shall be available for the payment of personal services at a rate of compensation in excess of that paid for the same or similar services during the fiscal year 1912; nor shall any person employed at a specific salary under this act be transferred during the fiscal year 1913 and be paid from a lump-sum appropriation a rate of compensation greater than such specific salary and the heads of departments shall cause this provision to be enforced.

SEC. 4. The Civil Service Commission shall, subject to the approval of the President, establish a system of efficiency ratings for the classified service in the several executive departments in the District of Columbia based upon records kept in each department and independent establishment with such frequency as to make them as nearly as possible records of fact. Such system shall provide a minimum rating of efficiency which must be attained by an employee before he may be promoted; it shall also provide a rating below which no employee may fall without being demoted; it shall further provide for a rating below which no employee may fall without being dismissed for inefficiency. All promotions, demotions, or dismissals shall be governed by provisions of the civil-service rules. Copies of all records of efficiency shall be furnished by the departments and independent establishments to the Civil Service Commission for record in accordance with the provisions of this section: Provided, That in the event of reductions being made in the force in any of the executive departments no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department is rated good shall be discharged or dropped or reduced in rank or salary.

Any person knowingly violating the provisions of this section shall be summarily removed from office, and may also upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year.

SEC. 5. That any person violating section 4 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved August 5, 1882 (Stat. L., vol. 22, p. 255), shall be summarily removed from office, and may also upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year.

SEC. 6. That in addition to the apportionment required by the so-called antideficiency act, approved February 27, 1906 (Stat. L., vol. 34, p. 49), the head of each executive department shall, on or before the beginning of each fiscal year, apportion to each office or bureau of his department the maximum amount to be expended therefor during the fiscal year out of the contingent fund or funds appropriated for the entire year for the department, and the amounts so apportioned shall not be increased or diminished during the year for which made except upon the written direction of the head of the department, in which there shall be fully expressed his reasons therefor; and hereafter there shall not be purchased out of any other fund any article for use in any office or bureau of any executive department in Washington, D. C., which could be purchased out of the appropriations made for the regular contingent funds of such department or of its offices or bureaus.

SEC. 7. That no money appropriated by this or any other act shall be expended for telephone service installed in any private residence or private apartment or for tolls or other charges for telephone service from private residences or private apartments, except for long-distance telephone tolls required strictly for the public business, and so shown by vouchers duly sworn to and approved by the head of the department, division, bureau, or office in which the official using such telephone or incurring the expense of such tolls shall be employed.

SEC. 8. That no money appropriated by this or any other act shall be used after the 1st day of October, 1912, for services in any executive department or other Government establishment at Washington, D. C., in the work of addressing, wrapping, mailing, or otherwise dispatching any publication for public distribution, except maps, weather reports, and weather cards issued by an executive department or other Government establishment at Washington, D. C., or for the purchase of material or supplies to be used in such work; and on and after October 1, 1912, it shall be the duty of the Public Printer to perform such work at the Government Printing Office. Prior to October 1, 1912, each executive department and other Government establishment at Washington, D. C., shall transfer to the Public Printer such machines, equipment, and materials as are used in addressing, wrapping, mailing, or otherwise dispatching publications; and each head of such executive department and other Government establishment at Washington, D. C., shall furnish from time to time to the Public Printer mailing lists, in convenient form, and changes therein, or franked slips, for use in the public distribution of publications issued by such department or establishment; and the Public Printer shall furnish copies of any publication only in accordance with the provisions of law or the instruction of the head of the department or establishment issuing the publication. The employment of all persons in the several executive departments and other Government establishments at Washington, D. C., wholly in connection with the duties herein transferred to the Public Printer, or whose services can be dispensed with or devolved upon another because of such transfer, shall cease and determine on or before the 1st day of October, 1912, and their salaries or compensation shall lapse for the remainder of the fiscal year 1913 and be covered into the Treasury. A detailed statement of all machines, equipment, and material transferred to the Government Printing Office by operation of this provision and of all employments discontinued shall be submitted to Congress at its next session by the head of each executive department and other Government establishments at Washington, D. C., in the annual estimates of appropriations: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed as applying to orders, instructions, directions, notices, or circulars of information, printed for and issued by any of the executive departments or other Government establishments or to the distribution of public documents by Senators or Members of the House of Representatives or to the folding rooms and documents rooms of the Senate or House of Representatives.

SEC. 9. That the Commerce Court created and established by the act entitled "An act to create a Commerce Court and to amend the act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1910, be, and the same hereby is, abolished and the jurisdiction vested in said Commerce Court by said act is hereby transferred to and vested in the several district courts of the United States.

All cases pending and undisposed of in said Commerce Court are hereby transferred to and shall be deemed pending in the district court of any of the judicial districts within which the original cause of action brought before the Interstate Commerce Commission arose, such district to be designated by the complainant; and the venue of all suits and proceedings hereafter brought to enforce, set aside, annul, or modify any order of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be in any of the judicial districts within which the original cause of action brought before the commission arose.

The venue in suits brought to enforce an order for the payment of money shall be in the district court of the judicial district in which the complainant resides. The procedure in the district court in respect to cases of which jurisdiction is conferred upon them by this act shall be the same as that heretofore prevailing in the said Commerce Court and the right of appeal from the district courts in such cases shall be the same as the right of appeal heretofore prevailing under existing law from the Commerce Court. No interlocutory injunction suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any order made or entered by the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be issued or granted by any justice of the Supreme Court, or by any district court of the United States, or by any judge thereof, or by any circuit judge acting as district judge, unless the application for the same shall be presented to a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, or to a circuit or district judge, and shall be heard and determined by three judges, of whom at least one shall be a justice of the Supreme Court, or a circuit judge, and the other two may be either circuit or district judges, and unless a majority of said three judges shall concur in granting such application. When such application as aforesaid is presented to a justice of the Supreme Court, or to a judge, he shall immediately call to his assistance to hear and determine the application two other judges: Provided, however, That one of such three judges shall be a justice of the Supreme Court, or a circuit judge. Said application shall not be heard or determined before at least five days' notice of the hearing has been given to the Interstate Commerce Commission, to the Attorney General of the United States, and to such other persons as may be defendants in the suit: Provided, That if of opinion that irreparable loss or damage would result to the complainant unless a temporary restraining order is granted, any justice of the Supreme Court, or any circuit or district judge, may grant such temporary restraining order at any time before such hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction, but such temporary restraining order shall remain in force only until the hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction upon notice as aforesaid. The hearing upon such application for an interlocutory injunction shall be given precedence, and shall be in every way expedited and be assigned for a hearing at the earliest practicable day after the expiration of the notice hereinbefore provided for. An appeal may be taken direct to the Supreme Court of the United States from the order granting or denying, after notice and hearing, an interlocutory injunction in such case; and upon the final hearing of any suit brought to annul, enjoin, or restrain any order of said commission the same requirement as to judges and the same procedure as to appeal shall apply. The provisions of this section shall also apply to the issuing and granting of interlocutory injunctions suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of orders made by any administrative board or commission created by and acting under the statute of a State. That in such case the notice required shall be served upon the defendants in the case, and upon the attorney general of the State. All cases pending in the Commerce Court at the date of the passage of this act shall be transferred forthwith to said district courts. Each of said cases and all the records, papers, and proceedings shall be transferred to the district court wherein it might have been filed at the time it was filed in the Commerce Court if this act had then been in effect, and if it might have been filed in any one of two or more district courts it shall be transferred to that one of said district courts which may be designated by the petitioner or petitioners in said case, or, upon failure of said petitioners to act in the premises within 10 days after the passage of this act, to such one of said district courts as may be designated by the judges of the Commerce Court. The judges of the Commerce Court shall have authority, and are hereby directed, to make any and all orders and to take any other action necessary to transfer as aforesaid the cases and all the records, papers, and proceedings then pending in the Commerce Court to said district courts.

SEC. 10. That until otherwise provided by law, the regular annual estimates of appropriations for expenses of the Government of the United States shall be prepared and submitted to Congress, by those charged with the duty of such preparation and submission, only in the form and at the time now required by law, and in no other form and at no other time.

SEC. 11. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this act are repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called on the question of passing the bill the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THORNTON (when Mr. FOSTER's name was called). Again announcing the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. FOSTER], I will say in addition that on this question he is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. GUGGENHEIM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER]. That pair has been taken care of by another arrangement, and I therefore am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. POMERENE (when the name of Mr. JOHNSON of Maine was called). I desire to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON], and I have been requested to announce that on this bill the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is paired with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] and the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON].

Mr. CUMMINS (when Mr. KENYON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. KENYON] is unavoidably absent. He is paired as already announced. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], but on veto questions I am relieved from that pair. I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMOOT (when Mr. LODGE's name was called). I desire to state that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is paired upon this question with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I am relieved by my pair, and so I am at liberty to vote on this question. I vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. He is absent. I have agreed with him that upon this question I will not vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. DU PONT (when Mr. RICHARDSON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] is absent on account of illness. He is paired on this question with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. ROOT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN]. It does not apply, however, to a vote where two-thirds are required, and I accordingly vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. That pair has been transferred to the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]. Therefore I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). My colleague [Mr. SMITH] is necessarily absent from the city. As has been stated by the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], he is paired on this question with that Senator.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARD-

SON], and I transfer it to the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will vote. I vote "aye."

Mr. SMOOT (when the name of Mr. STEPHENSON was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON]. He has a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY] and the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT (when Mr. SUTHERLAND'S name was called). I desire to announce the absence from the city of my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] and that he has a pair on this question with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER].

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). My general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] has been transferred as announced by his colleague. Therefore I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. If he were present and I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] and I have a pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. If the Senator from Texas were present, I understand he would vote "nay." The Senator from Montana and I would vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. I will ask if the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that that Senator has not voted.

Mr. MYERS. I have a general pair with the Senator from Connecticut. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea," and I take it that I am not therefore in a position to demand a double pair with anyone on the other side who would probably vote "nay." Therefore I feel bound, having given no notice of any intention of dissolving the pair, to withhold my vote.

Mr. CHILTON (after having voted in the affirmative). I inadvertently voted. I desire to withdraw my vote for the reason that I have a pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] and myself constituting the two.

Mr. BRIGGS (after having voted in the negative). In casting my vote I inadvertently failed to call attention to the fact that my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON] has been transferred, he being paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. WARREN. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. CLARK], who is paired as stated by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the absence from the city of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN]. He has a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. DU PONT. In making the announcement I did in respect to my colleague, I believe I omitted to state that if he were present and free to vote, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SHIVELY. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. KERN] is unavoidably absent from the Chamber on account of sickness in his family. He is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. Were he present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence on account of sickness in his family of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE].

Mr. MYERS. In view of the announcement by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], if present, would vote "yea," I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call resulted—yeas 34, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—34.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the question, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary not withstanding? the yeas are 34, the nays 27; not two-thirds; and the bill fails of passage.

THE PRESIDENTAL TERM.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I was remarking, Mr. President, that there is no claim with reference to the abuse by an ambitious man in the office of Chief Magistrate of patronage for the purpose of securing another term of office that does not apply with practically the same force against Members of the Senate and Members of the other House, and that in fact the power of patronage is more directly used by Members of Congress to secure themselves in tenure of office than by the President to secure himself in office, and with greater effect. It is a question whether it does not more often injure both than it helps them. But the question of abuses connected with the distribution of patronage can be reached in an effective fashion in other ways rather than by impairing, as I think, the public service by limiting the service of a President of the United States to a term of four or six years.

Mr. President, experience is valuable in any field of activity. The most valuable asset any man can have in an energetic life is experience. When he has an experience that his competitor has not, his advantage is certainly very great. Take the Members of the Senate who have been here term after term for 18 and 24 years, and who have been so long in this service that all the details of governmental affairs are as familiar to them as the most common everyday experiences in life. Does anyone undertake to discount the value of that experience to the public when applied here by honest men? A tried and true man of long experience in one of these departments, who has become an expert, familiar with all its details, brings to bear in the solution of every question that comes before him an experience that has encountered difficulties of that kind before time and again.

Does anyone undertake to say that we can lightly throw aside all the result of the years of experience in public service, and do it in the interest of the public welfare, by exchanging such a man for a raw recruit who has had no opportunity to become acquainted with the vast, multifarious business affairs, for that is what they are, connected with the administration of a great Republic like this? Experience is just as valuable and necessary in the conduct of public affairs as it is in the conduct of private business affairs. Take it in the great industrial concerns of the United States, which are the marvel of the world and are commanded by the men of genius of the world; take the trained, skilled man who is responsible, who has a desire to meet the approval of the men who put their capital into his hands and who have their all invested in the business; he has wanted to secure their support and he has been there for a long term, acquainted everywhere, with his hand on the lever, knowing how it should be conducted. Would you help the conduct of that business by making a change in that place every four years and trying an experiment, because necessarily it would be an experiment, with a new man? Would you say running that risk was in the interest of the public?

You can take the illustrious names of the great characters who have added to the glory of the Republic in this Chamber, your Calhoun, your Clay, your Webster, your Benton, all these great figures served here for nearly a lifetime. The men who came in here and served one term have disappeared. You will find their names in the Directory as you would find names in an almanac, and you do not know who they are until you look them up because they came and went; their career was too short for them to be of substantial service. They never got in touch with the work of public life. They never were able to develop with experience and become intrenched in the service so as to render that character of service which the Republic demands.

It is just so in the White House. Do you think this country would have been better off if George Washington had served for only four years instead of eight? Do you think its history would have been any brighter or greater if Madison had served only four years, if Jefferson had served only four years, and if the experiment had been tried with a new man at the end of each four-year period. Instead of this, take your one-term men and compare them with your two-term men from the beginning of the constitutional history of the Government to the present time. Do you think that the public welfare was promoted to a greater extent, that the interests and the destinies of the Republic were more secure in the hands of men who were President for only one term than in the hands of those who were President for two? I challenge the statement that that is true.

It is a simple question as to whether experience is of any value to the public service. A man comes in the White House for four years to preside over the executive department of this great Republic of 90,000,000 people, with all its ramifications everywhere touching life in all its different forms, with the vastness of its transactions. He has to select the heads of all the departments and in a general way to keep his hand on the lever and see to it that the laws are enforced and wise policies urged. One term of four years, or six years, possibly, is a short period in the administration of the affairs of a great nation, especially with a new man coming into this great office, sometimes perhaps finding the legislative department out of sympathy with him. With the great policies for which he stands, connected with important public questions, with the administration of great policies, delays would naturally follow the obstruction of a hostile legislative branch of the Government, which might afterwards change and come over to his side in two years or in four years. I say conditions could exist which would practically make it impossible for him to propose and secure the enactment of a single great measure that the people of the country had commissioned him to carry out, because of the short tenure of his office.

Then you break the continuity. You propose that when he has just barely got started, when in the last year of his term he has finally secured a Congress in sympathy with him, selected his men, great and strong, in sympathy with him, and is equipped and ready to launch forth and accomplish something, down shall go the hammer; the time is up; the thing is broken; the continuity is destroyed; there is no permanency of policy; and a new man comes in. Is that in the interest of the public welfare? Does the interest of the public welfare require such a change as that in the fundamental law of our land?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rose only for the purpose of suggesting that the Senator from South Dakota has not made himself familiar with the joint resolution under discussion in all its parts. It provides for a six years' term, not a four years' term.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am discussing the proposition, and I have used four years or six years; I do not care which. The joint resolution does propose a term of six years.

Mr. CUMMINS. Would it meet the approval of the Senator from South Dakota if the joint resolution were amended so as to make the term eight years?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No, it would not; because my belief rests on a different foundation from that. I say, in the first place, what is, in a way, a repetition, but it is so brief that it will not cause delay, the question of patronage and the abuse of patronage can be dealt with effectively without shortening the term. In the second place, whatever abuse is connected with the distribution of patronage lies as largely at the door of Senators and Representatives as at the door of the President. If you are going to shorten the term of one and make it one term only, make it one term for all. But you would take from the public welfare service that can only be rendered by those who have become more fit than others through long experience.

In addition to that, you break into the continuity of policy and the destruction or the impairment of the value of a man's service, which necessarily grows out of experience. It is not in the interest of the public welfare and continuity of policy in carrying on governmental affairs to have this continuity broken at short intervals.

Now, another point, Mr. President, you can not get away from, and that is the fact that men do love the approval of their fellow citizens. They love to receive that reward which exists in an expression of their countrymen that "we are pleased with your service, and we desire you to continue it for four years longer, or six years longer." Take that element out of the public service and you have given a tremendously serious blow to it. It is human nature. Put a man in office for four years or for six years and have him know absolutely that his public career ends with the six years, that there is no future for him, so far as service to the public is concerned, that no more honors can come to him, that all the power connected with the great office must be exercised by him during the six years, and compare that situation with the other, where if he has so administered the trust as to meet their approval his fellow citizens will say to him at the end of four years or of six years, "We approve what you have done, we appreciate your service; you have made a faithful servant; the people want you to continue during four years or six years more as you have done during the four years or six years past." No more powerful incentive can be given to a public officer than that, outside of the approval of conscience, which, of course, should govern the actions of men always. But men are human. They love the approval of their fellow men. They love fame. Remove this desire for the approval of your fellow men and the love of fame from the hearts of men, and the most glorious pages of history would never have been written.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield further to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. A few minutes ago the Senator from South Dakota said that only those Senators who had served for a long period of time would be remembered for great accomplishment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senator will permit me, I did not make that as an absolute statement. I made it as a general statement.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understood that to be the general statement of the Senator from South Dakota and I do not care to dispute it. The Senators who were in the mind of the Senator from South Dakota served for 20 or 30 years. Does the Senator from South Dakota see any objection to the President being reelected for 20, or 30, or 40 years, and why?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I see a serious objection to extending one term, making it 10 years, 15 years, 20 years, but I see no objection to having a President of the United States or any other servant of the people serve them as long as the people desire him to serve them, they having the power to express their wish at intervals that are not so long that they are unable to get rid of an unworthy servant. There is the protection to the public.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understood the Senator from South Dakota to say that no considerable efficiency could be expected unless there was this long term of service. That is equivalent to saying that no President could serve the people very well unless he served them for 20 or 30 years in that capacity, and I wanted to know whether that was said upon reflection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator does not deal quite justly with what I said. I did not make it as broad as that. I undertook to say that with the same public servant newly inducted into office, if that servant afterwards had added to his strength and equipment 10 years of experience, one of the most valuable features of his equipment would be the fact that he had 10 years of public service and experience.

Mr. CUMMINS. It means, then, that it might be wise on the part of the people, if they found an efficient President, to reelect him from term to term until he had served 20 or 30 years in that office.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator and myself have heard a good deal of talk about trusting the people and about faith in the people. Here is a proposition of that kind. I am absolutely willing at all times to trust to the good sense of the people.

Mr. CUMMINS. Every time, except to vote upon this particular constitutional amendment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Oh, no; in my opening remarks I stated my position in regard to that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I then ask the Senator from South Dakota whether he is in harmony with the rule or the principle established by Washington, that we have respected every since, which has limited the service of a President of the United States to two terms?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am perfectly willing to leave that to the good faith of the people. They have made no mistake in 125 years. They have not amended the Constitution in that particular.

Mr. CUMMINS. They have never elected a President more than twice.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; I am aware of that.

Mr. CUMMINS. And yet we have had very efficient Presidents in that time. Why did not the people reelect them for a third term?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Apparently they did not care to do it, and they may not care to do it, although there seems to be a very serious apprehension in the land that they might do it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Was it not because the people did not regard it as wise to continue this vast power in a single hand for more than two terms?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I presume so.

Mr. CUMMINS. And does not that afford some evidence, at least, that if we were to limit the service to six years we would accomplish all the beneficial purposes the Senator has in mind and still guard against a danger which a great many people believe to be serious?

Mr. CRAWFORD. In regard to that I can not agree with the Senator. I would rather leave it to the people, as we have left it to them for 125 years, than to put up an absolute barrier which through all future time will prevent the people from utilizing the services of some man who serves them well. I would rather leave it to their good sense and to their good judgment, as we have been leaving it for 125 years.

Mr. President, the continuity of policy, I say, would be broken every four or six years. In the tremendous business affairs of a great Republic every four or six years, arbitrarily, by a hard-and-fast limitation, a new hand must come in and go to the helm. With an old, tried, experienced hand that we had every day for four or six years, who continued to weld himself into the hearts and affections of the people and to serve them, and whose services they may wish to demand for four years or six years longer, and who is carrying out policies that they want and wish carried to completion, the curtain falls arbitrarily on the 4th day of March at the end of six years, and that tried and true public servant whom the people may want to retain in service goes out, and the green hand comes in. I do not believe that is a good policy or in the interest of the public welfare.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield further to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. What right has the President of the United States to have a policy?

Mr. CRAWFORD. He has the same right to have a policy that the Senator has to have a policy. I differ with the Senator in regard to that in this respect: I would not be unfair to the Senator, but it seems to me that the Senator's standpoint is that we want a sort of harmless, inoffensive, nonaggressive man in the White House who has no policy, who stands for nothing. I would rather see a great, strong, aggressive man there who stands for something and who does have policies, and I believe the American people prefer such a man.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not know exactly what the American people do want with respect to the Presidents. We seem to be in some doubt about that matter just now. There is at least a question in the minds of some people about the liberty of expression on the part of the American people, or those of them who belong to the party to which the Senator from South Dakota and myself belong, but I look upon a President as a creature of the Constitution, and that he has just such power as is given to him in the Constitution and by the laws of the country. I do not agree to the modern notion which is held by a great many people that the President of the United States should enact the legislation which alone can create a policy, which alone can carry forward a policy. I do believe the President is limited and ought to be limited in his political activity to the recommendations which he may make from time to time to Congress. I repudiate utterly the modern thought that it is his business to use his influence, no matter in what direction or upon whom, to compel legislation according to his view of the public welfare. The Constitution did not create any such office as that, and whenever those powers are exercised they are usurped by the President of the United States.

I am not referring to any particular instance, but the history of our country is full of that usurpation, and I shall never lose an opportunity to lift up my voice against it. If that view makes a President inefficient and harmless and generally weak, then that is the view of the Constitution, and I can not change it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I have not taken the position, and far be it from me to take the position, that the President has any right to undertake to compel legislation by usurping legislative power. This is the legislative department. I do not believe it would willingly admit that it has so lost its dignity and its strength that a President of the United States can compel it to do anything. The President of the United States, however, is expected to be a man of some character, of some individuality, and a man of some leadership before the American people. In every one of the States where men have gone out and undertaken to advocate measures in the interests of the people, have gone out as candidate for governor demanding the control of corporations in their States and a more equitable law for taxation of corporate properties, and all that, these men have had policies. They have gone out and advocated policies and they discussed policies, and the people approved all the policies—if you want to call them "proposals," call them "proposals"—at any rate, the minds of the public and of these men met in regard to these policies, and when they went into executive offices they made recommendations to the legislatures, and the result was the enactment of these laws. Were those men usurpers?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, any man has a right to have a policy. I said the President of the United States——

Mr. CRAWFORD. He has the same right that any other man has.

Mr. CUMMINS. He has the right as a man to have the policies that his judgment may dictate; but I wish the Senator from South Dakota would instance some of the great policies which have been formulated and carried out by a President of the United States that would have been interrupted if that President had been limited to a single term of six years.

I think I do not disagree with the Senator from South Dakota about the influence that a President ought to exercise. He has more power, as I said yesterday, than any other man on earth. His duties are so vast and comprehensive and so important that they will employ the highest capacity which the Creator of the Universe ever gave to any mortal man, and he has this field to occupy these energies without entering upon another field that was reserved by the Constitution for another department of the Government.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I do not propose to pick out individual cases. We might differ with reference to those cases and get into collateral discussions here with reference to details that would extend the discussion to undue length. I am not discussing this question from the standpoint of any particular individual, whether a candidate for President or not. I am discussing a question here which I think relates to the public welfare. Whether it is the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], or the ex-President, or the candidate of the Democracy who shall be in the White House, if he is in harness, if he is serving the public faithfully, and if at the end of one short term the public welfare demands that he be continued in office, and it is the wish of the people that he should be continued there, I say it is against public policy to put up an arbitrary barrier, saying that the curtain must fall upon his acts on the 4th of March, in the midst of his public service.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. In other words, does not this proposed amendment to the Constitution reach the remarkable conclusion that the people can be trusted to elect a man President who has never been tried, but, after four years of trial, it is unsafe to trust them again with the selection of President?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. That is the way it strikes me.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have spoken now longer than I intended; but I simply say that the erection of this barrier would militate against stability, against continuity of policy, against the utilization by the people of the United States of experience and deprive them in hours of great trial and danger, in great emergencies, of their most valuable asset.

There was mentioned here yesterday an instance near the close of President Lincoln's first administration. One man is not absolutely necessary—I am not a hero worshiper—to the public; but there are times when a certain man can perform a service to his people that no other man in that situation could perform. Then why deprive them of the opportunity of making use of the services of such a man in an emergency of that kind?

Remember all the time that here is the corrective: Every four years the conduct of this officer must be submitted to his countrymen. The power of patronage vanishes like frost before the rising sun if the people of the United States feel that a cold-blooded, selfish plotter in the White House has been using patronage simply for selfish purposes and has neglected their interests. When the ballots fall at the election on the 4th day of November, or whatever the election day may be, they pass judgment upon the conduct of this officer; and before him all the time while he is in office hangs the fruit that will fall into the bowl if he so conducts himself as to meet the approval of his countrymen. There is the power; there is the corrective.

Every four years the case is submitted. Take that away, and this man in office, governed by those influences that affect human nature, may say to himself, "I have no future; I will utilize this power while I am in office for myself, and there is no going back to the jury so far as I am concerned; this is my last opportunity." It depends on the man. If he is avaricious, he may plant his favorites here and there; if he is ambitious for power, he will have the opportunity to use all the power in his possession to put one of his favorites holding a Cabinet position into office as his successor. A six years' limitation will not prevent him from doing that. He can use all of this power, that is said to be so dangerous, this great machine, as an engine to put somebody else in the office as his successsor, and he may put somebody else in who is not half so efficient and serviceable as he.

So, what have you gained? You have taken from him the opportunity to have his acts passed upon by his countrymen for the purpose of securing their approval, and you have exposed him to the temptation of using his power to put a favorite in his place.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not want to take up more time.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator will allow me for a moment, I was about to say that I recognize the truth of what the Senator has just said. It is not impossible that a President limited to a single term may use his power for the nomination of a favorite; possibly it has been done in times past. I wish I could take it away. This joint resolution does not take it away. I admit that; but it does take away the opportunity to use the power in his own behalf; and the very fact that the Senator has just mentioned is complete proof of the soundness of my position. He has said, and we very sorrowfully admit it to be true, that a President can overcome the public will, can divert the public judgment, and can secure the nomination at the hands of a political party of a candidate not desired by a great proportion of the members of that party. It is to prevent just such diversion of the public judgment with regard to the man himself, at least, that this joint resolution proposing this amendment is brought forward.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, the proposed amendment would not do it; and that is not all. I doubt if any law can take away the power of leadership. You can not define leadership. It is not coercing the people into the support of another; it is not destroying the will of his fellow men; but it is the invincible power, undefinable, of personal leadership, personal influence which arouses men. I repeat, you can not define it; you can not analyze it; but in this discussion the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] spent quite awhile this afternoon indirectly individualizing one man, so that we could not escape the knowledge of who it is that is being talked about in this connection. He is a great leader. I do not approve of all that he has done. Some things I regret; but certainly he has a power that is indefinable; and it is the power of leadership. Give him credit for some things: A couple of years ago this man was not a candidate for the Presidency, but he went out into the anthracite coal mines in western Pennsylvania; got into a car; went away down into the bowels of the earth; watched those laboring men there at their work; investigated with reference to safety appliances by which they might escape in time of peril; what their wages were; what the ventilation was; what the surroundings were. He then came above the ground; went through the collieries; went over to the little shanties with the priest; talked with the women and their children as to their school facilities, their environment, thus showing intense human interest. This is the secret of his power—human interest—and you can not destroy it by amending the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the pending proposition to amend the Constitution, while superficially aimed at the effort to render an individual ineligible for reelection, is, in fact and in principle, aimed at the right of the American people to determine for themselves whom they will select as Chief Executive of the Republic. My objection to it is that it seeks to place a limitation, not upon the action of an Executive but upon the people themselves. If this proposed resolution were adopted, it would not in any manner limit, curtail, or even regulate by law the action of an Executive while he is Executive, but simply after he has served his term, good, bad, or indifferent as his service may have been, it lays its hands upon him and imposes the same consequence upon him, whether he has been a good and efficient public servant or an indifferent and inefficient public servant. The real limitation which this amendment would impose would be upon the people themselves.

Mr. President, free government, in its last analysis, is bound to be popular government, and every single effort to limit the people has failed thus far or is within the prophecy of failure in the present trend of the purpose of the American people.

Mr. NELSON. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question right there?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to his colleague?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. NELSON. Are not all constitutional provisions and restrictions in some form restrictions upon the direct power of the people to act, and is not that the purpose of a written constitution?

Mr. CLAPP. The question, Mr. President, is susceptible of a division. Incidental to the orderly administration of the policies of a free people there must of necessity be regulation; but the primary thought in the constitution of a free government is not a limitation upon the people, but a limitation upon the representatives of the people upon that concrete identity which finally develops as government. In the foundation of our Government our forefathers sought to place certain limitations upon the rights of the people themselves. One of those limitations was an effort to prevent the people from voting for President of the United States; but, Mr. President, no system of checks and balances ever devised could prevent a free people sooner or later from burning away the limitations and prevent their will from directly bearing upon the selection of as important an office as that of Chief Executive; and so, without changing one line in the written Constitution, to-day we vote practically as directly for President as though the presidential electors were eliminated from the face of the Constitution.

Again, they were afraid to let the people vote directly for United States Senators. Here, again, they ran counter to the fundamental spirit of the organic law of a free Government, which is to place limitations upon the Representatives and not upon the people. So the American people in different States, in different and varying degrees and by different methods, have moved along that line—along the line that is inevitable when you put in operation the forces of free government; that is that, in the last analysis, it shall be a Government by the people. So in different States, as I say, we have developed, according to different lines and in different degrees, the direct election by the people of their Representatives in this Chamber.

Mr. President, this proposed amendment to the Constitution proposes to reverse this whole system and to place a limitation upon the right of the American people to select their Chief Executive. It is urged that this should be done because a President is likely to use his office against the interests of the people to secure his renomination and reelection. Unless we are likely to get men who are so lost to every sense of duty that they will subordinate the public welfare to their individual interests, then it is idle to discuss even a suggestion of this limitation.

So the proposition to amend the Constitution and to put this limitation upon the people must be based upon the theory, altruistic and ethical as we may like to regard the situation, that there are men likely to get that office who need some kind of restraint placed upon them to prevent them from subordinating the public interest to their own welfare.

It is urged that they will use patronage for this purpose. I differ somewhat from my friend the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD]. I do not believe that the evil of patronage can be cured by law; but it can be cured in one way, and it is being cured in one way, and that is by the people gradually taking back to themselves the functions of government which they have allowed to be taken from them, and acquiring those functions of government which ought to have been placed in their hands in the beginning. In other words, the remedy for the patronage situation is to rob patronage of its power as a factor in politics; and we are very rapidly accomplishing that desired result.

The best remedy for an evil is that remedy which is found by allowing natural forces to move along natural lines, instead of trying to establish artificial restrictions and limitations. I do not think it is a far cry to say that the American people will never again witness a national convention where there will be any considerable number of the delegates in that convention who have come there by the caucus and convention system. The next national conventions of the parties which will exist four years from now will consist of delegates in an overwhelming majority who come there as the express choice of the people to carry out an expressed will of the people; in other words, to represent and serve the voters instead of arrogating to themselves the function of dictating to the voters; they will recognize that they are sent as the servants of the voters instead of assuming the rôle of masters.

We extend the system of presidential preference primaries just in proportion as we take by a natural process from the President the political power to control nominations through the use of patronage.

Mr. President, no one can exceed me in my deprecation of the lure of patronage. I am almost prepared to say that the man who would sell his vote for an office differs only from the man who would sell his vote for money in that he might be deterred in the former instance because of the fear of detection. The man who will purchase another's influence with patronage differs only from the man who would purchase it with his bank check in the fear of resulting detection. Instead of trying to put up an artificial regulation of patronage we are now engaged in regulating it by the most natural process, and that is by the people freeing themselves from the influence of patronage; and it has come to that point, I undertake to say, to-day that patronage has been changed from an asset to a liability, so far as trying to control conventions by it goes, in the hands of a presidential candidate. There may be some States left where this is not true; but in those States where the people have developed a means by which they can express their own choice for President the Federal officeholder is not only powerless but those who have not received the favor of Federal patronage are likely not only to resist the influence of the Federal office-holder but to treat with resentment his attempt to dictate to them. So I repeat that in those States where we have been able to put the power in the hands of the people themselves patronage has been transferred from the asset column to the column under the head of liabilities if its use is undertaken to control political conventions.

This is equally true with reference to Representatives and Senators. There is no egotism in the suggestion that Senators naturally are an important force in political activity, and in the years gone by they, too, have lived in the shadow of a fear of the withdrawal of patronage; but, Mr. President, instead of attempting an artificial method of weakening and curtailing this power, again we are curtailing it along natural lines.

It happened to be my privilege to be the first man, so far as the public records show, who ever advocated on the floor of this Chamber the direct election of United States Senators from the standpoint of the benefit to the Senator himself. Scores of speeches had been made to the effect that the people have a right to elect their Senators. In my humble way it occurred to me that even a United States Senator had some rights, and that among those rights was the right to be elected by the people and to be free from the domination of political machinery and ordinary political methods, and just in proportion as we have in the various States given the people a more direct participation in the election of Senators we have relieved the Senators from any fear of patronage in the hands of an Executive.

I do not want to bring up any soul-harrowing pictures and reflections, but I want to remind the Senate that during the last three years those Senators who have been deprived of patronage and who owe their seats here more directly to the voice of the people expressed in various ways, have prospered quite as well in retaining their seats as those who have basked in the sunshine of presidential patronage favors. Just in proportion, then, I say, as we put the power in the hands of the people to nominate the President or to nominate Senators, we leave patronage where it is, except that we have taken the fangs and the teeth from patronage. It does seem to me that it is much better to deal with the patronage evil in this natural and logical way than to attempt to deal with it by artificial means.

But, Mr. President, it is said that, aside from patronage, a President is apt to use his office for the advancement of things that will appeal to the popular will and to the detriment of the public. It strikes me that that is a reductio ad absurdum.

To say that the President is likely to work injury to the best interests of the public, in doing those things which will receive the approval of the public, is equivalent to saying that the public is so lacking in ordinary intelligence as to approve policies injurious to itself, and is a reflection upon the public which I, for one, would not want to indorse.

I do not believe it is possible, developed as the American people are to-day, for any man to pursue a course that appeals to popular favor, and that course be one of hostility to the interests of the general public.

But assuming that we had a President who was willing to subordinate the interests of the public to his own personal aggrandizement, there are two ways of dealing with temptation: One is to draw the temptation, if you can, and the other is to strengthen one temptation by destroying a lesser temptation. If it is true that a man in the White House is so lost to the welfare of the public that he will sacrifice that welfare along any line, then we face the alternative that he may sacrifice that welfare in appealing to the favor of the public or, with that door closed upon him, he will sacrifice along a line far more disastrous to the American people.

I am not here this afternoon to dwell at any length upon conditions as they exist in this country, but the man is blind, indeed, who does not realize that there is that impersonal spirit, the same spirit which, as in the centuries gone, resists the effort of man to better his condition, that same spirit which has ever sacrificed the rights of the great rank and file of humanity in the interest of the few. In the field of its activities that spirit has been transferred from the battle field to the field of American industry and commercial activity, but the man is blind who does not recognize its presence here and recognize the fact that upon this new field of activity it will battle as strongly to retain its power and influence as it did through the centuries gone. That force which, during the centuries, so slowly and so sullenly retreated before the advance of human progress will never without a struggle yield the fair field of exploiting American industrial life and American commercial life.

We stand to-day approaching the threshold of that struggle. There are those who would have us believe we are in the struggle. I, however, believe we are but approaching the threshold of that struggle, and in the years to come the effort will be not to protect a President from the people but to protect him from this influence; and the moment you close the door upon a man, the moment you say to him, "You can no longer appeal to the verdict of the people whom you have served," then, instead of taking away that temptation—if it is a temptation—we strengthen it against that man, for it is the only temptation that is left, and that is one of the vices of this proposed amendment.

If it is true we are going to have men who would sacrifice and subordinate the public interest to their own welfare, then I say it is a thousand times safer to leave them to exploit it in the greater field of political activity, where they have to meet the judgment and decision of the people; it is better than to close upon them the door to that verdict and force them back along the only avenue where they can subordinate the public interest to their own, and that is in the interest of the service of the spirit of which I have spoken, with no prospect of an appeal, with no hope of an appeal, and no restraining power of a possible verdict.

The longer and the more a man studies this question the more it seems to me it is absolutely at variance with every principle of free government. Instead of leaving open the avenue to popular approval, instead of trusting the people—and if we can not trust them then sooner or later free institutions must perish—it is proposed to take away from the people the exercise of their judgment by a limitation upon their right to approve or condemn—the exercise of their judgment as to who shall be President—and if perchance a man is elected who needs a limitation, to force that man along an avenue of betrayal which he would gladly exchange for popular approval and a verdict of the people if that avenue were left open to him.

Something has been said during this discussion of our duty to vote for this joint resolution. There are, under our form of government, three ways in which the Constitution can be amended. One is by the courts. That is the most convenient way, because it is the most elastic—by the declaration of a court that a certain authority is not in the Constitution. If later that does not appeal to the court, it can turn around and put it into the Constitution. I am not quite in favor of that method of amending the Constitution. There are two other methods that are open, within the Constitution itself. One is that whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary Congress may propose amendments. The other is that whenever two-thirds of the States shall ask for a constitutional convention it shall be the duty of Congress to call it.

Now, in the latter case I hold that when two-thirds of the States have asked for a constitutional convention it is the duty of Congress to accede to that request, just as much as it is the duty of the cashier of the Senate to pay a bill for something which the Senate has ordered, whether the wisdom of that purchase appeals to the cashier or not. That is one avenue that was provided by which the people could secure an amendment to the Constitution—through a constitutional convention—without appealing to the judgment of either House of Congress upon that subject.

I, for one, would favor a method by which the people might more readily, upon their own initiative, amend the Constitution, and wish it were possible to pass the joint resolution offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] for that purpose. But as the Constitution stands now, there are but two methods, one by which the people can act independent of Congress and the other leaving it to Congress to initiate a proposition to amend the Constitution; and when it comes to Congress acting upon the latter course, initiating the question, then it is for Congress to decide whether in its judgment it will initiate the proposed amendment or not.

So I say I do not regard that phase of the argument made in support of the resolution as important in this connection. The people have not taken up the subject along the line where they can have it without our judgment. The proposition is initiated here; it has its origin here; and consequently it is for us to say whether or not we will thus initiate this proposed amendment.

That is about all I care to say on this subject. I believe we are rapidly taking the fangs out of patronage. I believe that to close one lesser temptation to a man who will yield to temptation is to drive him into the avenue wherein lies the larger temptation and the greater danger to the American people.

But, Mr. President, everything can be resolved to a fundamental. Under our system of government, even under the proposed amendment, it is proposed that the American people are competent to vote for a man who never has been President. Then, it is proposed that after a man has been tried the American people, who could be trusted to vote for him before he was tried, are no longer safely to be trusted with the question whether he shall continue. It does seem to me that if ever a proposition was reduced to a simple plain reductio ad absurdum it is to say that the American people can be trusted to vote for a man for President before he has been tried and that the man can be trusted to hold the office before he has been tried, but that after he has been tried neither he can be trusted for another term nor can the American people be trusted to exercise their judgment in reference to his reelection, and that is what the proposed resolution means; and believing in the capacity of the people to choose for themselves, I can not support the resolution.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution go over until next session and be taken up as the unfinished business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not hear the request of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may go over until the next session of Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Being of opinion that this resolution is more important immediately than it will be later, I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The joint resolution is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. BACON. I have an amendment I desire to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think I have the floor. I have not yielded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair apologizes. The Chair thought the Senator from Washington had yielded the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was just going to say that before a vote is taken upon the joint resolution I propose to make some remarks upon it, but I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] desires to address the Senate probably at some length and I do not care to begin to speak upon this proposition at a time that would interfere with his address. I simply desire to make that announcement.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania advised me that he did not expect to ask the attention of the Senate upon his privileged matter until after 4 o'clock.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have just entered the Chamber. I will say that a number of Senators and others who have made inquiries of me have received the answer from me that after 4 o'clock I intended to address the Senate. Is there anything before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is in the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and the question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have offered a substitute. I take it for granted, from my limited knowledge of parliamentary law, that it is in order first to perfect the original proposition, and therefore the amendment of the Senator from Georgia will take precedence of mine. That is correct, is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is. The Senator's amendment is a substitute for the House text?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; a substitute for the joint resolution reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question would first be upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia, perfecting the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 6, in the committee amendment, strike out "six" and insert "four," so as to read:

The term of office of President shall be four years.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I did not expect or desire to speak upon this question at the present time. I am quite sure, however, that the time has not arrived when the Senate should vote upon the joint resolution or any amendment or any substitute for it, and under those conditions we are confronted with the alternative of voting or discussing it.

I am opposed to the joint resolution, to the amendment to the joint resolution, and to the substitute for the joint resolution. I am opposed to action upon the joint resolution. We are confronted with a specific duty. It has not as yet been clearly presented. The discussion has proceeded from the standpoint that we were to elect between equally meritorious propositions relative to the government. That is not the situation. Article V of the Constitution says:

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution.

The question of necessity is the first consideration; not whether we might do it, not whether as between the two propositions we would select one as against the other, but the question is, Is it necessary to amend the Constitution? That is an affirmative proposition; and the necessity must be established not by criticism of existing conditions, not by criticism of the administration of those who have held this high office, but upon the rule of necessity for a change in the Constitution in this respect.

No testimony has been brought to the attention of the Senate to sustain the claim of necessity; no argument has been made to sustain the question of necessity, and that is the only question before the Senate.

Upon what ground can it be claimed that it is necessary at this time to amend the Constitution of the United States in its provisions providing for the election of a President of the United States? What facts have been stated or brought to the attention of the Senate upon which it can be claimed that a necessity exists? Necessity implies an affirmative proposition. What has occurred in the history of this country that renders it in this hour or at this time necessary to provide for a different tenure for the office of President of the United States? The argument has proceeded along the line that some Senators have not agreed with the action of those who have held this position or that they are apprehensive that some who may hold it in the future will create a necessity. No necessity can exist arising out of the future. A necessity can only exist arising out of the present. Even a bad past does not necessarily establish a necessity for a change, because the men who in the past have acted contrary to what some may conceive to be the rule of wisdom, the presumption is that the man of the present will act in conformity with the principles and the dictates of his duty. In order that we should change the Constitution of the United States there must exist specific, well-defined reasons based upon existing conditions, not upon threats, not upon conjecture as to whether or not some man in the future may create a necessity. So that I desire to premise my remarks upon this question by calling attention to the real question for consideration. Would the people diminish the term of the present Executive? Some would, perhaps. Has the present Executive been guilty of any act that would justify the shortening of his term? If he has there is already a provision in the Constitution under which he may be dealt with.

The desire to do a thing is not proof of the wisdom of doing it. A majority of the people of the United States have selected the present Executive for a term of office that does not expire until the 4th day of next March. That is the existing verdict of the American people, and no man can base the claim of necessity upon any charge against that officer unless he chooses to put behind it the responsibility of official action looking to impeachment. As to those who are candidates for office, nothing has yet transpired that would seem to make it necessary to anticipate a shortening of their term. It may be that some Senators have it in mind that in the event certain candidates are elected the term should be six years, and that in the event certain other candidates are elected it should be six months. [Laughter.] But that does not come within the reason given, as stated in the fifth article of the Constitution, which is "necessity." With me, Mr. President, every presumption is against every proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States. This article now under consideration represents the sustained wisdom of more than 120 years in contemplation of legal interpretation; the people have passed upon it during every one of those years; they have passed upon it during every day that the Congress of the United States has been in session and has not acted; during every day, whether Congress has or has not been in session, when the legislatures of the States might have raised this question and demanded its solution. I say it represents the wisdom of all the years that have elapsed since the making of the Constitution, and it will require something more than innuendo, something more than suggestion, something more than a weighing in the balance to determine the evenness of the scales to induce me to vote for a change of a principle of our Government upon so short notice. Mr. President, for nearly 10 years we had no President of the United States.

The United States of America by title existed for nearly 10 years without a President or a provision for the election of a President. That title originated in the Articles of Confederation. It was invented, if I may use that term, by those who made the Articles of Confederation. We should not forget that the Articles of Confederation were proposed before the Declaration of Independence. Seven days before the Declaration of Independence it was proposed in the Congress that Articles of Confederation should be agreed upon and the Declaration of Independence owes something to that fact for the support it received. The Declaration of Independence was preliminary to the adoption of the Articles of Confederation, because those articles created the Government of the United States, not the Government as it now exists or as it has existed under the Constitution, but when the Members of Congress took up for consideration and final action the question whether or not we should form a united government it was apparent to them that we should first sever our connection with the English Government, and it was one of the inducements, that we must get rid of an acknowledged status before we took upon ourselves the responsibility of making a new government. The Declaration of Independence did not create a government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator from Idaho contend that, chronologically, the Declaration of Independence antedated the formation of the Continental Government in the United States between the Colonies?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I did not use language that could be construed as the Senator from Mississippi has expressed it. Did I think it necessary to enter into specific details, I would have no difficulty in giving the exact dates and proceedings representing the beginning of the adoption of the Articles of Confederation and the proceedings which led up to the Declaration of Independence. They were going on at the same time, in the same Congress, by the same men. If my recollection serves me, the first proposition for the adoption of the Articles of Confederation—in fact, the first draft of those articles—was about the middle of June preceding the 4th of July, 1776. There is no difficulty in ascertaining the facts. I think, if we will turn to our Manual—it should be in there—we will find the facts. I do not intend to make any irresponsible statement. I find in our Manual, on the desk of every Senator, the following:

> While the Declaration of Independence was under consideration in the Continental Congress, and before it was finally agreed upon, measures were taken for the establishment of a constitutional form of government, and on the 11th of June, 1776, it was resolved that a committee be appointed to prepare and digest the form of a confederation to be entered into between these Colonies.

That language is quoted from the proceedings of the Continental Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Go ahead. Read what you wish to read.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I will yield to the Senator if he desires to interrupt me at this point.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would rather the Senator would finish whatever he was quoting.

Mr. HEYBURN. I had not stated when they reported. I can give the Senator that information without any difficulty.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well. Then what the Senator has already quoted proves that these particular Articles of Confederation to which he has been referring antedated the Declaration of Independence. But it must be remembered that, in addition to that, the Colonies in British North America had been operating under an agreement antedating even that by over two years.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I was speaking of these historical facts merely for the purpose of laying a foundation and not for the purpose of delivering an historic lecture. I was seeking to lay the foundation for the consideration of the relations that existed between the Confederacy and the constitutional Government, one of which provided for a President and the other of which did not. That was the purpose I had in view. But I desire to leave nothing in confusion.

A committee was appointed on the next day, June 12, pursuant to the resolution that I have read, and it consisted of a member from each Colony, namely, Mr. Bartlett, Mr. S. Adams, Mr. Hopkins, Mr. Sherman, Mr. R. R. Livingston, Mr. Dickinson, Mr. McKean, Mr. Stone, Mr. Nelson, Mr. Hewes, Mr. E. Rutledge, and Mr. Gwinnett. That is the committee to whom was intrusted the duty of making the Confederation, which was this Government for nearly 10 years. Those articles are worthy of some consideration. Article I of the Confederation reads—now bear this in mind; it is not only interesting, but it is important—

> The style of this confederacy shall be "The United States of America."

There is the beginning of the Government of to-day. It rested the power of the execution of the laws in the States. It limited the power to make laws within strictly Federal lines. But it was the Government under which we reorganized ourselves and under which we took birth and life and sustained it for nearly 10 years.

Those Articles of Confederation were submitted to the Colonies under their new name of States. Nearly two years elapsed before they were ratified. In that age, when men could not communicate with each other by telegraph or reach each other upon railroad trains, the time was not unreasonable.

Now, Mr. President, when the Constitutional Convention met one of the first necessities that confronted it was the making of a provision for the execution of the laws. That was the point wherein the Confederacy was weak and most wanting. They had no definite department of the Government with power to execute the will of Congress. They had to rely upon the uncertain execution of laws by States and by a committee which they authorized, which committee had a president whose term was limited to one year.

We must consider the conditions that exist at the time of the organization of a government in order fairly to estimate the intention of those who organize it. We can not intelligently know the purpose of those who organized the Government unless we are familiar with the conditions that confronted them.

Two great difficulties had arisen under the Confederacy; first, the impossibility of administering and executing the laws under uniform rules and conditions; second, the exercise of sovereignty by the States, which was guaranteed to them by the Articles of Confederation, in which they claimed and exercised the right to make treaties one with another.

It was because of those difficulties that the Constitutional Convention met. It was not called nor did it meet for the purpose of changing the form of the Government. It was not contemplated when that Constitutional Convention met that they would make a new Constitution. The purpose for which they were called together was that of so amending the existing organic law as to avoid the difficulties that had arisen under it. The situation developed after the delegates came together. They lived in widely separated parts of the country, and many of them had never communicated with any other member of that convention. They came to the city of Philadelphia by the crude means of travel then existing, and they met as strangers with the exception of a very few of them who had served together in the Continental Congress.

It will be observed that the distinguished gentleman of whom the Senator from Mississippi spoke to-day was not a member of the committee or of the Congress that laid the foundation for the Confederacy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What was that?

Mr. HEYBURN. I say it will be observed that the name of the distinguished gentleman who was afterwards the distinguished President, Mr. Jefferson, did not participate in the making of the Confederacy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The encyclopedic misinformation of the Senator from Idaho demands no particular criticism.

Mr. HEYBURN. I can not hear the remark of the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Idaho means by that that upon the particular occasion to which he referred Mr.

Jefferson was not a Member of the Continental Congress, the Senator from Idaho is perfectly accurate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not go so far. I said he did not participate in the making of the Articles of Confederation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He was not even a Member of the Continental Congress at that time. He had accepted the position of minister plenipotentiary to the Court of France. But prior to that time there had been organized upon the American continent a practical working government, and one of the men who served in the Continental Congress when that was done was Mr. Jefferson. That antedated the period to which the Senator from Idaho is now referring. The Senator from Idaho seems to forget that the United Colonies of America preceded the United States of America, and that the territory and the people of America, which constituted later on the United States of America, had previous to that time constituted a government under the appellation of the United Colonies of America.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait one moment. Now, if the Senator means that Thomas Jefferson had nothing to do with the formation of the present Government under the present Constitution of the United States or with the resolution to which he refers as immediately preceding the calling of the Continental Congress at Annapolis, the Senator is right. But if the formation of the Government of the United States be put where the formation of the Government of the United States began—in the formation of the Government of the United Colonies of America—if it be carried still further back to the meeting of the members of the Virginia Assembly in the Apollo room at the tavern at Williamsburg and the committees of correspondence between Virginia and Massachusetts, which really did form the actual working Government of the United Colonies in the interim between throwing off kingly authority and establishing an independent authority, there can be no man in America so ignorant as to contend that Thomas Jefferson had nothing to do with it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I will——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait one moment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I must call the Senator's attention to the fact that he is proceeding on an erroneous assumption.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not ask to interrupt the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I can not stand that. The Senator can not treat me in that manner.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not ask to interrupt the Senator from Idaho. The Senator from Idaho, as Zeb Vance said once, personated me and asked me to respond to a question, and I am now responding.

Mr. HEYBURN. I insist now on saying what I have undertaken to say. The Senator is speaking from an entire misunderstanding of what I set out to say. I know not willfully, but he is assuming that I took a position which I did not, and he is basing an argument upon a wrong assumption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho is entitled to the floor, and he will proceed.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will yield now to the Senator, but with the warning to him that he is speaking upon a fictitious premise.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I have misunderstood the Senator from Idaho, of course what I have said can not be relevant as a reply to anything that he has said. But if I did understand him—the RECORD will show, if unrevised, whether I did or not——

Mr. HEYBURN. Just a moment. Why does the Senator say unrevised? Why does the Senator use the term "unrevised"?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Mississippi did not use it in any personal, obnoxious, or hostile manner, but he merely meant that, in his opinion, if what the Senator from Idaho had said appeared in the RECORD, then what the Senator from Mississippi had said would appear as a relevant reply to it. If owing to any defect of hearing or memory the Senator from Mississippi has been mistaken, it will appear that the Senator from Idaho is justified by what has occurred.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, there is no reason on earth why the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Idaho should have any difference about this question. He has no higher opinion of Mr. Jefferson than that I entertain as to his intelligence, his integrity, and his patriotism.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will pardon me one moment further. Perhaps I have got two things mixed up. My mind frequently includes the things that I knew beforehand with the things that I have recently heard, and sometimes that leads to some degree of confusion. But if I did not misunderstand the Senator from Idaho on a previous occasion in the Senate, he denied that Thomas Jefferson was either the author of the Declaration of Independence or had anything to do with the founding of the American Government.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator misunderstood me. I am rather surprised that he would make that statement. I spoke to a specific question which was then before the Senate, and I said that Thomas Jefferson did not write the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. I have only to refer to the original document on file in the archives of the Government to substantiate that statement. But it does not follow that because he did not write that document I have not that high regard for him and for his ability and intelligence and integrity to which he is entitled. I was speaking of a fact.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me—and I recognize that I have interrupted him too much——

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I do not mind the interruption.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And I recognize that I have no excuse for it except an undying allegiance to historical fact. I have no other excuse at all. I have just said that upon a previous occasion the Senator from Idaho denied that Thomas Jefferson was the author of the Declaration of Independence, and also denied that he had anything to do with the foundation of the American Government.

Mr. HEYBURN. The first part of that statement is correct and well founded, and the second part is not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Exactly as it appears in the RECORD is that the Senator from Idaho denied that Thomas Jefferson was one of the founders of the American Government.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not think we are discussing founders now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let it go at that—one of the founders of the American Government. Not as a matter of disputation between the Senator from Idaho and me, because that amounts to nothing, but in the interest of historical truth, there was a committee appointed to draft a Declaration of Independence. It was thought that their independence and the declaration of it should appear in appropriate words. A committee was appointed. The first man upon the line of the committee was Thomas Jefferson, of Virginia.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is history.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Who became by that fact the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is history.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is history, too. When the committee met the committee unanimously agreed that Thomas Jefferson should draft the declaration.

Mr. HEYBURN. Should formulate the ideas that the committee entertained.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Never mind about that, but that——

Mr. HEYBURN. But I do mind.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But that he should draft this Declaration. Of course the Declaration was to be the formulation of the opinions of the committee, like any report from a committee must be the formulation of the report of the opinions of the members of the committee. Thomas Jefferson was appointed for that purpose.

John Adams later on said that there was a subcommittee appointed of which Thomas Jefferson, he himself, and Benjamin Franklin were members. There seems to be a difference of recollection between him and Mr. Jefferson on one side and between him and Benjamin Franklin on one side as regards that. Jefferson says that no subcommittee was appointed at all, but that the committee insisted upon his drafting the resolution. Mr. Adams says that Mr. Jefferson said to him, "You draw it," and Mr. Jefferson confesses that that was true; he did suggest that Mr. Adams draw the Declaration. Mr. Adams said, "No; you do it," and he gave several reasons for it.

Mr. HEYBURN. What did Benjamin Franklin say?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait a minute; I will come to that after a while if the Senator will let me alone. Benjamin Franklin had very little to do with it one way or the other. John Adams said, "You draw it." Jefferson said, in substance, "Why?" He said, "In the first place, because you are from Virginia." That seemed to be the main reason. Then he added, "In the second place, because you are very facile with the pen and I am not." Whereupon Jefferson said, in substance—I am not quoting the exact language of these men, but you will find it in both of their writings—"Very well, I will undertake it," and he undertook it.

Now, then, the first difference of recollection between Franklin and Adams and Jefferson presents itself after that time, and not before it. Franklin agrees with Jefferson that there was no subcommittee. Jefferson says that Franklin got the idea that there was a subcommittee by his own subsequent action. He said that after he had drafted the Declaration, regarding John Adams, of Massachusetts, and Benjamin Franklin, of Pennsylvania, as the most important members of the committee, he concluded he would submit it to them before he reported it to the full committee. He submitted it to Mr. Adams; and there will be found in Mr. Adams's handwriting the only change that he suggested, which, with Mr. Jefferson's usual disposition to take things by the smooth handle, he adopted.

There were three suggestions made by Benjamin Franklin, and they appear in his handwriting in the original manuscript of the Declaration of Independence. Mr. Jefferson accepted them, and then it was submitted to the full committee. By the way, before I go to that I will say that neither of Benjamin Franklin's suggestions were anything except an amendment of phraseology—nothing else. In one case he seems to have thought that Mr. Jefferson's language was too rhetorical, and he pruned it down to the common-sense expression of English, for which Benjamin Franklin stands peculiarly an exemplar; but in none of the cases was there the slightest change of meaning, not the slightest.

It was then submitted to the full committee, adopted—with the suggestion of Adams and with the suggestions of Franklin—by the committee, and reported to the Continental Congress. It was then adopted by the Continental Congress with no essential exception except that South Carolina and Georgia, wanting more slaves, and Massachusetts and Connecticut wanting to sell them more slaves, insisted that those parts of the Declaration which arraigned George III for having prevented the freedom of slaves in America should be stricken out and that those parts of the Declaration which arraigned George III for perpetuating the slave trade and the importation of slaves should be stricken out.

There is not a line or a word in the Declaration of Independence of any other authorship, except amendments of phraseology, that did not flow from Thomas Jefferson; and the Declaration as offered by him is his, except for the omissions—not any commissions—in connection with it.

One other word, and then I shall cease to interrupt the Senator from Idaho. When you come to what formed the foundation of the Government you are not restricted by an inquiry into form, but you go back to substantiality—not phenomena, but substance. In substance the Government of the United States was formed when the committees of correspondence prevailed upon Virginia, upon Massachusetts, and the other colonies later on to elect delegates to a Continental Congress. The Government of the United States, the territory forming the United States, the population forming the United States, did not begin with the adoption of the present Constitution at all; it began not even with the Declaration of Independence; it antedated that, and, for a time, between the toppling over of the old system and the inauguration of the new system, the real Government of America was constituted of the committees of correspondence, revolutionary committees of safety and of correspondence in the several colonies, taking counsel of one another, raising troops, and raising revenue by voluntary subscriptions, and no man figured more in that than did Thomas Jefferson. He was the author of the Summary Statement of the Rights of British North America.

Mr. HEYBURN. I want to suggest to the Senator that it might well be claimed that the foundation of the Government of the United States was upon the battle field, with George Washington at the head of the Army. I would not have spent three minutes in discussing the relation of Thomas Jefferson to the making of the Declaration of Independence, except that the Senator has given us an accurate and very nice picture of it; but it has nothing to do with the question I was discussing. I referred incidentally to the relation between the dates of laying the foundation for the civil government and the Declaration of Independence, and the relation that one bore to the other.

I regret, however, inasmuch as I shall yield the floor inside of the next four minutes for other business, that I have not time to meet the suggestions of the Senator, not in any spirit of antagonism, but in a spirit of harmony. My mind has been attuned by his remarks to a consideration of those very interesting times; but I must forego that pleasure and that duty—it would be a duty—because we have agreed in three minutes now to take up another matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, within those three minutes will the Senator permit me to express my regret——

Mr. HEYBURN. Would it not occur to the Senator that I might be entitled to a portion of those three minutes after his very extended discussion? [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, not the portion of it that I would require to express my regret that I have prevented the Senate from receiving any degree of information or enlightenment from any remarks that might have been made by the Senator from Idaho. If my interruption has prevented the Senate from gaining, or if it has foreclosed the possibility of the Senate being pleased and informed by the Senator from Idaho, I now express my full regret. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEYBURN. There are other matters due to come before the Senate at this time, and so, without concluding my remarks, I will yield the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I will ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Culberson	Massey	Smith, Ariz.
Bacon	Cullom	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Cummins	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Borah	Curtis	Newlands	Smith, S.C.
Bradley	Dillingham	O'Gorman	Smoot
Brandegee	Fall	Oliver	Stone
Briggs	Fletcher	Overman	Swanson
Bristow	Gallinger	Page	Thornton
Bryan	Heyburn	Penrose	Tillman
Burnham	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Townsend
Catron	Jones	Poindexter	Warren
Chamberlain	La Follette	Pomerene	Wetmore
Chilton	Lippitt	Reed	Williams
Clapp	McCumber	Root	Works
Clarke, Ark.	McLean	Sanders
Crane	Martin, Va.	Shively
Crawford	Martine, N. J.	Simmons

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege. Certain letters from John D. Archbold, addressed to me, have recently been published, and an effort has been made to establish a connection between the work of the Industrial Commission, of which I was a member, and an alleged letter purporting to inclose $25,000 from John D. Archbold. These stories have been circulated in Hearst's Magazine, a sensational periodical; in the Munsey daily papers, which are Roosevelt organs; and more particularly in the North American, in Philadelphia, and the Leader, in Pittsburgh, yellow journals, the chief organs of the Flinn-Van Valkenburg-Roosevelt combine in Pennsylvania.

These letters have been in the possession of the periodical referred to about five years, since the theft of the Archbold correspondence occurred, but apparently there has been no occasion for their publication until prompted by present political exigencies. Their publication now, with the malignant insinuations accompanying them, is in the nature of political blackmail, the purpose of which is to punish, coerce, or intimidate me because of my political course.

The statement that there is any connection between the Industrial Commission and a certain check from John D. Archbold is false, malicious, and without justification.

I was one of the senatorial members of the Industrial Commission, but the work of the commission, as is well known, was performed largely by the noncongressional members of the commission. As the sessions of the commission were continuous over a considerable period it turned out to be impossible for me at least to attend very many of the prolonged sessions. I do not believe that I was able to attend more than one or two meetings during the whole life of the commission. I certainly never participated in their deliberations or conclusions, neither did I in any way try to influence the same. The commission was engaged in a general line of investigation into industrial conditions, and in no case did anyone refuse to appear before the commission or object to appearing. The only question raised as to the appearance of witnesses where all witnesses were entirely willing to appear might have been the question of arranging the dates of appearance in individual cases to suit individual convenience or engagement, a question not unusual in protracted hearings of this character. Upon the death of Senator Kyle, the president of the commission, my name was mentioned by a large number of persons to succeed him as president, I being the ranking senatorial member and representing a great industrial State. Realizing, however, that I had not been able to attend the sessions of the commission regularly or keep up with the work, I declined to be considered for the place and the commission, as is well known, elected Mr. Clarke. The hearings of the commission were open, and there was no secrecy about their proceedings. There was no occasion to furnish anyone with any particular information, as it was open and accessible to the general public.

I now come more particularly to the letter alleged to have been written to me by John D. Archbold, inclosing a certificate of deposit in my favor for $25,000, written under date of October 13, 1904. I have reason to believe that this letter is a forgery, and I challenge its production; but it is true, and at the time it was well known, that during the presidential campaign of 1904 I did receive such a contribution from Mr. Archbold for the campaign in Pennsylvania. The contribution was part of a much larger one, which I will now explain.

I was at the time the chairman of the Republican State committee of Pennsylvania and a member of the Republican national committee representing that State. I was at the Republican headquarters in Philadelphia in full and sole charge of the State campaign, and, as a member of the national committee, I was every week in New York in close touch with many of the phases of the national campaign.

Mr. John D. Archbold had several interviews with Cornelius N. Bliss, treasurer of the Republican national committee, and with me, relative to financial assistance in the presidential campaign of 1904. Finally, after some discussion, we came to an understanding by which Mr. Archbold made a contribution of $125,000, of which $100,000 was to go to Mr. Bliss as treasurer of the Republican national committee for the national presidential campaign outside of Pennsylvania and $25,000 was to be contributed to me as State chairman for the campaign in Pennsylvania. Mr. Archbold received the receipt of Mr. Cornelius Bliss as treasurer of the Republican national committee and for the Republican national committee for the amount of $100,000. The contribution of $25,000 so received by me as chairman of the Republican State committee of Pennsylvania was expended in the presidential campaign in that State.

While the result of the election of 1904 was a splendid victory for the Republican candidate it must not be forgotten that there were times during the campaign when apprehension existed among the Republican managers and when it was felt that it was necessary to wage the contest with all possible vigor. The vigorous and effective efforts then made largely contributed to the final result. Not long after the contribution of $100,000 to Mr. Bliss for the Republican national committee, Mr. Bliss, on behalf of the committee, called again to see Mr. Archbold and asked for a further contribution of $150,000. He represented to Mr. Archbold and a large number of his associates, known as the group which was chiefly interested in the Standard Oil Co., that Mr. Roosevelt had been advised of the original contribution, and also that the chairman of the Republican national committee, Mr. Cortelyou, had been similarly advised, and that the original contribution, $100,000, was greatly appreciated by them both, but that the need of further financial assistance was badly felt at headquarters and that such further assistance would be still more keenly appreciated by both of the gentlemen referred to. The demand was urgent, insistent, I may say imperative, and purported to come directly from Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Cortelyou. I knew personally at the time, as I was in more or less touch with the situation, that Mr. Archbold wanted to make this further contribution and felt that it was presented to him in such an imperative manner, a way that made him desire to make it, but he was overruled by his associates, who felt that sufficient had been done, and a further contribution was not made.

It should be explained that the Pennsylvania Republican State committee seldom receives any financial assistance from the Republican national committee, such as is extended to other States.

On the contrary, treasurers are appointed by the chairman of the Republican national committee in Philadelphia and in Pittsburgh, and large sums are collected in a presidential year, and this money so collected in Pennsylvania is sent direct to the Republican national committee in New York for use in other States outside of Pennsylvania. Thus the resources of the Pennsylvania State committee are frequently impoverished in presidential years. In the campaign of 1904 no contribution was made to the Pennsylvania Republican State committee by the Republican national committee, and hence the special arrangement for the Pennsylvania Republican State committee in this instance, and the transaction was part of the general plan of financial aid extended for the presidential campaign. The fact that the contribution of $25,000 for Pennsylvania made a contribution of $125,000 from Mr. Archbold and his associates to the presidential campaign was one reason given for the refusal of Mr. Archbold and his associates to comply with the additional requisition of Mr. Bliss for another $150,000.

The State ticket in Pennsylvania was not in danger in the fall of 1904, and the campaign was waged entirely to poll as large a vote as possible for electors for the presidential and vice presidential candidates and to elect to Congress as large a number of Republicans from the State as possible. The result was a majority of over 500,000 in Pennsylvania for Mr. Roosevelt for President, and a delegation which was all Republican with the exception of one congressional district. Immediately after the election I received a letter from Mr. Roosevelt, expressing his warm and heartfelt thanks for the result in Pennsylvania.

Senator Quay had recently died; the burdens of the Republican organization in Pennsylvania had apparently devolved upon me. I was a good deal younger then than I am now and quite enthusiastic. The State chairmanship had been forced upon me the year previous as the result of political conditions in Pennsylvania. I did not think it likely that I should ever be compelled to take the office again and I knew I certainly would not seek it, and I was anxious on my own account in the new field opened before me to make as good a record as possible. I was therefore highly gratified by the result in the State, which broke all previous records for majorities not only in Pennsylvania but in any other State in the Union.

The malicious efforts made to misrepresent a transaction which at the time was entirely legal and proper is only part of the systematic efforts of the Flinn-Van Valkenburg combination in Pennsylvania to break me down and deceive the people through the unscrupulous methods of yellow journalism.

Mr. William Flinn, of this unsavory combination, which until recently Mr. Roosevelt would have been quick to denounce and repudiate, has made a fortune out of crooked municipal contracts and the corrupt control of municipal councils and State legislatures. Mr. E. A. Van Valkenburg, editor of the North American in Philadelphia, was arrested and indicted for bribery in my first senatorial contest in 1896 and only escaped conviction through the leniency of Senator Quay and upon the payment of about $10,000 for costs for lawyers, detectives, and for other expenses of prosecution, which amount was paid by his attorney the day before the trial was set to take place in Pottsville, the county seat of Schuylkill County.

Upon the death of Senator Quay in 1904 Mr. Flinn became a candidate to succeed him in the United States Senate. In Philadelphia during a discussion of the successorship to Senator Quay Mr. Flinn offered to Israel W. Durham, a Republican leader in Philadelphia, and to me, $1,000,000, or even $2,000,000, to favor his ambition, and the offer was known to others at the time. The offer was declined, and we refused to support his candidacy.

The governor of Pennsylvania, Hon. Samuel W. Pennypacker, desiring to uphold the honor and dignity of the State, appointed the Hon. Philander C. Knox to succeed Mr. Quay. Mr. Knox was subsequently elected by the legislature for the full term. His appointment and election and resignation from the Cabinet occurred with the full knowledge and acquiescence of Mr. Roosevelt. Mr. Flinn still desires to go to the United States Senate. His friends openly avow his ambition, and his activity for Mr. Roosevelt and the reforms to which he has recently become a convert from his unrepentant days are prompted by this desire.

The effrontery, hypocrisy, and mendacity of the Van Valkenburg-Flinn combination are disclosed by the following correspondence between John D. Archbold and William Flinn. I call attention to the following telegram sent to J. D. Archbold by William Flinn, the Roosevelt leader in Pennsylvania:

PITTSBURGH, PA., June 7, 1904.

I tried to talk to you over the phone last night, but could not hear you. I am making an effort to go to the United States Senate as M. S. Quay's successor. As it now stands the appointment will go to Allegheny County, and I expect to get it. The Republican organization of Allegheny County are desirous of my appointment and are working in. Also the Republican organization of the surrounding counties. The decision of the question is up to Senator BOIES PENROSE, State chairman, and Israel W. Durham. The efforts of a few of my influential friends put forth at once with PENROSE and Durham will settle the question. If you will use your influence with them in my behalf I will greatly appreciate it. The decision will probably be reached Wednesday. Can you help me?

WILLIAM FLINN.

Under the same date the following reply was sent in cipher to William Flinn from John D. Archbold:

NEW YORK, June 7, 1904.

Telegram received. Sorry that the posy did not shout friskiness. I expect to jail pop sharply parsed fanning, and until flagon prefix it is lamented for me to have flood hatred reship.

[Laughter.]

Which being translated reads as follows:

Telegram received. Sorry that the phone did not work better. I expect to have talk with Senator PENROSE, and until after that it is impossible for me to have any definite view.

JOHN D. ARCHBOLD.

[Laughter.]

This is addressed to William Flinn, a noted reformer in Pennsylvania.

Thus it is discovered that while the Flinn yellow journals in Pennsylvania are expressing their abhorrence of what they denounce as a malodorous transaction on my part, within a few months of the date of the alleged letter from John D. Archbold to me, Mr. William Flinn was asking the aid of the same John D. Archbold to secure his appointment and election to the United States Senate and conducting an active correspondence with him under a cipher code.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, while the Senator from Pennsylvania is at the confessional and in a confessing mood, it occurred to me that he might be able and willing to add something more to the gayety of the occasion. He has laid before the Senate and the country some very interesting facts as to one transaction.

The Senator was a member of the Republican national committee in the year 1904 and is familiar with its work and seemingly familiar with the financial affairs of the committee. There was a man in this country at that time very celebrated for his achievements in the industrial world, a great constructor of railroads, one of the master men in the financial centers of the country. I refer to Mr. E. H. Harriman. He came down to Washington about the time of which the Senator has been speaking to call on President Roosevelt, then the Republican candidate for President. There will be no need for me to take time in detailing the circumstances and the correspondence which followed. Mr. Harriman finally declared that he had raised $250,000, or about that, at the special instance and request of the President. The President denounced him as a liar and conferred upon him the thirty-second degree in his Ananias Club. Can the Senator from Pennsylvania tell the Senate and the country what he knows about that transaction, if he knows anything?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, many years have passed since these transactions occurred. There are papers on file and a number of letters accessible, interesting documents, which I have no doubt as this discussion develops during the campaign, should any gentleman desire to press these matters, will see the light of day, and I think it would be very beneficial to the American public to have many of these transactions exposed.

Mr. STONE. Where are those letters?

Mr. PENROSE. They are hidden in the archives of campaign committees and in cellars and vaults of business houses and offices of lawyers in different places throughout the country. I was only brought to a recollection of these interesting letters about Mr. Flinn in an unexpected way. I had knowledge at the time of their being written, and it was only by accident that I remembered them. I think the time has come, as the Senator brings that point up, when these charges should be met and that the American people should be no longer gulled by an answer which implies the other man is a liar and that a reference to a speech formerly made is a sufficient answer to the charge.

I would just like to add, and I am glad the Senator has called that to my attention, there was a garbled interview. I have carefully refrained from saying anything about this particular matter in addressing the Senate to-day, but I should like to have the Secretary read this answer of Mr. Roosevelt to an alleged interview which appeared as coming from me, containing in a general way the substance of what I have said to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Col. Roosevelt's statement follows:

"As regards Senator PENROSE's statement I have only to say that I have not, and never have had, the slightest knowledge whether he or anyone else during the campaign of 1904 raised any money to be used in carrying the State of New York.

"In 1904 in Pennsylvania, if my memory is correct, Senator Quay was in charge. My relations with him were always cordial and pleasant. He vigorously supported all the policies I advocated, and, as far as I know, he never asked and I never did anything of any kind, sort, or description for him that could not be blazoned in every newspaper throughout the country."

Mr. PENROSE. Now, Mr. President, there is a deliberate statement that I only had the interest in Mr. Roosevelt's election that might have been shared by a member of this body on the Republican side, when Senator Quay had been dead for several months, when I was in correspondence with Mr. Roosevelt on more than one occasion, when I was a member of the national committee, and in constant touch with Mr. Cortelyou. Yet he deliberately states to the American people that I had nothing whatever to do with his campaign.

Mr. President, is this ingratitude, is it mendacity, is it duplicity, or is it political aphasia?

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon if I make an inquiry of him, which of course he will use his own judgment in replying to or not. I only venture to do so because the Senator himself made a statement, if I understood it correctly, that in the State of Pennsylvania a citizen of that State offered $2,000,000 to be elected to the Senate. Did I understand the Senator correctly?

Mr. PENROSE. That statement is correct. For various reasons peculiar to the situation at that time it was generally conceded that Mr. Durham and I would have a large voice in the selection of my own colleague. Mr. Flinn, however, in his insatiable desire to go to the Senate may have slightly exaggerated that power. That had not been used by me in any offensive way. It was stated to me by people active in the party at that time.

Mr. BACON. I ask another question with hesitation, prefacing it——

Mr. PENROSE. I am glad to have any questions addressed to me.

Mr. BACON. I give the Senator the assurance that I do not ask it with any desire to seek an answer unless it is entirely convenient to the Senator to do so. To whom was that $2,000,000 to be paid?

Mr. PENROSE. I suppose it was to be paid to Mr. Durham or to me. I did not get far enough to decide those details.

CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3315) to prohibit corporations from making contributions in connection with political elections and to limit the amount of such contributions by indivduals or persons.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3315.

Mr. CUMMINS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CULBERSON. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask whether, having laid aside temporarily the unfinished business, this would interfere with it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will displace it, the Chair suggests, if the motion is carried.

Mr. PENROSE. I think the bill ought to be read before the Senate votes on taking it up. I have never read it.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator objected to its consideration the other day.

Mr. PENROSE. I have not had time to read it since. I had not read it before.

Mr. CULBERSON. I see the Senator has been very much engaged.

Mr. PENROSE. I have. I ask that the bill be read.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Senator from Iowa to ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion would have been in order if the unfinished business had been before the Senate. The Chair recognized the Senator from Texas, and he made the motion.

Mr. CUMMINS. I simply want the Senate to understand that if the motion prevails the unfinished business goes over until the next session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A demand is made for the reading of the bill, after which the question will be taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. CLAPP. I offer an amendment which I should like to have read after the bill is read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will first be read.

Mr. OVERMAN. Before that is done could not the Senator from Iowa ask to have the unfinished business temporarily laid aside in order to take this bill up?

Mr. CULBERSON. There is nothing before the Senate except the motion I made. There is no necessity to lay aside anything temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks that the bill be read. The bill will be read.

The SECRETARY. The amendment of the Committee on Privileges and Elections is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That an act entitled "An act to prohibit corporations from making money contributions in connection with political elections," approved January 26, 1907, is amended so as to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That it shall be unlawful for any national bank or other corporation organized by authority of a law of the United States to contribute any money or other thing of value in connection with any convention, primary, or other election for the nomination or election of any person to any political office. It shall also be unlawful for any corporation whatever to contribute any money or other thing of value in connection with the nomination of electors for President and Vice President or the nomination of President and Vice President, Senator, or Representative in Congress, or in connection with the election of any of said officers. Every corporation which shall make any contribution in violation of this section shall be subject to a fine not to exceed $5,000, and every officer, director, or agent who shall consent to any contribution by the corporation in violation of the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not to exceed $1,000, or by imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any individual or person to contribute money or other thing of value exceeding in value $5,000 in connection with the nomination of electors for President and Vice President or the nomination of President and Vice President, Senator, or Representative in Congress, or in connection with the election of any of said officers: Provided, That this section shall not apply to individuals or persons who at such convention, primary, or election are candidates for President, Vice President, Representative, or Senator. Every individual or person who shall make any contribution in violation of the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not to exceed $10,000, or by imprisonment for a term not more than two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 3. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] will be read.

The SECRETARY. Amend by adding at the end of section 2 the following:

The provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected, and extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States, and limiting the amount of campaign expenses,'" approved August 19, 1911, are hereby made applicable to the provisions of this act.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is an agreement by unanimous consent that, following the action of the Senate on the unfinished business, the joint resolution to amend the Constitution, and so forth, the Senate will proceed to consider Senate bill No. 3. I beg pardon; I observe that it is a special order set down by a unanimous-consent agreement. The point of order I was about to make is not well taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion of the Senator from Texas to proceed to the consideration of the bill which has been read.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PAGE. The unanimous-consent agreement, made yesterday, I think, was that when Senate joint resolution No. 78 was concluded, Senate bill No. 3 would be taken up. That was not a motion. It was a request for unanimous consent, as the RECORD will show, and it was agreed to. I ask as a parliamentary inquiry whether that agreement by unanimous consent has been displaced?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has taken no action as yet. The unfinished business is still before the Senate undisposed of, and the unanimous-consent agreement stands at present unchanged. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If we should take up the bill which has been read and displace the joint resolution which the Senator from Iowa has in charge, proposing a constitutional amendment, would the unanimous-consent agreement then become operative for Senate bill No. 3, which the Senator from Vermont has in charge?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will answer that when the time arrives. The Chair will not undertake to answer it in advance.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Crawford	Massey	Smith, Ariz.
Bacon	Culberson	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Cullom	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Bradley	Cummins	Newlands	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Curtis	O'Gorman	Swanson
Bristow	du Pont	Overman	Thornton
Bryan	Fletcher	Page	Tillman
Burnham	Gallinger	Perkins	Townsend
Catron	Heyburn	Poindexter	Wetmore
Chamberlain	Johnston, Ala.	Pomerene	Williams
Chilton	Jones	Reed	Works
Clapp	La Follette	Sanders
Clarke, Ark.	Lippitt	Shively
Crane	Martine, N. J.	Simmons

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho moves that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" appear to have it.

Mr. REED. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROOT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], and therefore withhold my vote. I will let this announcement stand for the remainder of the day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who is away from the city. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] is necessarily absent from the city. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I desire this statement to stand for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 4, nays 47, as follows:

YEAS—4.

Catron	Crane	McCumber	Smoot

NAYS—47.

Ashurst	Cullom	Massey	Simmons
Bacon	Cummins	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Dillingham	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Bradley	du Pont	Newlands	Smith, S. C.
Bristow	Fletcher	O'Gorman	Swanson
Bryan	Gallinger	Overman	Thornton
Chamberlain	Johnston, Ala.	Page	Tillman
Chilton	Jones	Perkins	Townsend
Clapp	La Follette	Poindexter	Wetmore
Clarke, Ark.	McLean	Pomerene	Williams
Crawford	Martin, Va.	Reed	Works
Culberson	Martine, N. J.	Shively

NOT VOTING—43.

Bailey	Dixon	Kenyon	Richardson
Bankhead	Fall	Kern	Root
Bourne	Foster	Lea	Sanders
Brandegee	Gamble	Lippitt	Smith, Md.
Briggs	Gardner	Lodge	Smith, Mich.
Brown	Gore	Oliver	Stephenson
Burnham	Gronna	Owen	Stone
Burton	Guggenheim	Paynter	Sutherland
Clark, Wyo.	Heyburn	Penrose	Warren
Curtis	Hitchcock	Percy	Watson
Davis	Johnson, Me.	Rayner

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BACON. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BACON. As I understand, the unfinished business had been temporarily laid aside. The inquiry which I wish to make is, if, in the absence of any demand for the regular order, a motion is made to take up a measure, does that displace the unfinished business? Of course I recognize the fact fully, Mr. President, that if a Senator demands the regular order and a motion to take up another bill is interposed and agreed to, undoubtedly it would displace it; but the unfinished business having been laid aside by unanimous consent—and it can only be laid aside by unanimous consent—in the absence of a demand, which any one Senator can make to return to the unfinished business, it seems to me that any intervening motion is made subject to unanimous consent that it is for the time laid aside, and that under those circumstances the prevailing of the motion would not displace the unfinished business. I repeat, I quite grant, if any Senator asks for the regular order——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia is under a misapprehension. I did demand the regular order. It was not demanded, however, until after the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] was made; but as soon as I could thereafter I demanded the regular order.

Mr. BACON. I did not know of that fact.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the RECORD will show that to be so.

Mr. BACON. I think, with that fact, undoubtedly the motion prevailing to take it up would displace the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was so made; and the Chair is of opinion that under the circumstances the unfinished business will be displaced if the motion prevails.

Mr. BACON. I quite concur in the opinion of the Chair. I was making my parliamentary inquiry, not knowing the fact that the demand for the unfinished business had been made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. BACON. I would suggest that if the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] does not wish that the unfinished business shall be displaced by the withdrawal of that demand the prevailing of this motion would not displace it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I can not withdraw it, because I feel under a pledge of good faith to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], who has a bill the coming on of which depends upon the disposition of the unfinished business. I therefore can not delay that disposition, except in so far as it is necessary to consider conference reports and appropriation bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called. The motion is not a debatable one.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before the roll is called I want to get the parliamentary status. I understood that unanimous consent was yesterday given that immediately on the disposition of the pending business the bill in which the Senator from Vermont has been interested should become a special order. I want to know whether I am correct that there was a unanimous-consent agreement that it should become the special order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well. Then I want to ask a further question. If the unfinished business is disposed of by being displaced in any way, I ask if then the bill of the Senator from Vermont, under the unanimous-consent agreement, will not become the business of the Senate, and not this joint resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not. It is always within the power of the Senate to determine its procedure.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, did I understand the Chair to declare that it was by unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 3 should be taken up on the disposition of the unfinished business? On the calendar it only stands as a special order and it does not appear that any such unanimous consent has been given.

Mr. PAGE. The RECORD shows unanimous consent.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is not so printed on the calendar.

Mr. McCUMBER. What is the effect of a special order? Has not a special order by unanimous consent the full force and effect of a unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Unanimous consent took the place of a vote on the special order.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call for the regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3315. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. As he is absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. While he has been present to-day, I do not now see him in the Senate Chamber, and I withhold my vote until it is known whether he will be present.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Misssissippi [Mr. PERCY]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I again announce my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I ask whether the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed he has not.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with that Senator and desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. REED. I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], who is absent. I am informed by his colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] that, if present, he would vote "yea," and as that is the way I intend to vote I feel at liberty to cast my vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PERKINS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. As he is absent, I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. SMOOT. I am requested to announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]; that the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]; that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]; and that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER].

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 9, as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The roll will again be called, on the motion of the Senator from Texas to proceed to the consideration of a certain bill.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). In the absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], with whom I have a pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. ROOT (when his name was called). On account of the pair heretofore announced I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). According to the pair already announced, and the transfer made on the previous vote, I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I transfer it to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to announce the fact that my colleague [Mr. PERCY] is absent necessarily and is paired. I should like to have this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to announce my general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (after having voted in the affirmative). I did not announce my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], but I announced on a former vote that I transferred it to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. I let that transfer stand and let my vote stand, and let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. CHILTON. My colleague [Mr. WATSON] is necessarily absent and is paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce that the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] is not in the Chamber, but if present would vote "yea." He is obliged to be away.

Mr. CULBERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire if the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] has voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed he has not voted.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am compelled to withdraw my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS (after having voted in the affirmative). I should like to ask whether the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not voted, the Chair is informed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I transfer it to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BRYAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I will have to withdraw my vote because of my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], as he has not voted.

Mr. CULBERSON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 4, as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No quorum has voted. The roll will again be called.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The previous roll call having disclosed the absence of a quorum, the roll will again be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cullom	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.
Bacon	Dillingham	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest that the absentees be called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The names of the absentees will be called.

Mr. OLIVER and Mr. BRANDEGEE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, returned to the Senate in compliance with its request the bill (H. R. 15181) for the relief of Harry S. Wade, together with the amendment of the Senate thereto.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 26371) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 26371. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3315, the title of which will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3315) to prohibit corporations from making contributions in connection with political elections and to limit the amount of such contributions by individuals or persons.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called. I have a general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I again announce my pair and the transfer of my pair as on the previous vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I will let this announcement stand for all subsequent votes to-day.

Mr. BRYAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote, inasmuch as the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], with whom I am paired, has not voted.

Mr. CULBERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I will again announce the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] and let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 2, as follows:

YEAS—35.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. MASSEY. I move that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The Senate refused to adjourn, there being on a division—ayes 8, noes 22.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi moves that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move that the Senate adjourn until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, August 22, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, August 21, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Rev. M. A. Matthews, D. D., pastor of First Presbyterian Church of Seattle, Wash., offered the following prayer:

Kind heavenly Father, we are grateful to Thee for the preservation of our lives until this moment. Pardon every sin we have ever committed. Guide this House of Representatives through the duties and responsibilities of this day. Bless the officers and officials attached thereto. Cause everything to redound to Thy glory and the advancement of Thy Kingdom; and when Thou hast finished with us in this world, gather us to that beautiful home above. We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL—VETO MESSAGE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith H. R. 26321, an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," without my approval, because the bill still contains in section 9 a provision for the repeal of the act establishing the Commerce Court.

My objections to this repeal are stated in my message returning without approval H. R. 24023, communicated to the House of Representatives on August 15 last.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 21, 1912.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill do pass the objection of the President notwithstanding.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass the bill the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD that portion of the President's message of August 15 in which he assigns what purport to be reasons for the veto of this bill, on the ground that it abolishes the Commerce Court.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that portion of the President's message of August 15 vetoing the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which refers to the Commerce Court.

Mr. MANN. It will not be very easy to differentiate the rest of the message from that portion referring to the Commerce Court.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This bill is vetoed because of the provision relating to the Commerce Court. The other portion of the message refers to the civil-service tenure provision.

Mr. MANN. And part of the message refers to the subject of legislation on appropriation bills.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no objection to that, and with it I shall put in the remarks I made on the subject myself the other day.

Mr. CANNON. I think the whole of the message ought to be printed, because, as I recollect it, it was vetoed on account of two provisions. Now, in passing the bill you substantially make a portion of the veto message meet his statement, so far as the civil service in concerned, or the tenure of office of clerks in the departments, and the two necessarily go together.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They do not. The gentleman is mistaken. The message has a distinct reference to the civil-service provision, and I do not wish the public mind to be confused in reading this RECORD by having that injected into it.

Mr. MANN. That is the reason why I want the whole message printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But I want this particular part of the message printed as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the entire message of the President, the former veto message, be inserted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object to that request at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. MANN. Then I ask that it be inserted as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] first.

Mr. MANN. I will object, Mr. Speaker, unless they are put together.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair will put them together. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent to print that part of the President's message of August 15, vetoing the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill which pertains to the Commerce Court as a part of his remarks, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] couples with that a request to——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my request be submitted separately.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object, unless the gentleman is willing to couple with it the request that I made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask to have read in my time that part of the message I referred to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks that there be read in his time that part of the message he referred to.

Mr. MANN. I shall object to that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then I move, Mr. Speaker, as I have the right, to have it read in my own time.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the objection, if the gentleman is so much afraid to print the entire speech and wants to cull out extracts from it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his objection, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. It is not necessary for the Clerk to read. I withdraw my objection. It can be printed. I withdraw my objection to printing it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his objection to the request of the gentleman from New York to print that part of the message that has been two or three times referred to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I intend to print the first portion, and——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to state, for the benefit of the gentleman, that I will print that portion where, speaking of the two causes of the veto, the President assigns the first, that portion relating to the civil service, which I shall eliminate. I say I wish that to be printed before I address the Chair in the few remarks I wish to make on this veto message.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extract from the message is as follows:

"To the House of Representatives:

"I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 24023, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.' This is one of the great supply bills necessary for the maintenance of the Government, and it goes without saying that nothing but reasons of especial importance would lead me to interpose objections to its passage.

"In a message returning the Army appropriation bill to the House of Representatives with my objections to its approval, under date of June 17, 1912, I ventured to point out the dangers inherent in the practice of attaching substantive legislation to appropriation bills, and I need not repeat them here. It is sufficient to say, however, that when it is thought wise by Congress to include in general supply bills important substantive legislation, and the Executive can not approve such legislation, it is his constitutional duty to return the bill with his objections, and the responsibility for delay in the appropriation of the necessary expenses to run the Government can not rest upon the Executive, but must be put where it belongs—upon the majority in each House of Congress that has departed from the ordinary course and united with an appropriation bill amendments to substantive law. The importance and absolute necessity of furnishing funds to maintain and operate the Government can not be used by the Congress to force upon the Executive acquiescence in permanent legislation which he can not conscientiously approve.

"There are two provisions in this bill which I can not permit to become law with my approval. One concerns the permanent statutory regulation of the tenure of office of those now included within the classified service in the departments and independent establishments of the Government within the District of Columbia. The other is a provision repealing the statute creating a Commerce Court, to consist of five circuit judges, for the purpose of passing on appeals from the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

* * * * * * *

"Second. The Commerce Court was created by the amendment to the interstate-commerce act passed June 18, 1910. Prior to that time, whenever an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission was made against a railroad company over which the Interstate Commerce Commission was given supervision, and it was contended that the order was contrary to law, or was a taking of the property of the company without due process of law, or, in other words, was confiscatory, jurisdiction belonged to the circuit courts of the United States to enjoin the orders of the commission until their validity could be established. It had been the purpose of many to give to the Interstate Commerce Commission complete regulatory control over the railroads of the country in the matter of rates and in other features of their management, without allowing courts to interfere.

"But it was clearly developed that any law was unconstitutional by which it was attempted to deprive the railroad companies of the right to go into court to test the validity of an order as confiscatory or violative of the statutory authority of the commission, and that if no provision at all were made for such judicial review, then the courts would possess it without special authority. So such jurisdiction in circuit courts of the United States was recognized in the act. The system involved hearings in circuit courts of 84 different districts in which the cause of action might arise. The litigation begun at Washington and carried through the Interstate Commerce Commission might then be transferred to some distant district. The district judge, or the circuit judge, or the circuit court of appeals took up the case, presenting a subject matter often entirely new, and found it difficult promptly to dispose of it in the multitude of other duties. This system imposed a delay in the necessary judicial consideration of interstate-commerce orders before they became effective that sometimes postponed their going into force for several years. In the interest, therefore, of the dispatch of business, in the interest of the public, and especially in the interest of the shippers, who were seeking to prevent injustice by the railroads, it was thought wise to create a court of five circuit judges whose first duty should be to sit en banc as a Court of Commerce into which all complaints might be brought for prompt hearing and disposition.

"The statistical record of the last two years shows that the average time in which this ordinary litigation, following the Interstate Commerce Commission's orders before the order of the commission shall become effective, has been reduced from more than two years to about six months. The litigation has not occupied all the time of the Commerce Court, and under special provisions of the act, the Chief Justice of the United States has assigned the circuit judges to judicial labors in the Federal courts all over the country, greatly to the advantage of litigants and to the dispatch of business in those courts. It should be said that under the provisions of the section abolishing the Commerce Court in this bill, jurisdiction to consider the validity of the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission is given to a court of three judges in each of the nine circuits, one of the judges to be a circuit judge or a Supreme Justice. This requirement, good in many ways, only makes the delays of such a countrywide jurisdiction more certain and is in no way comparable in the matter of dispatch of business to the Commerce Court system.

"It appears from the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that the Commerce Court in several cases has amplified its jurisdiction beyond that which a proper construction of the statute justified. It also appears that in a number of cases the decisions were against the shippers and for the railroads when the Supreme Court decided that they ought to have been the other way. On the other hand, it appears that in a number of other cases the decisions of the Commerce Court were in favor of the shippers and in favor of giving relief to the shippers, against the railroad companies, but that the Supreme Court has since denied the existence of such jurisdiction under the statute. A series of decisions of the Supreme Court has satisfactorily established the limits of the jurisdiction of the new court, and there is no reason to believe that those limits thus established will in future be exceeded. There is every reason to believe that the dispatch of business already promoted by the court will continue. And now the question is, Why should the court be abolished? Because it has made some mistakes that the Supreme Court has rectified? Lower courts, especially when exercising new jurisdiction, are likely to make errors to be corrected by the Supreme Court. The presiding judge of the Commerce Court was the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission for a great many years. Three of the Commerce Court judges before their appointment to the Commerce Court had been United States district judges of long experience, and one had been a State judge of standing and experience. The personnel of the court is to change from year to year by the assignment of one of the Commerce Court judges to a circuit court of appeals, and the designation of another circuit judge to fill the vacancy thus made.

"I have read the arguments upon which this proposed legislation is urged and I can not find in them a single reason why the court should be abolished except that those who propose to abolish it object to certain of its decisions. Some of those decisions have been sustained and others have been disapproved or modified by the Supreme Court. I am utterly opposed to the abolition of a court because its decisions may not always meet the approval of a majority of the legisalture. It is introducing a recall of the judiciary, which, in its way, is quite as objectionable as the ordinary popular method proposed. Next to impartial and just judgment the great desideratum in judicial reforms to-day is the promotion of the dispatch of business and the prompt decision of cases. The establishment of the Commerce Court has brought this about in a substantial way by reducing the average delay from two years to six months, and I doubt not that as time goes on and the procedure becomes better understood this period of six months will be further reduced. It is greatly in the interest of the shippers and therefore of the public that this means of reducing the time of effective remedial litigation against railroads should be preserved.

"WM. H. TAFT.

"THE WHITE HOUSE, August 15, 1912."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the President, in this message to which I have referred, calls attention to the fact that he has read the arguments upon which the proposed legislation is urged, and can not find in them a single reason why the court should be abolished, except that those who propose to abolish it object to certain of its decisions.

In certain tariff vetoes sent by the President to Congress he calls attention to the fact that he has been unable, from a careful reading of the debate and the reports of the two Houses of Congress, to ascertain the reasons actuating the two Houses of Congress in taking a certain action. For instance, in his veto on the steel bill, he says:

> A bill for a complete revision of this schedule was presented to me a year ago in the extra session of this Congress. Many increases and decreases of rates are now made from those named in the former measure. The changes are not explained, and indicate the hasty method pursued in the preparation of both.

Mr. Speaker, the President announces a novel doctrine. Heretofore it has always been assumed that the debates in the two Houses of Congress and the reports made by the committees of the two Houses of Congress and the investigations made by the various committees of the two Houses of Congress were for the purpose of furnishing information to the two Houses which would be called upon to act upon legislation submitted to them.

But apparently the President seems to think that that is not a sufficient reason to cause these investigations, reports, and debates. Hereafter when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] presents a bill to revise the tariff, he must frame his speech along such lines that it will not only satisfy the Members of this House, but will convince the occupant of the White House that the legislation he proposes is advisable. Not only must the House convince its own Members and the other House as to the desirability of legislation, but it must undertake the impossible task of educating the present Chief Executive upon public questions. How futile that will be, in view of the fact that he has been insisting upon commissions from time to time to give him information or to obtain information for him to enable him properly to discharge his duties.

We created a special commission at his instance and for his benefit to investigate the question of the issuance of stocks and bonds by corporations. He insisted on the appointment of a Tariff Board to furnish him with information to enable him properly to pass upon tariff bills. I rejoice in one fact more than anything else that this campaign assures us, and that is that after the 4th of March, as the result of the election of the Democratic candidate for the presidency, there will be a man in the White House who is himself competent to pass upon public questions without the aid of these expensive and unnecessary commissions. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The President in this message on the Commerce Court, in attempting to justify its existence, calls attention to the personnel of the court. He says in his message:

> The presiding judge of the Commerce Court was chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission for a great many years. Three of the Commerce Court judges before their appointment to the Commerce Court had been United States district judges of long experience, and one had been a State judge of standing and experience.

The President's reference to the personnel of the court at this particular time is most unfortunate. It is to be regretted that he did not complete the record, and emphasize the fact that one member of this court at present is awaiting trial upon an impeachment voted by this House for high crimes and misdemeanors committed while a judge of that court itself. If the President wished to call attention to the personnel of the court he might also have referred to that unfortunate and regrettable fact.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the sentiment of the country demands the abolition of this court. It is an un-American court. It is the only court of original jurisdiction created by Congress and outside of the Supreme Court, which has original jurisdiction in certain matters and is created in the Constitution, to which a party can be dragged from his home to the seat of Government from any part of the United States to have his case heard.

Mr. CLAYTON. Congress did not create the Supreme Court. That was created by the Constitution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is correct. An attempt was made in recent years to take from the localities where they occurred the disposition of cases arising out of certain acts which were alleged to constitute offenses against the Federal law. It was the purpose to bring to the seat of government for trial the person charged with crimes in a locality in which, with perhaps a different atmosphere, results might be expected which would be different from those to be obtained in properly conducted local courts. I believe the sentiment of the country demands the abolition of this court. The President states that it is simply another form of judicial recall. He states that the only reason he has been able to find urged for the abolition of this court is that some of its decisions have been unsatisfactory, and he asserts upon his own contention that this is in the nature of a recall of courts and judges, to which he is opposed.

Mr. Speaker, the President himself approved a bill during his term of office by which the circuit courts of the United States were abolished and their jurisdiction placed in the district courts of the United States. There is no distinction to be drawn between that act and his approval of it and this act abolishing the Commerce Court, with which there is universal dissatisfaction, and placing its jurisdiction in the district courts of the United States. I believe the court will not long survive. Not to delay the House, however, I shall be content with reprinting as a part of these remarks what I said on the subject a few days ago.

I therefore ask unanimous consent to reprint, as a part of these remarks, the remarks I made the other day upon the President's veto messages.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"Mr. Speaker, it is refreshing to find Republicans studying the Democratic platform. After the action of the House in the last two days in passing two important tariff bills over the President's vetoes, I feel quite confident that if more Republicans studied attentively the Democratic platform we could enact our entire program before the session ends. [Laughter and applause.]

"The President of the United States in his message asserts that nothing but reasons of special importance justify the vetoing of a great supply bill for the Government. He states that in his veto message of the Army bill he gave reasons justifying the vetoes of this character which he would not repeat. In that veto message, Mr. Speaker, the President says:

"The dangers inherent in the practice of attaching substantive legislation to appropriation bills have been frequently pointed out by my predecessors. The only justification that has been offered for such practice is that it has been found a convenient method for facilitating the passage of measures which are deemed expedient by all the branches of government which participate in legislation. Thus, it has more than once occurred that useful items of Army legislation, generally of an urgent character, have been passed in this manner, when the desirability of the enactment was recognized and acquiesced in by the common consent of both the Executive and of Congress.

"It is almost impertinent for a President to criticize the manner in which the Congress transacts its business. It is the display of a shocking ignorance of the history and of development of the free institutions among the Anglo-Saxon people for the President and others to inveigh against the practice of attaching important legislation demanded by the representatives of the people to the bills which carry the public money for the maintenance of the Government.

"In the Federalist, fifty-seventh number, in an article written by Madison or Hamilton, and generally accredited to Hamilton, we find the following passage:

"The House of Representatives can not only refuse but they alone can propose the supplies requisite for the support of the Government. They, in a word, hold the purse, that powerful instrument by which we behold, in the history of the British constitution, an infant and humble representation of the people gradually enlarging the sphere of its activity and importance, and finally reducing, as far as it seems to have wished, all the overgrown prerogatives of the other branches of the Government. This power over the purse may, in fact, be regarded as the most complete and effectual weapon with which any constitution can arm the immediate representatives of the people for obtaining a redress of every grievance and for carrying into effect every just and salutary measure.

"Here are succinctly stated the reasons that, in our Constitution, no limitation was placed upon the power of the representatives of the people to grant supplies of public money for the maintenance of the Government, under such conditions as the people's representatives themselves should determine.

"Formerly the rules of the two Houses prohibited legislation on appropriation bills. Such was not the custom for a long period after the organization of the Government. The rules of the House to-day, adopted under specific grant of power in the Constitution, authorize legislation designed to accomplish certain reforms upon such bills. The rules adopted at various times by both Houses to prohibit designated legislation upon the appropriation bills were adopted without reference to or thought of the Executive. They were designated merely to prevent deadlocks between the two Houses, and not for the convenience of or to please the Executive. The President's statement that legislation has at various times been included in appropriation bills when the Congress and the Executive were in accord as to its wisdom is erroneous, and based upon a misunderstanding of events in our history.

"All of the commentators on the Constitution, Mr. Speaker, are agreed as to the grounds upon which the veto should properly be exercised.

"Mr. Tucker, in his well-known work on the Constitution, sums them up as well as any of them:

"The purpose of the veto power—

"He says—

"may be summarized to protect the Executive power against invasion by Congress; against hostile or insufficient action of Congress under the eighteenth clause of section 8, Article I, above referred to; to protect the Constitution against the unconstitutional legislative action and against injudicious and hasty legislation.

"Calhoun, in a memorable speech on the veto power, delivered in the Senate in 1842, gave one other reason that might justify the President's action. He said that—"he might find it necessary to interpose his veto for the maintenance of his views of the Constitution, or the policy of the party of which he is the head, and which elevated him to power.

"The President bases his veto, Mr. Speaker, of this bill, first because he disapproves of section 5, one of the provisions relating to the civil service, because, as he states:

"I do not think it will accomplish its proposed purpose. I do not think it adds anything in efficiency to the provision of section 4.

"He objects because he does not think it will be effective and because he is not willing to risk the possible danger to the civil service by its enactment. Is that one of the grave reasons set forth by the commentators as a justification for a veto? The other reason is that the Congress proposes to abolish the Commerce Court.

"What is the history of the Commerce Court? It appeared for the first time in what was known as the administration bill in the Sixty-first Congress, relative to the regulation of rates. It failed of being stricken out of the bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when under consideration in the House by a tie vote. It was retained in the bill on a motion to recommit on May 10, 1910, by a vote of 157 ayes to 176 noes.

"In the Senate, on June 3, 1910, the vote on the motion to strike out the court was 25 ayes to 38 noes. This Commerce Court has never been recommended in any Republican platform. It was not even mentioned in the recent Republican platform. It is the single pet idea of the Chief Executive of the United States. There is now an overwhelming sentiment in both Houses against its continuance. In the Senate, at this session, the vote was 24 for retaining the court and 36 for abolishing it. The action of the Democratic House in abolishing this court was approved by the Democratic convention at Baltimore because it approves our record here. It is approved by the only progressive party, the Democratic Party. The answer to the President's question as to why the court should be abolished can be found in the platform of the pseudoprogressive party, the so-called Bull Moose Party, the head of which is his erstwhile great friend and former sponsor, Col. Roosevelt. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

"In that platform is found this declaration:

"In order that the power of the commission—

"The Interstate Commerce Commission—

"to protect the people may not be impaired or destroyed, we demand the abolition of the Commerce Court.

"Real progressives and pseudoprogressives all unite in the demand for the abolition of the court, and only those stand against it who have been stigmatized and fixed as the real reactionaries, headed by the President, William H. Taft. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

"Mr. Speaker, I have had prepared this volume of 300 pages containing a résumé of legislation enacted upon appropriation bills during the last 16 years of Republican Congresses. I have a list of the more important items which I shall include in the RECORD. The President declaims against the practice of including legislation in appropriation bills. He should be the last man in public life to do so. He has been the chief beneficiary personally of two of the most important pieces of legislation ever enacted upon appropriation bills during our history. In 1910 the salary of the President was increased in an appropriation bill from $50,000 to $75,000 a year, and he has been the only beneficiary of such legislation. I wonder whether the man who was then President, if he could have foreseen the future and pictured the events of to-day, would have so readily approved that bill giving such benefits to the present Chief Executive? [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

"On July 4, 1901, the Army appropriation bill, one of the bills lately vetoed by the President because it carried far-reaching legislation, was approved by President McKinley, and that bill contained the legislation under which Mr. Taft was appointed as the civil governor of the Philippine Islands, and under which he exercised the comprehensive powers given to him as such governor [applause on the Democratic side], and under which he obtained his first recognition at the hands of the American people since the time he had been guilty of issuing indefensible injunctions in labor cases when a judge of the United States Court.

"Mr. Speaker, what is the justification for legislation on appropriation bills? This very bill speaks more eloquently of the necessity than any other action that could be taken by Congress. It contains a provision that no vacancies in the War Department shall be filled until the number of employees there shall be reduced 5 per cent. The President has the power to make this necessary reduction. The War Department is overloaded with unnecessary employees. The President knows that better than any other man in the Government, because he served at the head of this department himself as the Secretary of War. He does not criticize Congress for putting this coercion into this legislative appropriation bill. He does not find fault with Congress for enacting this legislation. He knows it is a necessity. He knows that if he performs his duty, or if he had performed his duty, that Congress would not be obliged to put this coercion into this bill; and yet, failing to perform his duty, he acquiesces in this provision to compel them to make the necessary reduction.

"Mr. Speaker, that brings me to remind the House that Mr. Bryce, in his great work on the American Commonwealth, calls attention to the fact that the Congress has only two powers of coercion over the Executive; one the power of impeachment, which can only be exercised under conditions of the most extraordinary character; and the other the power to place legislation in appropriation bills and to compel the President to accept legislation demanded by the people in return for the grants of money to maintain the Government. [Applause on Democratic side.]

"Let me in this connection call attention to the attitude of a Republican Senate upon this question of vetoes by the President. It had long been contended that the only ground upon which the President should exercise the power was that the legislation was an invasion of the Constitution. By degrees this contention was abandoned. The commentators have concluded, however, that only for the most weighty reasons, either the encroachment of Congress upon the Executive or because of hasty, ill-considered legislation, should the President interpose his veto. None of those reasons exists in this case. No such reasons are given in the veto message.

"The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

"Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended for three minutes.

"The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

"There was no objection.

"Mr. FITZGERALD. A Republican Senate in the Fiftieth Congress took up the question of certain vetoes by President Cleveland, and a committee made an elaborate report thereon, in which is this statement:

"It can not be maintained upon any fair construction of the Constitution that the power of Executive disapproval ought to be exercised upon acts of this character for the sole reason that the President differs in opinion from Congress upon a mere question of the weight of testimony, or upon the expediency of a special act which subserves a proper general purpose and which imperils no power of any other department.

"Mr. Speaker, this House within the past few days reasserted its prerogative when it compelled another branch of the Congress to accept its dictation that in granting supplies for the support of the Government useless and unnecessary offices should be abolished. That fight has continued for eight or nine years.

"The House has finally been vindicated in its right to control the purse of the people. Here comes a second controversy now between the House—the representative of the people—and the Executive. I believe the most important thing before this House is that it shall assert again its prerogatives and that it shall send notice to the Executive and to every other branch of the Government that the Representatives of the people propose to maintain inviolate their right to control the supplies for the support of the Government upon the conditions which they lay down and upon no other. I hope the House will rally to the support of that principle and send this bill to the Senate, the objections of the President notwithstanding. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

"List of most important legislation enacted on general appropriation acts during the period December 6, 1897, to March 4, 1911:

"Meat-inspection law.
"Declaration of relations with Cuba following the Spanish War (known as the Spooner Act).
"Travel allowances and pay of the Army.
"First provision for civil government of the Philippine Islands.
"Creation of the Dental Corps of the Army.
"Amendment of the Chinese-exclusion act.
"Antideficiency law.
"Jamestown Exposition.
"District of Columbia:
  "Creation of the board of education.
  "Taxation of real estate.
  "Taxation of personal property.
  "Taxation by licenses.
  "Vagrancy law.
  "Regulation of gas and electric companies.
  "Reformatory and workhouse established.
  "Regulation of public lighting.
"Coeur d'Alene, Red Lake, and Blackfeet Indian Reservations opened to entry.
"Important agreements effected with Indian tribes.
"General law regulating purchase of supplies for executive departments.
"Pay and allowances of the Navy.
"Increase in strength of Navy and Marine Corps.
"Paris Exposition.
"Amendment of the act providing for the Louisiana Purchase Exposition.
"House of Representatives and Senate Office Buildings and the Capitol power plant.
"Jamestown Exposition.
"Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition.
"Enlargement of the Capitol Grounds.
"Many important acts affecting the construction of the Panama Canal.

"The foregoing, together with much other legislation general in character but of minor importance, comprises about one-half of the entire bulk of legislation enacted on general appropriation acts during the period stated. The one-half not included in the volume is legislation, but of such a personal or unimportant character as to preclude its inclusion therein.

"In addition to the foregoing, much minor legislation affecting all branches of the Government service has been enacted. Acts regulating estimates of appropriations, expenditure of appropriations, correcting abuses in the administration of governmental affairs, affecting employees of the Government, purchase or disposition of public property; in fact, touching every branch of the service in every conceivable manner.

"The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1910 increased the salary of the President of the United States from $50,000 to $75,000 per annum and fixed the compensation of the President thereafter at $75,000.

"On July 4, 1901, President McKinley appointed Mr. Taft first civil governor of the Philippine Islands under authority of legislation enacted on the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1902, and under the provisions of which legislation he performed the duties of civil governor.

"The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1908 contained a provision increasing salaries of Members of Congress and of the heads of the executive departments. The salary of the Secretary of War under the provisions of this legislation was increased from $8,000 to $12,000."

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire only a brief time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's undignified fling at the President of the United States which excited applause on that side of the House is, it seems to me, one of those remarks which, while it splits the ear of the groundlings and makes the unskillful laugh, can not but make the judicious grieve; for if there is one question on which I think sensible, intelligent men will admit that the President is well informed and needs no assistance from the House or the Senate, or other experts, it is his knowledge of the judicial character and purpose of this court and the need the country has for it. The question has been thoroughly discussed already in the House.

The members of the committee having charge of that particular bill have debated it, and I do not wish further to take the time of the House on that.

But I wish to indicate that this condition to-day well illustrates the danger of general legislation upon appropriation bills which has been so vigorously defended on that side of the House. Here we are in the very last days of the session, this side of the House at least anxious to adjourn, and they persist in attaching legislation to appropriation bills which they know the President is opposed to, which they know the President has a right to an independent opinion upon, and yet they keep us here and keep sending it in and compelling a veto. The President is entitled to his opinion upon the existence of this court. He is entitled to the veto. To legislate upon supply bills is wrong, not because it violates the rules of the House, but because it violates those underlying principles which compelled the House to adopt rules against it.

The practice is not vicious simply because the rules of the House forbid it, but the rules of the House forbid it because it is vicious. Now, why is it vicious? It is vicious because experience has shown it is sure to load up appropriation bills until necessary legislation is blocked. There is no excuse for it as against the President; there is some excuse as against the Senate, because by putting legislation on appropriation bills we can compel the Senate to consider legislation which perhaps a majority of that body is in favor, but which otherwise they would not consider. We can compel the Senate to give it consideration.

But that does not apply to the President, because the President is obliged to give consideration to every bill that we send to him. The only purpose against the President is to try and constrain him, by the desire to have appropriation bills passed, to attach his signature to legislation in which he does not believe. In other words, it is an attempt to take away from him the right that he has under the Constitution to express his opinion on legislation.

There is no analogy between the President of the United States and the King of England as has been suggested on the other side. I remember we were appealed to from that side of the House because the liberties of England had largely been acquired by legislation on appropriation bills.

There is no analogy at all between that and this case, because when they made those bargains with the King of England by giving him supplies in exchange for his allowing legislation the supplies went to him personally. They supported him; he had a personal interest in them; they were to supply his personal expenses; they were to support the army by which he maintained at that time his crown; and there is no analogy between that and the President of the United States. The appropriation bills are no more for him than they are for each one of us, and the only object, the only pressure upon him is the pressure to hurry through a supply bill which the whole country needs.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. I would like two minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. GILLETT. In England all power came from the King, and unless he yielded the people were helpless, while here all power comes from the people and whatever is not used by law remains with them. In England the King had an absolute veto. There was no other way to pass legislation. Here two-thirds can pass it over the President's veto, and if two-thirds is not in favor of it they have no right to try to constrain the President to approve the legislation by the threat of stopping the wheels of government. Therefore it seems to me that the present situation illustrates the inherent viciousness of such legislation. The only excuse for it is when legislation is necessary which is generally acquiesced in by the three branches of the Government, which the House wishes, which the Senate wishes, which the President wishes, and which can be facilitated by attaching it to appropriation bills and thereby hastening the legislation. But there is no excuse for attaching to appropriation bills legislation which it is known the President disapproves, and so threatening him to embarrass the Government if he does not give up his constitutional right.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] criticizes the President because he has endeavored to ascertain the reason which actuated the Congress in enacting legislation. To me it is a very queer proposition that the President, who has the responsibility of approving or disapproving measures, is to be forbidden by the gentleman from New York from endeavoring to learn the reasons why Congress passes bills. Every day we have reports of bills in the House which contain copies of reports on the same bills in the Senate so that we may be informed here of the reasons which actuated the Senate in passing bills, and the same thing occurs in the Senate constantly. Yet the gentleman from New York criticizes the President for reading the debates in Congress and for reading the reports of committees in Congress in order that he may know the reasons why Congress passes bills.

I hope that the time will never come when the President of the United States is grown so great that he refuses to learn the reasons actuating both the House and the Senate in passing bills. Perhaps we will have that situation when we have a schoolmaster for the President, who is unwilling to hear the opinions of his pupils, who considers it his business to speak in didactic language and tell Congress what to do and not learn why Congress believes in doing things.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman refer to the esteemed governor of New Jersey?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am not referring to my distinguished friend from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD], because he is neither a schoolmaster nor will he ever be President. [Laughter.]

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I am too young yet to be President.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York endeavors to make a criticism of the President in reference to the Commerce Court. It would have been better for my friend if he had left out all observations concerning the Commerce Court, because evidently he has never read the law creating the court. The gentleman also claims that the abolition of the circuit courts and transferring the circuit judges into courts of appeals and the circuit courts into district courts is parallel to this case. Not at all. There is no similarity, and the gentleman again shows he has never read either the law or the report of the committee concerning the change from circuit courts to district courts.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the President has the right, when Congress sends him appropriations bills having in them legislation to which he is opposed, to exercise his veto power. In ths case it was entirely unnecessary to put the provision abolishing the Commerce Court into the appropriation bill, because, if two-thirds of the House and two-thirds of the Senate favor a proposition, there is ample way under the rules of both bodies to pass a separate bill, without attempting to coerce the President into signing the bill, when he is opposed to certain features in it. In almost every State of the Union now the governor may veto items in appropriation bills. In many of the municipalities the mayor may veto items in appropriation ordinances, and yet we have here the example of a majority of the House attempting to coerce the President by putting in an appropriation bill legislation to which he is opposed, in the hope that the President will yield the position that he believes is right, in order to carry on the Government, when the gentlemen themselves decline to yield and threaten to stop the progress of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the former veto of the President, together with the veto of to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The veto message of the President of the United States of August 15, 1912, is as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 24023, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes." This is one of the great supply bills necessary for the maintenance of the Government, and it goes without saying that nothing but reasons of especial importance would lead me to interpose objections to its passage.

In a message returning the Army appropriation bill to the House of Representatives with my objections to its approval, under date of June 17, 1912, I ventured to point out the dangers inherent in the practice of attaching substantive legislation to appropriation bills, and I need not repeat them here. It is sufficient to say, however, that when it is thought wise by Congress to include in general supply bills important substantive legislation, and the Executive can not approve such legislation, it is his constitutional duty to return the bill with his objections, and the responsibility for delay in the appropriation for the necessary expenses to run the Government can not rest upon the Executive, but must be put where it belongs—upon the majority in each House of Congress that has departed from the ordinary course and united with an appropriation bill amendments to substantive law. The importance and absolute necessity of furnishing funds to maintain and operate the Government can not be used by the Congress to force upon the Executive acquiescence in permanent legislation which he can not conscientiously approve.

There are two provisions in this bill which I can not permit to become law with my approval. One concerns the permanent statutory regulation of the tenure of office of those now included within the classified service in the departments and independent establishments of the Government within the District of Columbia. The other is a provision repealing the statute creating a Commerce Court, to consist of five circuit judges, for the purpose of passing on appeals from the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

First. By section 4 of this act the Civil Service Commission is directed, subject to the approval of the President, to establish a system of efficiency ratings for the classified service in the several executive departments in the District of Columbia, based upon records kept in each department and independent establishment with such frequency as to make them as nearly as possible records of fact. The system is to provide a minimum rating of efficiency which must be attained by an employee before he may be promoted; a rating below which no employee may fall without being demoted; and a rating below which no employee may fall without being dismissed for inefficiency. All promotions, demotions, or dismissals are to be governed by provisions of the civil-service rules. Records of efficiency are to be furnished by the departments and independent establishments to the Civil Service Commission.

This section 4 is an admirable section, and, if properly carried out, will greatly improve the present civil service.

Section 5, however, introduces a new and radical feature into the present system. It provides that every appointment in the classified service after the 1st of September of next year shall be for a term of seven years after the probationary period of six months has expired, and that at the expiration of each such appointment the employment of each person so appointed shall cease and determine; and that the employment of all persons, appointed prior to September 1, 1912, in such classified service at annual rates of compensation shall cease and determine within one year after August 31, 1919, the date of termination during that year to be determined by the head of the appropriate department according to previous length of service. The cessation of employment and the ending of the term in these cases is absolute, without regard to efficiency rating under section 4, but section 5 contains the proviso that all persons separated by its terms from the classified service, if they are up to the standard of efficiency then in force and capable of rendering a full measure of service, may, in the discretion of the head of the executive department, be reappointed without examination for another term of seven years.

The effect of this section is to leave it to the discretion of the head of the department in the case of each classified employee at the end of his term of seven years to say whether that employee, no matter how high his standing, shall continue, or whether another shall be selected from the eligible list submitted in accordance with law and regulation by the Civil Service Commission.

I believe this to be a genuine effort on the part of those who propose it to meet the difficulty presented in the present civil-service system by superannuation of the employees and the impossibility of eliminating those who through age and disease have ceased to be efficient. It is recognized that one method of meeting this difficulty is by a system of civil pension which will retire persons from the civil service at a certain age, or upon confirmed disability. It has been found impossible to secure an enforcement of the present law which requires every person who is not efficient in the service of the Government to be discharged, because it imposes upon the heads of departments and bureaus the disagreeable and ungracious duty of throwing out of employment, without any means of livelihood, the men and women who have spent many years in the employment of the Government and in time past have rendered good service.

I disapprove of section 5 because I do not think it will accomplish its proposed purpose, and I do not think it adds anything in efficiency to the provisions of section 4. If section 4 is carried out, then the superannuated will have to go when their inefficiency is properly determined, and this whether section 5 is on the statute book or not; and if section 4 is not enforced, then section 5 adds little or nothing in the way of getting rid of superannuated and inefficient clerks.

If section 4 is loosely enforced, so that the rating of efficiency of the superannuated clerk is charitably maintained by his superior at or above the minimum standard, there will be the same pressure to retain the clerk at the end of his seven years as there was to maintain his minimum rate, and the same reluctance as in the present system to turn him out at an advanced age without means of a livelihood after long years of service.

I do not share in the objection to a civil-pension system. I am strongly in favor of it, provided it involves features of compulsory insurance of employees, secured by an application of part of the salary of each toward the maintenance of the necessary funds. Such a system has already been embodied in the Gillett bill, and I know of no reason why it should not be adopted.

As to the present measure, I object to it, first, because for the reasons stated it will prove ineffective, as the present system has, in the matter of superannuated clerks; and, second, because it impairs that feature of the civil service which I regard as a most valuable one, to wit: The permanence of tenure on the one hand, balanced by a wide and almost absolute power of removal in the department head on the other. If at the end of each seven years it becomes necessary for one who has spent the best years of his life in the public service to ascertain whether he is to continue, it is certain that he will bring pressure to bear in every direction upon the appointing power to continue him in office. I am perfectly aware that the motive for not reappointing him will be much reduced by the fact that his successor must be appointed from the eligibles of the Civil Service Commission, but the play which this will give for prejudice and arbitrary action in the appointing power will constitute a serious injury to the present tenure of office.

Much has been said in the way of criticizing the present service as to the overpayment of the civil servants. It is true that in the departments there are many at salaries between $900 and $2,000 who are overpaid, but it is also true that there are many within those limits and nearly all who serve at salaries higher than $2,000 who are underpaid. The efficiency and wonderfully loyal service rendered by many of the employees of the Government who have concluded to devote their lives to the public service, to be content with only moderate salaries, because of the permanence of the tenure, can only be known to those who have had large experience in the character of the service rendered by the civil servants in the District of Columbia. I am not content to risk serious injury to the tone and efficacy of that service to accomplish something that in my judgment will not be accomplished by a change which will rob those who are in the service of a peace of mind that makes up in some degree for the sacrifices they have been obliged to undergo in devoting their lives at small pay to the Government. I am aware that there are malingerers and others in the service who contribute but little to its efficiency. They would be disposed of by the proper enforcement of section 4.

But there is a large part of the civil-servant body which consists of hard-working, loyal, and efficient persons, who render to the Government more than they receive and who give character to the service. It is their permanence of tenure that led them to seek the service and keeps them in it. Of course it will be said that such clerks are likely to be retained. Probably; but the difference between mere probability of continuance and permanent tenure is the difference between worry and active solicitation of every influence in the seventh year and that contentment of mind that is alone consistent with undivided attention to public duty.

Second. The Commerce Court was created by the amendment to the interstate-commerce act passed June 18, 1910. Prior to that time, whenever an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission was made against a railroad company over which the Interstate Commerce Commission was given supervision, and it was contended that the order was contrary to law, or was a taking of the property of the company without due process of law, or, in other words, was confiscatory, jurisdiction belonged to the circuit courts of the United States to enjoin the orders of the commission until their validity could be established. It had been the purpose of many to give to the Interstate Commerce Commission complete regulatory control over the railroads of the country in the matter of rates and in other features of their management, without allowing courts to interfere.

But it was clearly developed that any law was unconstitutional by which it was attempted to deprive the railroad companies of the right to go into court to test the validity of an order as confiscatory or violative of the statutory authority of the commission, and that if no provision at all were made for such judicial review, then the courts would possess it without special authority. So such jurisdiction in circuit courts of the United States was recognized in the act. The system involved hearings in circuit courts of 84 different districts in which the cause of action might arise. The litigation begun at Washington and carried through the Interstate Commerce Commission might then be transferred to some distant district. The district judge, or the circuit judge, or the circuit court of appeals took up the case, presenting a subject matter often entirely new, and found it difficult promptly to dispose of it in the multitude of other duties. This system imposed a delay in the necessary judicial consideration of interstate-commerce orders before they became effective that sometimes postponed their going into force for several years. In the interest, therefore, of the dispatch of business, in the interest of the public, and especially in the interest of the shippers who were seeking to prevent injustice by the railroads, it was thought wise to create a court of five circuit judges whose first duty should be to sit en banc as a Court of Commerce into which all complaints might be brought for prompt hearing and disposition.

The statistical record of the last two years shows that the average time in which this ordinary litigation, following the Interstate Commerce Commission's orders before the order of the commission shall become effective, has been reduced from more than two years to about six months. The litigation has not occupied all the time of the Commerce Court, and under special provisions of the act, the Chief Justice of the United States has assigned the circuit judges to judicial labors in the Federal courts all over the country, greatly to the advantage of litigants and to the dispatch of business in those courts. It should be said that under the provisions of the section abolishing the Commerce Court in this bill, jurisdiction to consider the validity of the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission is given to a court of three judges in each of the nine circuits, one of the judges to be a circuit judge or a Supreme Justice. This requirement, good in many ways, only makes the delays of such a countrywide jurisdiction more certain and is in no way comparable in the matter of dispatch of business to the Commerce Court system.

It appears from the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that the Commerce Court in several cases has amplified its jurisdiction beyond that which a proper construction of the statute justified. It also appears that in a number of cases the decisions were against the shippers and for the railroads when the Supreme Court decided that they ought to have been the other way. On the other hand, it appears that in a number of other cases the decisions of the Commerce Court were in favor of the shippers and in favor of giving relief to the shippers, against the railroad companies, but that the Supreme Court has since denied the existence of such jurisdiction under the statute. A series of decisions of the Supreme Court has satisfactorily established the limits of the jurisdiction of the new court, and there is no reason to believe that those limits thus established will in future be exceeded. There is every reason to believe that the dispatch of business already promoted by the court will continue. And now the question is, Why should the court be abolished? Because it has made some mistakes that the Supreme Court has rectified? Lower courts, especially when exercising new jurisdiction, are likely to make errors to be corrected by the Supreme Court. The presiding judge of the Commerce Court was the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission for a great many years. Three of the Commerce Court judges before their appointment to the Commerce Court had been United States district judges of long experience, and one had been a State judge of standing and experience. The personnel of the court is to change from year to year by the assignment of one of the Commerce Court judges to a circuit court of appeals and the designation of another circuit judge to fill the vacancy thus made.

I have read the arguments upon which this proposed legislation is urged, and I can not find in them a single reason why the court should be abolished except that those who propose to abolish it object to certain of its decisions. Some of those decisions have been sustained and others have been disapproved or modified by the Supreme Court. I am utterly opposed to the abolition of a court because its decisions may not always meet the approval of a majority of the Legislature. It is introducing a recall of the judiciary, which, in its way, is quite as objectionable as the ordinary popular method proposed. Next to impartial and just judgment the great desideratum in judicial reforms to-day is the promotion of the dispatch of business and the prompt decision of cases. The establishment of the Commerce Court has brought this about in a substantial way by reducing the average delay from two years to six months, and I doubt not that as time goes on and the procedure becomes better understood this period of six months will be further reduced. It is greatly in the interest of the shippers and therefore of the public that this means of reducing the time of effective remedial litigation against railroads should be preserved.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 15, 1912.

The veto message of the President of the United States of August 21, 1912, is as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith H. R. 26321, an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," without my approval, because the bill still contains in section 9 a provision for the repeal of the act establishing the Commerce Court.

My objections to this repeal are stated in my message returning without approval H. R. 24023, communicated to the House of Representatives on August 15 last.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 21, 1912.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration pass the bill the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll; and there were—yeas 154, nays 53, answered "present" 13, not voting 171, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21094) to create a commission on industrial relations.

The message also announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CLAPP, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. CHAMBERLAIN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 5556. An act to amend "An act to create an Auditor of Railroad Accounts, and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1878, as amended by the acts of March 3, 1881, and March 3, 1903, and for other purposes;

S. 6777. An act to authorize the board of county commissioners of Horry County, S. C., to construct a bridge across Kingston Lake, at Conway, S. C.;

S. 5808. An act granting right of way across Port Discovery Bay, United States military reservation, to the Seattle, Port Angeles, and Lake Crescent Railway, of the State of Washington; and

S. 5679. An act to amend section 2 of an act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawals of public lands in certain cases, approved June 25, 1910.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 15181) for the relief of Harry S. Wade, and the amendment of the Senate to said bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 4301. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to lease to the Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Railway Co. a tract of land in the Fort Keogh Military Reservation, in the State of Montana, and for a right of way thereto for the removal of gravel and ballast material;

S. 7315. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Clearwater River at a point within the corporate limits of the city of Lewiston, Idaho;

S. 5679. An act to amend section 2 of an act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawals of public lands in certain cases, approved June 25, 1910;

S. 6777. An act to authorize the board of county commissioners of Horry County, S. C., to construct a bridge across Kingston Lake at Conway, S. C.;

S. 5556. An act to amend "An act to create an Auditor of Railroad Accounts, and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1878, as amended by the acts of March 3, 1881, and March 3, 1903, and for other purposes; and

S. 4679. An act to amend section 95 of the "act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 16571. An act to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the North Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington July 7, 1911; and

H. R. 24224. An act to amend sections 5, 11, and 25 of an act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyrights," approved March 4, 1909.

INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit the conference report on the bill (H. R. 21094) to create a commission on industrial relations, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. Has it been printed?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. It has not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report notwithstanding it has not been printed under the rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the conference report reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1233).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21094) to create a commission on industrial relations, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 4, line 10, after the word "thereof," insert the following: "Provided, That the commission may expend not to exceed $5,000 per annum for the employment of experts at such rate of compensation as may be fixed by the commission, but no other person employed hereunder by the commission, except stenographers temporarily employed for the purpose of taking testimony, shall be paid compensation at a rate in excess of $3,000 per annum"; and the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. WILSON,
W. L. HENSLEY,
J. J. GARDNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

WILLIAM E. BORAH,
BOIES PENROSE,
J. H. BANKHEAD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

HARRY S. WADE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following resolution from the Senate, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
August 21, 1912.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 15181) for the relief of Harry S. Wade, and the amendment of the Senate to said bill.

Attest:

CHARLES G. BENNETT, Secretary.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. LAMB, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Isidore Cohen, Fiftieth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the bill under consideration is the bill H. R. 17470, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17470) to pension widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or Philippine insurrection.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be closed at 4.30 o'clock p. m., after which it may be read under the five-minute rule.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will submit it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I submit the point of order that the bill is not in order as unfinished business under the Calendar Wednesday rule, for the reason that the rule states that it shall not apply during the last two weeks of the session.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled, because nobody knows which are the last two weeks of the session. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] asks that general debate on this bill be closed not later than 4.30 o'clock p. m. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 17470, with Mr. CLAYTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration, as unfinished business, of the bill H. R. 17470, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17470) to pension widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or Philippine insurrection.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, "Audacity, and more audacity, and always audacity," screamed the French revolutionist Danton during the reign of terror in the last decade of the eighteenth century. And for a time his countrymen were thrilled by his audacious attacks upon his enemies. They believed in his professions. They placed a halo of glory upon his head. Day after day he administered political nostrums to the delight of the frenzied populace of the French capital. Day after day, with terrific vehemence, he denounced this individual or that institution. Day after day he disseminated doctrines of hatred and misanthropy. Day after day, always aggressively audacious, he implanted seeds of bitterness, hatred, and vindictiveness in the hearts and minds of the excitable masses of Paris. But there came an awakening. He who with remorseless zeal had been teaching the lessons of blind, unreasoning, relentless fury was ultimately consumed and destroyed by that very fury which he had conjured up for others, and finally his own head fell into the basket in front of the guillotine, with "none so poor to do him reverence." I merely cite the case of Danton as as apt illustration of the immortal Lincoln's axiom, "You can not fool all the people all the time."

Mr. Chairman, we recall the fact that every tyrant who ever overthrew the liberties of a free people justified himself upon the ground that he alone was the true friend of the people; that he alone was capable of ministering to their welfare; that he alone could alleviate their sufferings and bring them happiness; that he alone could be trusted to work out problems for their salvation; and while loudly vociferating his devotion to the people's cause he was invariably undermining their institutions, creating a distrust of their laws and their officials, in order that he might build up an autocratic governmental machine for himself. The pages of history are replete with instances of that character.

In our own country, with a Constitution and free institutions that have stood the test of a century and a quarter, and have brought peace and happiness and contentment to millions of human beings, there is no need for the indulgence of vituperative invective in any political campaign. Those candidates for official station who, in their mad lust for power, indulge in it, are to be looked upon with suspicious fear, lest ultimately they prove to be but masquerading tyrants. And the rule is the same whether they who indulge in the practice seek offices that are exalted and powerful, or humble and inconsequential. It is proper that great political questions and propositions of government should be discussed and argued before the people. They should receive all the light that can be thrown upon the problems that confront them. What an illuminating page in the political history of our country is the joint discussion between Lincoln and Douglas. They were giants in intellect. They were masters of debate. They were teachers of the people, and each has won a well-earned niche in the temple of fame. They did not resort to personal abuse. They did not indulge in vindictive vituperation. They did not descend to the tactics of the charlatan or the demagogue. And their fame is securely established in the hearts of their admiring countrymen. One of Lincoln's greatest attributes was his unvarying rule to state his opponent's position on any question with absolute fairness. That trait alone disclosed the nobleness of his character. He taught us that even in politics we can afford to be fair. And many of our present-day politicians who quote the sayings of the Great Emancipator on every possible occasion, and with great volubility, ought particularly to pattern after his example in this matter of fairness. Personal abuse is not, and never has been, argument. Whenever it is resorted to it is invariably a confession of the weakness of his cause on the part of him who utters it. It always reminds me of the story that is told of an old practitioner who was looked upon as one of the leaders of the bar of his State. He had a young protégé who had just been admitted to practice by the Supreme Court. Giving him some fatherly advice on the subject of professional ethics, the old lawyer continued: "If you are trying a case before a jury and the facts are with you while the law is against you, dwell hard on the facts; on the other hand, if the law is with you while the facts are against you, dwell hard on the law. But if neither the law nor the facts are with you, abuse your opponent." [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to vilify or abuse anyone, but as a friend and sincere admirer of the present Chief Executive of our country I desire to briefly call attention to his record of achievement during his incumbency of the high office which he has filled with signal credit to his country as well as to himself. I may begin by saying that I have not always agreed with him in his policies. I have spoken and voted against measures that he indorsed and recommended. But I have never questioned his purity of purpose, and I thank God that I am broad-minded enough to respect his views, even as I know that he respects mine. If he has erred it has not been through a lack of patriotism or devotion to his country's welfare. All men at times err, but every man has the right to ask that he be judged by the entire record and not by an isolated instance.

When the present occupant of the White House was inaugurated he fell heir to a number of vexatious problems that came to him as legacies from the preceding administration. Although there had been constant clamor for a tariff revision during the administration of his predecessor, nothing had been attempted in that direction. This, therefore, was the first and foremost problem that had to be grappled with. The Dingley law, which had revived our industries and for a considerable period of time filled our Treasury, was found inadequate to meet the new financial requirements by reason of the rapidly increasing expenditures of the Government. And so a revision of the tariff had been promised in all the party platforms of 1908. The outgoing administration had left a depleted Treasury. There was a deficit of $58,000,000. Unless the constant drain upon the Treasury should be checked by proper remedial legislation, there was danger that it might become necessary to issue bonds during a period of profound peace, as had been done during the Cleveland administration.

The President, therefore, immediately after his inauguration, called an extraordinary session of the Sixty-first Congress, and in the early part of August, 1909, the Payne tariff bill was enacted into law. It was not satisfactory to everybody, but in that respect it was not different from any previous tariff law, for no tariff law that has ever been enacted was satisfactory to everybody. And the Payne law was framed just as other tariff laws had been framed theretofore. The importers submitted their views before the Ways and Means Committee. The manufacturers and producers of this country expressed their views before the committee, and after weighing such facts as had been submitted the majority membership of the committee reported the bill to the House of Representatives. Here it was debated pro and con, and finally it went to the Senate, where further discussion was had before it was eventually written upon the statute books. It is not a perfect law. No tariff law has ever been a perfect law. It made substantial reductions in many schedules. It largely increased the free list. And it has served one very important purpose—it has again filled the Treasury of the United States; and in lieu of the deficit of $58,000,000 bequeathed by the preceding administration there was a surplus of $36,000,000 at the end of the last fiscal year. And no American industry has been crippled, nor has a single American wage earner been thrown out of employment by reason of its enactment.

The President realized at an early date that the existing method of framing such an important measure of legislation as a tariff law was unscientific; that the information upon which the proposed changes were predicated was apt to be inaccurate and misleading. And so he wisely recommended to Congress the appointment of a bipartisan board or commission whose duty it should be to investigate the cost of production of any given commodity both at home and abroad. Thus it was expected an adequate measure of protection to American industries and American labor might be given, based upon the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, plus a reasonable profit to the manufacturer or the producer. If I mistake not, the entire country was loud in its praise of the President's proposal, and Congress enacted it into law. At Sioux City, Iowa, on September 3, 1910, Col. Roosevelt gave the President full credit for having advocated the legislation for a tariff commission, as follows:

I was particularly pleased with what the President [Taft] said in his letter on the subject of the Tariff Commission. A number of Senators and Congressmen have for some years advocated this as the proper method of dealing with the tariff, and I am glad the country now seems awakened to the idea that a tariff commission offers the only solution of the problem which is both rational and insures the absence of jobbery. The President [Taft] from the beginning advocated this commission.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the Tariff Board was fully justifying all the hopeful predictions that had been made for it by the friends of scientific tariff revision. But the Democratic Party does not believe in a protective tariff. The leaders of that party on this floor have repeatedly stated during the present session that they believe in a tariff for revenue only. Their party platform, adopted at Baltimore on July 2, 1912, goes to the ridiculous length of proclaiming the protective tariff unconstitutional. Buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest markets seems to be present-day Democratic doctrine, even though it shall result in the closing down of every factory and workshop in the land. A tariff for revenue only does not require scientific and accurate data as to the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, and so the Democratic majority in the House undertook to abolish the Tariff Board. But, like Banquo's ghost, the Tariff Board will not down, and our Democratic friends will have ample opportunity to discover the sentiment of the country in that regard before many more weeks shall have rolled around.

Mr. Chairman, numerous unscrupulous charlatans and demagogues, in the hope of riding into political power, no matter how untrue the statements they make, have been claiming that the Payne bill is responsible for the increase in the cost of living. Why, sir, the cost of living kept increasing constantly during the preceding administration, long before the present tariff law was enacted. Nor are the people of this country the only ones to have felt the hardship. In free-trade England the high cost of living is just as acute a complaint as it is in the United States. Indeed, everyone knows that the high cost of living is a universal complaint that stretches across the face of Europe even into China and Japan. And all those areas and countries are beyond the jurisdiction of the Payne Tariff Act. Many causes have contributed to the result, and I regret that I have not the time to go into the question more fully.

Another prominent feature of the Payne tariff law is the corporation tax. This provision was generally commended at the time of its adoption by the masses of our countrymen, and the President was given due praise and credit for his share in securing the legislation. The Supreme Court has sustained its constitutionality, and it yields approximately $30,000,000 of revenue per annum.

There has been so much misrepresentation and so much abuse of the present Chief Executive in some quarters that I deem it a duty to recall these matters to the attention of my fellow citizens lest they forget.

The growth of trusts during the administration of the President's predecessor had been enormous. In the period between 1901 and 1909 they had expanded from a capitalization of $3,000,000,000 to over $30,000,000,000. There were then 149 of these industrial combinations in this country. During that period we heard a great deal said about trust busting and trust busters. While a few suits had been brought, beyond the so-called Northern Securities case, which was instituted to prevent a combination of transcontinental railroads with extensive mileage, none of these suits had been pressed to a final issue in the courts. The prosecution of malefactors of great wealth was another legacy that was inherited from the former administration. True, the suit against the Standard Oil Trust was begun by the preceding administration. And it is only fair to that administration to say that in deciding the case the Supreme Court followed exactly the prayer of the complaint and granted the very relief that that administration had asked for. During the administration of President Taft suit after suit has been instituted against illegal combinations in restraint of trade under the Sherman antitrust law. He found the law upon the statute books upon his accession to the Presidency. It had not been vigorously enforced prior to his induction into the office. With characteristic intrepidity he began to enforce it without fear or favor. By his courage in enforcing the Sherman law he has incurred the active hatred of the trust magnates, and we find the latter actively engaged in trying to encompass his defeat for reelection. They are contributing time and money to his political opponents. That fact alone ought to convince the plain people of the President's absolute sincerity in his effort to make all men obey the laws of our country.

It was during President Taft's administration that the notorious Sugar Trust frauds were unearthed. This rapacious trust, not content with taking the lion's share of the 20 per cent reduction on Cuban raw sugar after the passage of the Cuban reciprocity law in 1904, in its greed for greater dividends resorted to a system of bribery of Government employees. These employees were bribed by this trust to induce them to return false weights on the imported raw sugar at the customhouses of several of our large seaports. The practice had been going on for a number of years during the preceding administration. Only a short time after the inauguration of President Taft the frauds were unearthed and the whole scheme of theft and bribery was exposed. Prosecutions of the guilty participants in the crooked transactions promptly ensued and millions of dollars that had been fraudulently withheld were covered into the National Treasury. No wonder the trust magnates are opposed to the reelection of the President. No wonder they are subscribing funds to defeat him. No wonder they are giving their aid, moral and financial, to his enemies. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Among the many trusts that have been proceeded against by the present administration is the Publishers', or Magazine, Trust. There is probably no medium through which so much abuse has been disseminated against President Taft as through the muckraking magazines of this country. They have tried in every possible manner to poison the minds of the people against him. Their attacks have been unremitting and vitriolic. Why? I do not suppose that they are actuated by motives of self-interest. Of course not. The President sent a message to Congress pointing out that of the annual deficit in the Post Office Department $63,000,000 thereof was due to the fact that the magazine publishers were paying that amount less than the actual cost to the Government of carrying their magazines through the mails. In other words, these publishers were the recipients of special privileges to the extent of $63,000,000 a year; and as they had been inveighing against special privileges the members of the Magazine Trust may have felt a bit aggrieved at the President when he so fearlessly exposed their particular form of special privilege.

Of course I do not pretend to say that is the direct cause of the attack of the muckrakers against him. But it may have helped somewhat. And then, also, the Attorney General commenced a suit against this trust as being an illegal combination in restraint of trade. It developed during the court proceedings that there was an agreement among the members of the trust to maintain a blacklist upon which was placed the name of every retail dealer in periodicals who dared to sell any publication issued by the trust at a less sum than the publisher's printed retail price. Think of it! The uplifters maintaining a blacklist! And the President dared to expose the fact. "Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!" The present administration exposed you, and in your hatred of the man who had the temerity to enforce the law you fill your pages with abusive vituperation in order to cover up your own iniquity. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Under the preceding administration an effort was made to join the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico and admit them into the Union as one State. A decided insurrection broke out in the ranks of the Republican Party in Congress against this administrative program. This was in the Fifty-ninth Congress. An earlier insurrection had broken out in the Fifty-seventh Congress over the attempt to pass the Cuban reciprocity bill. So that insurgency in the Republican Party first manifested itself in the former administration and was another legacy to which President Taft fell heir when he became the occupant of the White House. But, happily, under the present administration both Arizona and New Mexico have been admitted to separate statehood; they have added two resplendent stars to the union of blue in Old Glory, and each will be enabled to work out that splendid destiny which those who fought and voted against the unholy alliance in defiance of the mandate of the then administration so confidently predicted.

Mr. Chairman, it would take entirely too long to recount all the beneficial achievements and the really progressive legislation that has been written into law since the inauguration of President Taft on March 4, 1909. It would take altogether too much time to recite in detail all the various activities of the present administration. Suffice it if I briefly recapitulate some of the more important measures and policies which have been approved or inaugurated by the present Chief Executive: Postal-savings banks have been established, in which $30,000,000 of the people's money have been deposited thus far. The Post Office Department, for the first time in the history of the Government, was conducted without deficit. Railroads were prevented from putting rate increases into effect without the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. While this legislation was pending an effort was made on the part of certain trunk lines to increase the rates. A temporary injunction was immediately obtained by the Attorney General, and by agreement with the railroad presidents they did not put the increases into effect, but waited until the foregoing legislation was enacted. They then applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission for permission, under the new law, to make the increase, but their application was denied by the commission. The railroads roundly denounced the President and his Attorney General for the stand they took in protecting the rights of shippers. The white-slave traffic has been vigorously and effectively attacked, and severe punishment has been meted out to those engaged in the nefarious business. A Bureau of Mines has been established, so as to safeguard the lives of miners. The Panama Canal is being rushed to early completion without scandal of any kind. The canal is to be fortified. American ships in the coastwise trade are to enjoy free tolls. Railroad-owned ships are to be excluded from the canal. Our foreign markets have been extended so that our foreign trade during the last fiscal year reached the enormous aggregate of $3,000,000,000, while the balance of trade in our favor totaled $550,000,000, the largest excess of exports over imports in the history of our country.

An income-tax amendment to the Federal Constitution has been submitted to the States and now lacks only the affirmative action of the legislatures of three or four additional States to secure its promulgation as a part of the fundamental law of the land. An amendment for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people has been submitted to the States for their ratification. A boiler-inspection law to safeguard human life has been put into operation. A Childrens' Bureau has been established. A Commission of Fine Arts has been created. The Lighthouse Establishment has been reorganized and a Bureau of Lighthouses has been created. A parole law for Federal prisoners has been put into operation. The employers' liability law has been sustained in the courts and its provisions have been extended so that employees of railroad carriers may bring suits in any district in which the defendant was doing business at the time of the commencement of the action. A measure for the issuance of bonds for the completion of irrigation projects in the West has been approved. The open-door policy in China has been maintained and extended. Millions of dollars have been saved to the taxpayers by the inauguration of modernized business methods in the various executive departments of the Government. Bucket shops and get-rich-quick concerns have been destroyed and put out of business. There have been extensions of the safety-appliance laws. Laws for the publication of campaign contributions and expenses before and after elections, and which include primary as well as general elections, have been approved. A Court of Commerce has been created, thus lessening delay in litigation arising out of decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission from an average of over two years in each case to an average of six months in each case. A Court of Customs Appeals has been created, thereby stopping undervaluations to a large extent.

Laws have been extended and enforced for practical conservation of natural resources. The civil service has been extended by Executive order, and what was deemed an attempt to break down the existing system by providing for a seven-year tenure was promptly vetoed. A law creating a commission on industrial relations to investigate labor conditions and the relations of employers and employees was recommended by the President and will probably be enacted. Efforts to preserve the fur-seal herds in Bering Sea have been undertaken. An act giving the Department of Agriculture the power to declare a quarantine against infected plants and their products, nursery stock, and seeds is of inestimable value to the agriculturists and horticulturists of the country. Successful efforts have been made to wipe out and prevent the spread of epidemic diseases.

A direct American mail route to Australia via Honolulu and Pagopago has been reestablished. The construction and maintenance of an adequate and efficient Navy has been constantly urged.

A law compelling the installation of radiotelegraph devices on ocean-going vessels and a competent and sufficient force to operate them has been approved, thereby lessening the probability of another marine accident similar to the sinking of the Titanic.

The danger of a return to reactionary laws and practices, such as brought about the downfall of the Grecian and Roman Republics long before the birth of Christ, and that some of the so-called progressives of our day are lauding as panaceas, has been called to the attention of the American people, and the fallacy of such doctrines has been exposed.

And the President, fervently believing in the efficiency of the Federal Constitution and the necessity for following its mandates, has constantly regarded it as the true beacon light by which to steer the Ship of State. He has never allowed his personal inclinations to swerve him from what he deemed the true path of duty.

He has met every crisis that has arisen during his administration with firmness and resolution. The bluff and bluster of political enemies have not made him flinch an iota from his determination to do that which he believes to be for the general welfare of all classes in this Republic. He has never mistaken transient political hysteria for sound political doctrine. The wail of the disappointed office seeker and the cry of the lawbreaker have not frightened him into complacent compliance with their demands. The fear of losing political support has never alarmed him into violating his oath of office. In short, Mr. Chairman, he stands for law and order and he battles for the right. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HENRY of Texas, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3045) to provide for agricultural entries on oil and gas lands.

PENSIONS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I have always believed in an efficient navy, and I have not changed my mind in that regard. I favor an efficient navy for the same reason that I am opposed to a large standing army. A large standing army may become a menace to the liberties of the country. Absolute obedience is the primary duty of the soldier. He has no discretion. To him the word of his superior is the law. Civil authorities, local interests, public rights are of no avail. If he is ordered by his commander to take possession of a voting booth, to suppress an election, to empty a parliament house, or to upset a government, his first duty is to obey. Patriotism, loyalty to his country or to liberty have no place in his program; he only recognizes the rule of obedience to the commands of his superior. The professional soldier is useful—indeed, necessary—in time of war, but a standing army beyond reasonable necessity for police duty is a standing menace in time of peace. Therefore I am for an efficient navy, among other reasons because it renders a large standing army unnecessary.

I am aware that sailors have the same duty of obedience that soldiers have, but there is much less danger to the civil order from sailors, as their duty takes them to the sea, where they can not interfere in local affairs, while the contrary is true of the soldier.

Our geographical position renders us practically immune from foreign attack by land. Therefore any foreign attack upon us is apt to be from the sea. As security against such attack we need an efficient defensive navy.

Moved by these reasons, I voted against my party for two battleships when the last naval appropriation bill was before this House.

Why have I changed? Why do I vote for but one battleship now?

Mr. Speaker, I have what seems to me convincing reasons for not voting for two battleships, and I am in grave doubt whether I ought to vote for any, but I am willing to resolve the doubt in favor of one battleship, and will cast my vote for one.

Have I changed the views I have just expressed? Not at all. It is because I am for an efficient navy that I have changed my vote as to battleships. It is because I am convinced that battleships of the type we have been and are building do not constitute an efficient navy that I vote for only one and that makes me uncertain whether I should vote for even one.

I am almost convinced that the building of the present type of battleships is more in the interest of the Steel Trust and the Armor Trust than for the safety of the country or in the interest of the American people.

The only battle between ships of modern construction worthy of mention, or which really tested their fighting capacity, is the Battle of the Sea of Japan on May 27 and 28, 1905, between the Russian and Japanese fleets. In that battle Russia had 8 battleships and Japan 4, Russia had 3 coast-defense armor-clad ships, Japan none; Russia, 3 armored cruisers, and Japan 8, besides other craft. In the matter of armament, Japan had 16 12-inch guns to Russia's 26; one 12-inch gun to Russia's 15; no 9-inch guns, while Russia had 8. Russia had 45 guns of 9-inch caliber or over to Japan's 17. The Japanese had a large preponderance in guns of 8 inches and under. Their ships, also, averaged over 2 knots greater speed than the Russian ships. In the matter of bravery, there was little to choose. The men on each side were as brave as men can be. What was the result? Out of 38 Russian ships all told 22 were sunk and only 2 escaped.

Of the Japanese fleet three torpedo boats were sunk and not one single ship was incapacitated for future service.

How can this result be explained? Concede superior skill to the Japanese as well as superior speed to their ships and it does not explain the result.

Capt. Semenoff, of the Russian Navy, who was on board the Suvoroff, the Russian flagship, during the battle, with no specific duties to perform, took notes during the fight, and afterwards expanded and published them in book form under the title of the Battle of Tsushima. He gives a vivid and intensely interesting account of the battle, which, it seems to me, is pretty convincing in some respects. He attributes the success of the Japanese to the use of explosive shells, with which the Japanese were well supplied, while the Russians had none of them. Capt. Semenoff says:

> The difference between our main force and that of the Japanese was very material. The oldest of Togo's 12 ships—the Fuji—was two years younger than the Sissoy, which among our 12 best came sixth in seniority. Their speed was one and one-half times as great as ours, but their chief superiority lay in their new shells, of which we had no inkling.

Speaking of these shells he says:

> It seemed as if these were mines, not shells, which were striking the ship's side and falling on the deck. They burst as soon as they touched anything—the moment they encountered the least resistance in their flight.

They even exploded when they struck the water. They tore in pieces everything in the vicinity when they exploded, and he says of the result:

> Such havoc would never be caused by the simple impact of a shell, still less by splinters. It could only be caused by the force of the explosion.

He quotes an officer from the Oslyabya as to the effect on that ship as follows:

> Three shells, one after another, in the same identical spot. Imagine it! All of them in the same place! All on the water line under the forward turret. Not a hole, but a regular gateway. She almost keeled over at once, then settled under the water.

Again I quote:

> The four 75-millimeter guns had been torn off their mountings, and in vain I looked for marks of direct hits. None could be seen. The havoc had clearly been caused by the force of the explosion and not by the impact of the shell. How was this? Neither mines nor pyroxylene were stored in the battery, so the enemy's shells must have exploded with the force of mines.

While my information is that the navies of Japan, England, and Germany are supplied with these explosive shells, it is most singular that our Navy is entirely without them and without guns for throwing them. We have only the armor-piercing shells, although the Government made a number of tests with Gathmann high-explosive shells as long ago as 1899. On February 25 of that year Asst. Naval Constructor Dashiel appeared before the Naval Committee of the Senate and made the following statement in answer to questions by Senators:

> Senator PERKINS. What do you think of his (Gathmann's) device for the detonator and primer?
>
> Mr. DASHIEL. I think it is ingenious, efficient, and thoroughly safe. I think it would be impossible to set off in the gun the detonator as devised at present. Secondly, if we can permit such a hypothesis, if that detonator were set off in the gun it would do no injury at all. It is so separated from the charge of wet guncotton at the instant of firing that the detonator can be exploded and yet the wet guncotton, which is the principal charge in the shell, will not be injured in any way.
>
> Senator PERKINS. What are the advantages of the guncotton to repel an enemy or to sink or destroy a ship of war over that of the ordinary shell now used?
>
> Mr. DASHIEL. Taking the case of a 12-inch gun, which is our largest and latest accepted gun, we have a photograph of the results at Sandy Hook of a 12-inch projectile against the standard thick armor plate. It was a 10-inch plate. That shows a blowing up of a butt and structure such as no 12-inch gunpowder-carrying shell could possibly do. As an example of what a 12-inch shell will do we have the Spanish cruiser Maria Teresa. She was struck by two 12-inch shells. They exploded in her. Therefore, they had the maximum effect. That ship was not so injured but that she could be raised and started for home. Had a 12-inch Gathmann shell exploded, I think it would have carried off her entire stern and everything aft the point of impact. There would have been nothing left on that ship to float.
> Guncotton is the simplest and safest high explosive that we have. It is just as inert as firing wet sand.
>
> Senator HANNA. I should like to ask you whether, as the result of the experiments which you are familiar with and from such information as you have been able to get, you consider that the Gathmann shell has revolutionized the high-explosive business for the use of Army and Navy guns?
>
> Mr. DASHIEL. I do.
>
> Senator HANNA. That is, that it has upset all previous theories, and that the results show that it is not only safe, but is the most efficient destructive for artillery that is known?
>
> Mr. DASHIEL. As I know anything about it, that is the case.
>
> Senator HANNA. You consider that this fuse is entirely safe for use either on land or on deck in the firing of high explosives?
> Mr. DASHIEL. I do.

Mr. O'Neill, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, who consistently, and it seems to me somewhat unfairly, opposed the use of the Gathmann shell, among other reasons, because of the danger of explosion in firing it, unwittingly gives testimony to its tremendous destructive power in a letter to the Secretary of the Navy, dated May 4, 1900.

After giving the results of an explosion of only 25 pounds of guncotton at the Du Pont powder works, he says: "The Gathmann project proposes to use 500 pounds as a charge for a single shell, and the result of a premature explosion can only be imagined, and it is too dreadful to contemplate." Probably so, but suppose it can be safely thrown against or on the enemy's ship? If it can, the reason urged by the bureau chief against the use of it becomes an unanswerable reason in favor of its use.

And Mr. Dashiel's testimony that it can be used with perfect safety is borne out by the experience of the Japanese. What is the probable effect in actual battle of thus ignoring the destructive power of high-explosive shells? Let us see:

According to naval authorities the armor-piercing shells are effective only at a range of 2 or 3 miles. While the large caliber guns can throw shells 7 or 8 miles, yet it is only at the shorter range of 2 or 3 miles they can pierce modern armor. Hence at a greater range than that they are comparatively harmless.

How about the explosive shells at long distances? Semenoff says, and I believe it is conceded, that they explode on contact with anything, even the surface of the water; therefore they can be fired at long range and the shell will be as effective if it hits as if fired at short range. Thus it appears that a ship throwing explosive shells, if a little faster than her adversary, keeps out of effective range, can destroy that adversary, or for that matter a whole fleet at her leisure and with practical immunity to herself.

In a statement before the Naval Committee on March 12, 1912, Mr. W. S. Isham tells of tests made with these different kinds of shells. Two armor-plated ships were chosen for these experiments, the San Marcos and the Puritan. He says:

> They battered away at the San Marcos for two days with armor-piercing shells, and hit the turrets repeatedly, but never once penetrated them or put them out of business.

On the other hand, a single charge of gelatin exploded against the turret put it out of business, and a similar charge hung on the side of the Puritan and exploded there blew in two lengths of armor and sunk the ship in two minutes.

True, Admiral Twining, who was also present before the committee, insists that she did not sink for about 24 hours after the explosion of the charge. Even though he be right as to the time, it still demonstrates the terrible effect of the explosion and its superiority as a destructive agent over armor-piercing shells; but my understanding of the experiment is that it was made in shallow water, only 2 feet below the ship's keel; that the damaged end at once settled to the bottom, and that it was 24 hours before the entire keel settled down.

If this be the fact—and I have reason to believe it is—the admiral is scarcely frank in his statement, as it is quite apparent that if the damaged end had not rested on the bottom the whole ship would have promptly settled under the water. Had the Titanic been in shallow water when she struck the iceberg the injured end would have rested on the bottom, but the uninjured end would not have settled down for days. On the other hand, had the Puritan been in deep water when the shell was exploded on her side she would have gone down much quicker than the Titanic did.

Without going into this matter further, does it not seem clear that before constructing more battleships, at an expense of $15,000,000 each, they should be so constructed and so armed as not to invite defeat and become mere burial places for brave men?

Is there not some plan of construction which is better adapted to meet the plan of attack which destroyed the Russian fleet? And should not the whole matter be thoroughly investigated by Congress before appropriating such vast sums of money?

I venture the prediction that the $15,000,000 about to be appropriated for one battleship would in the near future build three or even five marine fighting machines, any one of which would destroy a fleet of the present type of battleships.

But this is not the only objection, nor is it the most important one.

Conditions point to changes in naval warfare as radical as the change from wooden ships to iron ones, or from sailing ships to steamers.

Not alone has the submarine and the torpedo rendered huge floating batteries of very doubtful utility, but the aeroplane and the dirigible balloon have come to stay, and it requires no argument to prove that the charge of gelatin which sunk the Puritan when hung against its side would sink the Texas when dropped upon its deck.

Then, again, it is well known that oil is being substituted for coal as fuel for ships. What changes in construction should be made to meet this radical change in fuel?

Or, more important yet, what is the probability of ships being propelled by the internal-combustion engine such as now drives the automobile? In the latter event, all the boiler space and nearly all of the fuel space needed in the battleship of to-day can be eliminated, the machinery of the ship hidden away beyond reach, smokestacks abolished, and thousands of tons of coal space eliminated. If the internal-combustion engine is practical for maritime purposes it will permit of a type of ship somewhat on the lines of an enlarged monitor, or even of the Merrimac type with a sloping roof heavily armored to protect against explosives dropped from the air as well as those fired from ships or batteries.

The situation certainly warrants and should receive thorough congressional consideration.

But it may be said that the officers of the Navy are the best judges as to these matters and that we should yield to their judgment.

It would at first thought appear as if that should be so, but more careful thought will, I think, change that view.

The Navy, like other Government services, is divided into bureaus, an apparently necessary evil in governmental affairs. Among the various bureaus of that department is a Bureau of Ordnance. Is it likely that the heads of the Ordnance Bureau would admit that any device pertaining to that bureau not of their own discovery could be an improvement? New devices, especially those intended to supersede appliances in the use of which they are expert, are received with great reluctance.

A large proportion of the ridicule heaped on Ericsson's Monitor came from the naval experts, but the Monitor revolutionized naval warfare just the same. Seamen outdid landsmen in denouncing Fulton's scheme for propelling vessels by steam as utterly impracticable. Armor plate and armor-piercing shells did not originate with naval bureaus, nor did the breech-loading gun or the submarine boat meet with favor at their hands. These had to force their way into use in spite of the bureaus, rather than through their assistance.

Whatever the reasons may be, the fact remains a fact that the country need not look to the officers of the Navy for initiative in the construction of marine fighting machines which will meet the new conditions under which sea fighting will have to be done. Hence, a thorough investigation of the whole situation should be conducted, not by naval experts, but by Congress.

I do not forget that there is a class of hopeful, guileless spirits who dream of, and talk about, universal peace. It is a very pretty subject to grow eloquent upon, but there is scarcely one of those eloquent gentlemen who would not knock you down if he could, should you kick him in the shins in anger, or spit in his face in anger, or even should you call him a vile name in anger. The Nation is mainly made up of people who would do the same thing under similar provocation, and so are the other nations, and the aggregate is very likely to be, and to act, like the individuals of which it is composed.

So long as this remains true, so long as the average individual retains a considerable portion of the "old Adam" in him, so long as human pride and greed and ambition and envy and the spirit of revenge exist in men, so long will individual and national quarrels continue, and just so long will universal peace and universal disarmament be nice subjects for academic declamation, a fine ideal to work to, a condition to be hoped for, but hardly expected; in short, what the late Senator Ingalls would call an iridescent dream.

In the meantime we must take ordinary precaution for the national safety, based on human nature, as it is, rather than as we might wish it to be; and in doing this we must be careful not to be like the mole, boring ahead in the dark, pushing right on in a self-satisfied way toward a fatal trap believing we have an effective Navy when in fact we have not. We must reconnoiter the situation; we must carefully examine the ground ahead; we must study every new condition; and when we have intelligently determined by a mercilessly thorough investigation what the true facts of the situation are and what the exigencies require for the construction of a really effective navy, then I am ready to vote in favor of the necessary appropriation for its construction, but till that is done I shall vote for only one battleship, and I shall do that with much reluctance, and in the hope that before it is contracted for better methods of construction will prevail.

In concluding, I quote a London dispatch, which appeared in the Washington Herald a few days ago, which furnishes plenty of food for reflection:

LONDON, August 10, 1912.

No vessel that came to England in time of peace has probably ever been the indirect cause of so much anxiety and alarm to the Government as the big Danish motor ship Selandia, which arrived here the first time four months ago and which has just left the port of London for her second trip to East India. The success of this vessel means that oil will displace coal in the navy, that the internal-combustion engine will banish the steam engine, and that in a comparatively few years every battleship and cruiser in the British Navy will be antiquated and outclassed, for not only will motor battleships be less vulnerable and steered with must greater ease, but they will be able to carry heavier guns and armor, freed from the enormous weight of boilers and coal. It has not relieved the public mind in England that the Kaiser's friend, Herr Ballin, of the Hamburg-American Line, has bought the only other large motor ship from the Danish East Asiatic Co., and that the results of all the tests which it will be put through will be at the disposal of the German Government, that in the strict secrecy of Germany's naval dockyards may put down and finish motor battleships before the fact of this may become known in England.

Just as Great Britain had to build a new navy at the time when steam replaced sails, she will have to do so again now that oil is about to drive out coal; but while a country rich in coal, like England, had the advantage when the former change came, she will now be severely handicapped, because nowhere in the British Empire is oil found in such quantities as will be needed before long. To the dread of not being able to get food supplies in times of war, which has long been haunting England, now comes the dread of being cut off from the supply of oil abroad, which is to insure the fighting strength of England's floating line of defense.

Quick and alert as First Lord of the Admiralty Mr. Churchill always is, he immediately grasped the importance of the new invention, and he was among the very first to inspect the Selandia during her first visit, and it is also he who has seen the necessity of appointing a royal commission to decide what is to be done on the eve of a new revolution on sea.

Another scare, and this time not a newspaper-made one, has been added to the many forebodings which haunt the soul of the poor Englishman, who is asking himself if, having lost his world supremacy in sports, he is also about to lose forever his naval supremacy.

A good healthy scare is sometimes very desirable. There is nothing more to be dreaded than a false sense of security, and that is a disease from which I fear we are suffering just now. Relying on the present type of battleship and armament is but cultivating the same sense of security which the ostrich feels when its head is hidden under the sand while the danger approaches nearer and nearer.

Let us ignore the Steel Trust and the other trusts and by careful and thorough investigation find out the way to build naval fighting machines which will conform to existing conditions and which will constitute a really efficient navy.

[Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, as there has been some controversy relative to the naval program and the legislation for the Navy at the present session of Congress, I think it appropriate that I make a statement relative to the provisions made for the Navy at the present session of Congress.

The naval appropriation bill, recently passed and in the hands of the President for his approval, provides one first-class battleship carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessel of its class, to have the highest practicable speed and the greatest desirable radius of action. The cost of this battleship will be about $15,000,000, and will be about 31,300 tons normal displacement, and will carry twelve 14-inch guns, and when completed will be the most powerful and effective battleship afloat.

The bill also provides for two fuel ships, or colliers, six torpedo-boat destroyers, eight submarine torpedo boats, one tender to destroyers, one submarine tender, and authority to convert a collier into a repair ship. It also provides for an additional 4,000 men to the enlisted personnel of the Navy and 400 marines and 13 marine officers, and also 30 paymasters. The bill also makes provision for modernizing the guns, projectiles, and turrets of the ships of the Navy so as to bring the ordnance of the Navy to its highest state of perfection and efficiency. It also provides for enlarging the dry dock at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, to a length of 1,000 feet, thus making it the largest dock in the possession of the United States and capable of docking the largest ships built or contemplated and affording splendid docking facilities for the Pacific Ocean.

The bill also provides for a world-wide wireless radio system at a cost of $1,000,000, with stations located in the Isthmian Canal Zone, on the California coast, Hawaiian Islands, American Samoa, the Island of Guam, and in the Philippine Islands, thus belting the world with wireless communication and keeping the ships of the Navy at all times in communication with Washington and with each other and with all important stations, and in addition affording communication and protection for humanity in every sea.

The bill also provides for the establishment of a dental corps in the Navy for the care and preservation of the health of the officers and enlisted men, and it also establishes a medical reserve corps and a dental reserve corps.

The bill contains legislation amending the laws relative to the retired list of the officers of the Navy and will materially reduce the expenses of the retired list.

The bill also contains legislation codifying, revising, and amending legislation with reference to the enlistment of men in the Navy, the result of which will be greatly to improve the status of the enlisted men and effect great economies in administration, and it also contains other legislation for efficiency and economy of administration in the Navy.

The Congress also passed an act commissioning as ensigns the midshipmen upon graduation from Annapolis.

An impartial review and a just consideration of the legislation of the present session of Congress in behalf of the Navy will justify the statement that the present session of Congress has enacted legislation of a constructive character and of a wise and helpful influence, which has not been exceeded in any Congress for many years and makes a record of legislation in behalf of the Navy in which the Congress and the people may feel a just pride and satisfaction.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Stuart, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to inform the House of Representatives that the bill (H. R. 20321) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, failed to pass the Senate over the veto of the President of the United States, not receiving the necessary two-thirds vote.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 5294) to establish in the Bureau of Statistics, in the Department of Agriculture, a division of markets.

PENSIONS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a letter which I have received from a gentleman relating to the high cost of living and suggesting a remedy therefor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the letter referred to:

303 NINTH AVENUE,
Leavenworth, Kans., August 8, 1912.

The Hon. MICHAEL DONOHOE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In addition to what you recently said before the House on the "increased cost of living," I beg to call your attention to a letter of mine inclosing communications, which I claim will greatly remedy this world-wide malady.

The letter I refer to is now filed with the Department of Commerce and Labor.

I am advocating the utilizing of the surplus land alongside of our public highways and railways for growing fruit trees and bushes. This could be done at very small expense to the comparative good it would do the community in a few years.

According to current press reports the Government has 50 men setting out timber trees on Pikes Peak. It is said, "they will make a fine showing in 10 years more."

However, I am inclined to think that if those 50 men were setting out fruit trees along some of our highways, that would make a better showing in three years than a probable forest fire "10" years hence.

Another proposition I am introducing, is the relief of homesteaders, whereby instead of the Government giving away a homestead of 160 acres valued at, say, $10 per acre, or a total valuation of $1,600, why not give 40 acres—all one man can handle—in addition to transportation, provisions, lumber, implements, etc., to a valuation of $600, making a total valuation of only $1,000.

In this case holding the applicant responsible to remain on the homestead for three years, on the same principle whereby the soldier is required to remain in that branch of service until his enlistment expires. (I have had three years in the ranks myself.)

The man who files for a 160-acre homestead is going to first consider whether or not he is "rich" enough to hold it down until he can raise his first crop. In most cases if he is rich enough to do so, he is rich enough to live comfortably in the city and prefers to do so. Thus it is that 60,000,000 of acres of unappropriated unreserved lands are standing idle in the United States, while people everywhere are crying out for work, for homes, for bread, and are unable to help themselves to where they could be a great benefit to themselves as well as to others.

This year fruits of various kinds are selling at $2 per crate, and I want to emphasize the fact that the demand can not be supplied at that price. What will the poor people do who are unable to buy fruit, those who, under my proposition, would go out along the highways this summer and gather the fruit and prepare it for winter use.

It is a question to me as to which will be the worst, the increased cost of living, or the length of time it will take Congress to do something after a remedy has been found

Yours, very truly,

JAY A. WORDEN.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I propose to detain the committee but a short time. The other day when we had under consideration in the House the Post Office appropriation bill with Senate amendments, I moved to concur in the Senate amendment known as the Bourne amendment, providing for a parcel post, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] moved to amend my motion by substituting another parcel-post proposition, which I understand was partially prepared—I do not know to what extent—by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], in collaboration with the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS].

On the floor the other day, in private conversation, several gentlemen who have expressed a desire to me to vote for a parcel post stated that they had been informed that the Bourne Senate amendment did not provide for a parcel post which would cover agricultural products. I stated to the gentlemen who talked to me that it did so provide. I did not know the authority of the statement that it did so provide, and do not now know what the authority was, but I find in the RECORD of yesterday a speech made by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], presenting a comparison of the Moon proposition with the Bourne proposition. I have not had an opportunity to complete the reading of the speech, which no doubt is full of interesting and valuable matter, but my desire to complete the reading was somewhat lessened by reading the first comparison which was made, in which occurs this statement:

House substitute.	Senate section.
MATTER MAILABLE.	MATTER MAILABLE.
Farm and factory products and matter carried by express and fourth-class mail matter.	Fourth-class mail only; excludes farm and factory products.

The Bourne amendment commences this way:

That hereafter fourth-class mail matter shall embrace all matter not now embraced by law in either the first, second, or third class, not exceeding 11 pounds in weight nor greater in size than 72 inches in length and girth combined, nor in form or kind likely to injure the person of any post-office employee or damage the mail equipment or other mail matter, and not of a character perishable within the period reasonably required for transportation and delivery.

In the parcel-post bill which I introduced some time ago, and which was in the main taken from the parcel-post bill previously introduced by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] and some others who had worked upon the matter, I particularly stated that we included agricultural products.

Now, there are two ways of doing that. One is by making a statement that you include agricultural products in fourth-class mail matter and the other is by stating what you exclude in determining what is fourth-class mail matter.

The Bourne amendment includes everything, all kinds of articles—agricultural, mineral, manufactured, not manufactured—everything under the sun or in the earth that is not excluded by this language:

Not exceeding 11 pounds in weight, or greater in size than 72 inches in length and girth combined, nor in form or kind likely to injure the person of any postal employee, or damage the mail equipment or other mail matter, and not of a character perishable within a period reasonably required for transportation and delivery.

The gentlemen who said this did not include agricultural products were not very careful in their reading of the English language.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The gentleman is now reading from what is commonly known as the Bourne amendment?

Mr. MANN. From the Bourne amendment. If the Bourne amendment had said that hereafter fourth-class mail matter shall embrace all mail matter not now embraced by law in either the first, second, or third class of existing mail matter, it would have excluded agricultural products. But it says that fourth-class mail matter shall embrace all matter not now embraced in first, second, and third classes. That includes everything, and is a far more inclusive proposition than it is to say that you include agricultural products. And yet the statement was made all over the floor of this House, and is made in the speech of the distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], that the Bourne amendment does not include agricultural products. Here is a new definition of fourth-class mail matter. First-class matter consists of the letter mail; second-class matter consists of certain newspaper and magazine mail; third-class matter consists of certain circulars, books, and package mail under the existing law.

Mr. MURDOCK. And seeds.

Mr. MANN. Now, under this definition, fourth-class mail matter includes everything else there is that is not too large, either in weight or girth or length, or that will not injure the mail matter or the employees, or that will keep while being transported. Yet we are told by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], who is sincerely entitled to be considered an expert on the subject, and whom many believe to be the leading expert on the subject, that this would not include agricultural products. When I got that far in the gentleman's speech I stopped, because, I said, "What is the use of reading the comparison between these two bills any further when the gentleman who makes the comparison has not read the Bourne bill?" I yield to my friend from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] for an explanation.

Mr. LEWIS. I will wait until the gentleman is through.

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes to reply to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. LEWIS. I can quite understand the misapprehension of the gentleman from Illinois on this subject, in view of the very great field of labor he endeavors to occupy, and which he does occupy so well.

There is a history connected with this subject. What is fourth-class matter at the present time? It is any matter that can be put in the mail bag without, first, injuring itself; second, injuring anything else in the mail bag; or third, injuring the mail bag, which is an equivalent expression for "equipment" in these bills. Mail equipment is made up of mail bags.

The Post Office Department have had occasion for a generation to interpret the fourth-class provision, and in the course of departmental interpretation they have indicated specifically the articles that are now admissible to fourth-class mail. Gentlemen can find the articles by name in any postal guide they may consult. I will say to the House that under their interpretation of the clause, as it now reads, only queen bees and dried fruits in the way of agricultural products are admissible to the mails, because almost any other agricultural product, if put in the bag (keep the bag in mind in this matter; it is what is meant by "equipment"; and it is the test of the sense of this argument) would injure itself, would injure other contents of the mail bag, or would injure the mail bag.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

Mr. RODDENBERY. If a constituent of mine should decide to send me in a small box two Georgia pecans or four Tennessee ground peas, and put the requisite stamps on the box, would they not come through the mail?

Mr. LEWIS. As fourth-class matter? I understand not, according to the interpretation of the department, because in the course of things a matter of that kind shipped in that way in the mail bag, the other contents might be liable to get injured; that is, injure other contents of the mail bag.

When we come to the definition of fourth-class matter in the Bourne bill, to which the gentleman has referred, we find it is not a new definition at all. It provides that all matter not first, second, or third shall be fourth-class matter, and by its restriction as to its injuring equipment or other mail matter it in effect again provides that nothing shall go in the mail bag that will get hurt itself, like eggs, for example, or will hurt the contents of the mail bag or the mail bag.

The practical view, then, is this: That the Bourne measure ties itself up to the mail bag; the mail bag is not adapted to carrying agricultural products. Agricultural products must have containers of their own; and they must be, as the experience of every Member of the House will suggest, adapted to the natures of farm products? Meanwhile an argument ad hominum might be made. The House realizes that there was some doubt as to whether agricultural products might be included in fourth-class mail, and the gentleman himself included an expression, appropriate and unquestioned in its character, to cover that field, and so the House substitute does now, by saying that factory and agricultural products and matters carried by express companies shall be admissible as parcels.

If those on the Senate side who had charge of the matter of drafting this classification wished to be explicit and exclude all questions of doubt, then they would not have stricken out of the bill the classification inserted in the House that in terms included agricultural and factory products.

The question, of course, is largely academic in the practical situation here now.

This House, I am sure, will take no chances on the question whether agricultural products should be admitted to the mails as parcels when, by inserting language proper and definite, they can make it absolutely clear.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me a minute?

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is true, as I stated before, that in the bill I introduced I specifically named agricultural and factory products. Afterwards it was concluded, so far as I was concerned, that it was better not to confine fourth-class matter in any way, but to make it to embrace all matter that could be produced, subject to the provision that it should not injure the person of the employee or the equipment. It is perfectly patent that the gentleman's statement that injury to equipments would exclude agricultural products is a fancy of the imagination. I know of nothing ordinarily which would be so free from injury to the person and the equipment as would agricultural products.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LEWIS. Does not the gentleman understand that the word "equipment" used in the postal statute means mail bag? If he does not understand that, we are wholly apart.

Mr. MANN. It would undoubtedly include mail bags and other things besides mail bags, but just how anyone can claim that agricultural products, properly packed, would injure a mail bag is a mystery to me. No man of common sense, except the distinguished gentleman from Maryland, who has a great deal of common sense but is obsessed with a different idea, would doubt that the ordinary agricultural product, properly packed, would go through without injury to the mail bag or any other mail equipment or any post-office employee. And if they would not go through that way the gentleman would not be in favor of taking them in the mails. The gentleman has no intention, and no one else has, of putting into the parcel post matter which will injure or destroy the mail equipment. No one desires that, but the limitation of the gentleman is much more narrow than the provision of the Bourne amendment, which permits everything to go in the mails.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I promised to yield first to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] for 10 minutes. I now yield to the gentleman for 10 minutes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, in a discussion of the agricultural bill introduced by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] there were some objections urged by different Members of Congress which I conceived to be good objections to this bill in its present form. At the time when these objections were being urged I had in my possession certain amendments, to which I called attention then, and propose to offer for consideration of the House when this bill is taken up for discussion under the five-minute rule. These amendments will cure the objections offered, and one of the amendments I propose has been accepted by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

In order that the membership of the House may study these amendments and their application to this bill, I desire to get them in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD before the bill is again considered.

Add at end of section 2:

Provided, That the demonstrators shall be appointed by the trustees or corresponding board of governors of the college administering the fund. Said demonstrators shall have not less than five years of practical and successful experience in farming, and shall be over 27 years of age.

Add at end of section 4:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this bill shall be applied in college-course teaching, lectures in colleges, promoting agricultural trains, or in the repair or construction of buildings.

This is a bill providing specifically for demonstration work upon the farm and it should be administered in a way that the farmers, and the farmers alone, can get the benefit of it. There is no conflict between this bill and the Page bill, as some of the gentlemen urge. This bill is specifically for demonstration work upon the farm. It is not for agricultural school education. The Page bill provides agricultural vocational education in agricultural schools in connection with demonstration work. The Lever bill provides for demonstration work on farms, the Page bill is an agricultural-school bill—the former for adults, the latter for youths.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think that whatever is done to benefit the farmer should be done in such a way that the advantages will be general throughout the country? There should be no difference as between the interests of the man who is an urbanite and the man who is a suburbanite, one being dependent upon the other.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I will answer the gentleman's question. In 1800, 4 per cent of the inhabitants of the United States lived in cities of over 2,000 inhabitants. At the present time over half of the population of the United States live in cities of over 2,000 inhabitants. We propose in some way to solve the proposition that will help the farmer, and in helping him to also help the man in the city as well.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman answers my question just as I had hoped he would, and indicates that there ought to be in the proposed law looking to the education of the farmer provision that would enable all of the people to enjoy the benefits of it, and particularly those who live in the cities.

Mr. TRIBBLE. If the gentleman will permit me to say it, I am in favor of the Page bill. It does not conflict with this bill. What we want to do with this bill is to reach the farmer now. The needs of this bill are pressing. It is proper and right to give the boy an agricultural education, and no man in this House advocates with more earnestness agricultural education for the boys than I do, but let us meet the present demands on the farm. It will take years and years for the boys to grow up and give the benefit of their knowledge to the farmer. We want to go to the farmer now and help him at this time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So far as the gentleman goes, he and I thoroughly agree upon this question, but I would like to ask him whether it is not true that the very best field of operation to procure men to work on the farm would be the city, which is already congested with boys qualified to work on the farm if they could be induced to go there?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes; but let me tell the gentleman something. In order to keep the boy on the farm you must show the boy on the farm a profit in farming, and in order to induce the boy to leave the city for the farm you must show him a profit.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I agree with the gentleman there. That is true.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The reason that the country is being depopulated is because there is not sufficient yield in the production on the farm for the farmer to keep abreast with the expensive habits of the times. Conditions have brought about expensive habits on the farm as well as elsewhere, and expensive surroundings are increasing there just as well as they are in cities, and you must show the farmer a profit, you must increase the attractiveness of the farm, and you must bring about better social advantage on the farm. The purpose of this bill is to go direct to the farm and give the farmer the benefits of the information obtained by investigations and experiments made by the Department of Agriculture, schools, and experiment stations, and give actual demonstrations on his farm.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to have the allurements of the farm as attractive to the boy as are the allurements of the city. Then I believe we would have the boy stay on the farm and make himself a useful citizen.

Mr. TRIBBLE. That is the purpose of this bill. The purpose of my amendments is to give direction how the fund shall be administered. If this is a bill for the benefit of the farmer, then we want to direct how the money shall be administered in order that the farmer may get the benefit of it. The bill does not provide how the fund shall be administered. It simply turns it over to the States and to the agricultural schools of the State. I propose to provide that the demonstrators shall be appointed by the trustees of the colleges administering the fund, or the corresponding board of governors, and that said demonstrators shall have not less than five years of practical, successful experience in farming, and shall be over 27 years of age.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of these amendments is to keep the colleges, after they get charge of this fund, from administering it according to their views of agricultural work. The intention of the friends of this bill is to give immediate help to the adults on the farm. No part of this fund is to be used in the maintenance of a school or promote the upbuilding of any school by furnishing employment for the students thereof.

If the fund is placed in the hands of colleges and the faculties send out the beardless youths as demonstrators, you imperil the usefulness of this fund. The teachers in the school and faculty feel liberal toward the boys who are under them. If this is left to the faculty to appoint the demonstrators, the young men who are at the head of the classes will receive the most, it not all, the appointments. We all know the feeling of friendship that grows up between the teacher and pupils—it is like a father to a son—and they will send boys out to the farmers from these agricultural schools, boys 19, 20, or 21 years of age. I do not care if he did lead his class, that does not qualify him for demonstration work. Let him undertake to demonstrate and teach the farmer how to farm, and the farmer will tell him "You would starve to death upon my farm."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does this bill provide for anything of that kind? This bill does not provide that the boy, but the full-fledged instructor, shall go to the farmers.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The bill does not provide how demonstrators shall be appointed, but my amendment provides how the instructor is to be appointed. It provides that they shall be practical successful farmers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why not go a step further and provide that in consideration of this appropriation by the Government, in conjunction with whatever the State may appropriate, boys shall be put to work by the college, so that they may be enabled to go out equipped for this work of demonstration?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. In line with what my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania says, I quite agree that in our schools and colleges to-day there is too much theoretical knowledge being imparted and the practical side being neglected——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is it, exactly.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I am heartily in favor of that feature, and I congratulate the gentleman from Pennsylvania on his foresight and uniform good sense in introducing an amendment on that proposition.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I propose, if this bill comes up, to offer an amendment which will provide, wherever the colleges accept the conditions imposed by this act and receive appropriations thereunder, that they shall appoint and teach for the period of at least three years one boy coming from every congressional district in the State. I shall offer that amendment when the time comes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Now, Mr. Chairman, the second amendment is this: It provides that no part of the amount appropriated by this bill shall be applied in a college course, teaching, lectures in college, promoting agricultural trains, or in the repair and construction of buildings. The purpose of this bill is to go to the farmer and teach the farmer by giving him the information obtained through agricultural research and give him lessons by practical demonstration, thus enlarging his vision of successful farming. Therefore, in the administration of the bill, the purpose of the amendment is to direct the agricultural colleges how to spend the money and say, Thus far and no farther.

Mr. Chairman, I talked with Dr. Knapp on the questions I have been presenting to this body, and Dr. Knapp thoroughly agrees with the position I have taken. He says that the demonstrators who have been successful are men who know how to farm, men who have a personality, men who can go out to the farmer, get right close to the farmer and give him practical demonstrations in farming after he gets the farmer's confidence. How do you think the boy who goes out of school, a beardless youth, would succeed in reaching the farmer of fixed habits? Unless we inserted in this bill a certain amount of restrictions, he would be appointed. He can not reach the farmer, because the farmer has no confidence in his knowledge of farming. [Applause.] And the farmer would not be far wrong in such a conclusion, successful experience in farming being essential to success as a demonstrator. Dr. Knapp makes this statement: He says the demonstrator should have practical successful experience in farming, who knows the people among whom he is to work, who has had an education along this line and, above all, a fine sense of native shrewd business tact and a personality that will call men to him.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Does the gentleman understand if this bill passes and the maximum appropriation of $3,000,000 is reached, that that is intended to entirely supersede the amount of the appropriation for demonstrating work that is being carried on by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I do not so understand, and I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that if I thought it was wiping out the work of the Agricultural Department I would not support this bill.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I very much fear that is going to be the effect of it. I think the work that is being done by the Agricultural Department is of more value than the work that is being done by the colleges of the country.

Mr. TRIBBLE. And I want to say that the work that has been done by the Department of Agriculture in the South has been of great benefit. We can not estimate it. I am glad to say the agricultural school in my State is working at present in perfect harmony with the Agricultural Department at Washington, and under the direction of both Georgia is fast pushing to the front in agricultural pursuits. Under the direction of the Department of Agriculture, in connection with our State agricultural school, I can point you to 100 boys who have raised an average of 100 bushels of corn per acre. [Applause.]

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Before the gentleman concludes may I ask him a question, the answer to which I believe I can anticipate, and I ask the question in order to set him right before my constituents. He realizes probably that four-fifths of the money that has been appropriated for the Agricultural Department, especially the experimental stations, has been devoted to the great West and the great South. Now, in New Jersey we are planning a vast campaign to rid our State effectually of mosquitoes. Our State has appropriated in the last two years the sum of $100,000, and 21 counties in the State devote a certain amount of their taxes to that purpose as well. Now, realizing that four-fifths of the appropriations for experimental purposes in the Agricultural Department have been spent in the South and West, would not the gentleman, as a Representative of the southern country, favor an amendment in the proper form, to either this bill that he is talking on now or another one to which an amendment will be proper, for the elimination of the mosquito pest in the State of New Jersey? I will ask for a small appropriation of, say, $50,000 or $60,000.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I will say that I realize the force of the gentleman's argument, but I doubt if the amendment would be germane to this bill.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I said, when an amendment was germane to a bill at hand.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes, sir; if it was germane.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. As I said, I knew before he gave it what his answer would be. There is no Member on either side of the House more anxious to act in continuing the good work the gentleman from Georgia has successfully started during his first term here as a Member of this body than I am. [Applause.]

Mr. TRIBBLE. I do not think there is a man in this House that has cooperated with Members from the South more cheerfully and more conscientiously than the gentleman from New Jersey. [Applause.]

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Thank you.

Mr. DONOHOE. Will the gentleman from New Jersey permit a suggestion?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. There is no gentleman on either side of the House whose question I would answer with more grace than one asked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE].

Mr. DONOHOE. Would the gentleman permit his amendment to be so worded that it would read "mosquitoes and other pests"?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. In New Jersey, I am happy to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that other than the mosquito pests we have none, except Republicans, who are few and far between.

Mr. MANN. You live off the Republicans.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I will say that it is time for every man in this House to give his attention to farming and farm prosperity. The farmer produces the wealth of the country. From the beginning of this Government he has borne its burdens upon his shoulders. In time of war the ring of his hammer is heard no more on the peaceful highways of his home. His plowshare stands in the field where first he heard the bugle call. He has gone to the front. He bivouacs on the battlefield at night. It is true, Mr. Speaker, that often his clothes are soiled with honest toil, but "He is a man for a' that." [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has said about the desirability of teaching agriculture to the boys, but I want to have his attention directed particularly to this fact, that this bill is not intended to provide money for teaching agriculture in the common acceptation of the term. The money is not intended to be used in conducting schools. It is intended for the purpose of engaging practical, educated men to go out to the farmers and help them to put into practical operation what has been learned in the colleges and what has been discovered and developed by the Agriculture Department.

Appearing before the Committee on Agriculture at its meetings when this bill was considered were several presidents of agricultural colleges and men eminent in that line of work, and they said that if results of investigations and experiments and analyses, and so on, can be taken to the farmers of this country in such a way that they can be understood and made readily available, agriculture can be revolutionized in this country. We asked them why the colleges do not now send men out to teach these things to the farmers, and they called our attention to the provisions of the acts providing funds from the National Treasury for the assistance of agricultural colleges in the States. In every one of these acts is a provision to the effect that not a dollar shall be used outside of the colleges. The result is that while men have been at work for many years making investigations, conducting experiments, making analyses, and the colleges are literally filled with the results of that work, there is as yet absolutely no way of taking them to the farmer in such a way that he can make them available on the farm.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Where are the men educated whom the colleges send out?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. They are educated in the colleges, as a general thing.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Do they come up from the people, and is their tuition paid by their parents or by themselves?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. The different agricultural colleges have different ways of providing for the education of young men. Sometimes scholarships are given, sometimes tuition is practically free, and sometimes a small charge is made for it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It seems to me if it were a mere matter of sending out experts to teach the farmers, that matter might just as well be conducted by the Department of Agriculture as by the agricultural colleges.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. I suppose a question may arise as to the best method of doing this kind of work.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman sees no objection to taking the boy in the beginning and teaching him the practice of farming, so that he may be qualified to engage in that work and teach others?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. No. I have no objection to that. It is a very worthy work; and I will say, so far as I am concerned, that I will favor any measure that will have the effect of assisting the colleges in the education of boys or boys in getting an education. But this bill does not provide, and it is not intended to provide, for teaching boys in college or elsewhere; this is not that kind of a bill, and I do not want to see it, except as the instructor or representative of the college meets them on the farms, and I do not wish to see this bill encumbered by any such provision as the gentleman suggests. The agricultural colleges have been conducting these investigations, and it was supposed that it would only be necessary to establish the colleges and provide the demonstrations and analyses and all that and to issue bulletins to the farmers and to hold institutes, and that farmers would learn all results and receive all benefits in that way. But there seems still to be a space between the work in the college and the practical application of scientific and improved and up-to-date methods on the farm, and it is necessary to supply that missing link and to fill that space. It is found that it can best be done by sending a learned or experienced man from a college or from the department to get right down on the land with the man.

Now, that is the purpose of this bill, and while the purpose of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is worthy, I will say to the gentleman that there are bills providing for it. The Page bill, among others, provides for it, but this bill does not provide for it, and I do not want to see it encumbered or its passage endangered by incorporating in it the ideas of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan the same question that I asked the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE]. Is it the gentleman's understanding, if this bill is passed and these appropriations are made to the agricultural colleges of the different States, that the demonstration work, such as Dr. Knapp's department is conducting in the South in the last few years, will be suspended?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. It is not my idea that that work will be suspended. I have talked with the gentlemen in charge of the Office of Farm Demonstration, and they say that if this fund is supplied and the ultimate sum provided by the bill is reached it may make necessary some change in their plan of work, but that they will look forward to the time when their own work will be extended rather than reduced, and that they will have an opportunity to cooperate with agricultural colleges in a manner and to an extent that they have not now, but that that work will not be superseded.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that, but I rather suspect that if this bill passes the real effect of it will be to suspend the cooperative demonstrative work of the department.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It may change it to some extent, but I do not think it will suspend it or supplant it. I hope not, at least, because the work in the South, especially where it has been carried on extensively, has been splendidly done and the results have been far beyond expectations, and it has been very, very creditable indeed to those who have undertaken it.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I will if I have time.

Mr. GARRETT. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think a fundamental objection to this bill, aside from its purposes, is the fact that it provides that an appropriation shall be made to be expended by a State, conditioned upon the State making a similar appropriation?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. A part of the fund is conditional; yes.

Mr. GARRETT. Does the gentleman think that is a correct governmental principle?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes. I will tell the gentleman why. There is evidence of a disposition in some sections of the country to look to the Government to do too much. There is an unwillingness on the part of some of the people to do enough for themselves; and if they can only start the Government to taking care of a certain line of work, they can sit down quietly and see the Government furnish all the money and do all the work without any trouble or expense to themselves. This bill provides that $10,000 shall be given to each State for its agricultural college. After that the additional appropriations are given only on condition that the State shall duplicate them. We have discussed that a great deal in the committee, and have many times asked the opinion of gentlemen appearing before us, and this is the result of the work we have done along that line; this bill is the conclusion we have reached.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted at this time, I will say that I myself am in favor of the Lever agricultural extension bill, with some doubts as to whether the work ought to be done wholly by the States or by the General Government. The Lever bill contemplates that it shall be done under the direction of the States. I do not see how it is possible for the Government to make an appropriation to a State for agricultural extension work or farm demonstration work—and that is what is contemplated—and then have the Government in addition make an appropriation to do the same thing side by side with the State officials who are paid out of the fund appropriated by the Government. It would be very anomalous for us to appropriate to the State to do the work and then appropriate for our own officers to do it also.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Before the gentleman yields to anybody else, let me see if I understand him. The gentleman from Illinois understands that if this bill passes and is put into operation, the effect of it will be to suspend or supersede the work that is now being done through the Agricultural Department in the way of farm demonstration?

Mr. MANN. The inevitable effect of it will be a controversy as to whether this work ought all to be done by the State or all done by the General Government. This starts the State to working at it, and there will be a continued controversy between the two sets of people, until in the end one or the other will triumph. I do not know which one it will be.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I do not know that the gentleman from South Carolina has said so on the floor, but in private conversation I have understood from him that it was intended to put in charge of the different States of the Union the work that has heretofore been done and is now being done by the Agricultural Department.

Mr. MANN. If we make an appropriation, for instance, to the State of South Carolina to carry on this farm demonstration work on condition that that State puts up an equal sum of money, and we turn the money over, and the work is being done, I do not see how it will then be practicable to ask Congress to appropriate to have the Agricultural Department do the same work.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I do not think so, either.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit the reading of an extract from the report, just in line with the idea the gentleman has expressed?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. After quoting from Dr. Knapp, the committee say:

> The foregoing is an outline of the work as given by Dr. Bradford Knapp in a recent address. Your committee is informed and believes that this system of bringing home to the actual farmer upon his actual farm the best methods of agriculture is working a revolution in the agriculture of the South. The proposed legislation intends to do this same kind of work on a bigger, broader, and better scale, under the direction of State rather than Federal authorities, believing that each State has its own peculiar problems which can be worked out best under local environment. Your committee confidently expects the system provided for in the bill recommended for your favorable consideration to do for the whole country, in a larger measure, what has been accomplished for the South in a smaller way under the farmers' cooperative demonstration work.

That is the avowed purpose of it, as I have understood from the beginning.

Mr. MANN. I think that is correct.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois only has nine minutes remaining.

Mr. MANN. I did not think, Mr. Chairman, that I had yielded that much time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time will expire at half past 3. The gentleman has probably yielded more than he was aware of.

Mr. MANN. I accept the statement of the Chair.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, during the last half hour the discussion has revolved around very many interesting matters. But in some respects it has come back to that problem which is more important at the present day than any other, the problem of transportation. Some have discussed the increase in the cost of living and assumed to find a remedy for it; others have discussed the importance of educating the boy upon the farm, and demonstrated its value; others have spoken of the great manufacturing interests as vital to the prosperity of the country. Each and all of these are, in a measure, dependent upon transportation.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. OLMSTED. Is it not a fact that transportation is the only thing that has been going down all these years while everything has been going up?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the matter of cost, that is true. Transportation has been growing cheaper while other things have been growing dearer.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. And proportionately, is it not true that as the cost of transportation has decreased the railroads have increased their net earnings? Is not that necessarily true?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think it is not necessarily true.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. It may not be necessarily true, but it is true.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from New Jersey may be better informed about that than I am, but I am quite well informed in making the statement that the cost of transportation has decreased in recent years.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Yes; and the fact is true that the earning power of the railroads has increased.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will not dispute with the gentleman as to that; he agrees with me on the main proposition.

Mr. Chairman, in the beginning we had two methods of transportation, that of the dirt road, which was a very expensive means of transportation; then we built boats and used the waterways, and that was a much less expensive means of transportation.

In this country, in particular, roads and waterways were the principal means of transportation until the advent of the railroad. Then came the great transportation problems of to-day. Waterways afforded cheaper means of communication, as between the peoples, than dirt roads, because roads had to be blazoned through the wilderness and the forests, rock had to be supplanted and dislodged in order that traffic might spread. The waterway was the easier means of communication, and in the earlier days of our history our forefathers utilized the waterways to the fullest extent. They improved rivers and harbors with a view to increasing international trade; they developed the rivers, so far as they were able to do so, with a view of penetrating the country, joining hands with those who had gone on to the frontier; and they built canals in order that one body of water might be united with another, and a safe and cheap passage be afforded to those who had commodities to send from one section of the country to another.

Until the period of the railroad, canals were the great means of transportation along the Atlantic seaboard, and most of the population of the country was then along the Atlantic seaboard. At that time the canal was a profitable and valuable investment. It was a great convenience to the people. It brought the coal to the consumer, it brought the product of the farm to the market, it carried to remote places those who wanted to go to the new country, and it afforded that means of transportation which in time of peril enabled troops to pass from one district to another.

The South had her canals, New England had hers, and Pennsylvania, developing her coal fields, had her canals, and by this means the people were brought together, value was given to land, and farm products amounted to something. Gentlemen speak of the wealth created on the farm. I agree that the farmer is a wealth creator.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I will ask to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO].

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the railroads came along about 1830, and immediately with their advantages and superior facilities they attracted the attention of the business world. They took the place of the canals and waterways along the Atlantic coast and, to a large extent, resulted in the abandonment of the older means of communication. It need not be stated at this time why property in canals lost its value. Those who had business to do with each other followed the lines of greatest convenience and sought the best facilities. They flocked to the lines of the railroads, with the result that cities grew, large communities settled where the country had been wild, and new methods were engendered. The time has now come when we need them again.

I rose, Mr. Chairman, not to dilate extensively upon the question of transportation, but in the few minutes allotted to me to speak particularly of one of those old links left by our forefathers in the waterway chain along the Atlantic coast. Properly improved, to-day it would be a connecting means between the North and the South, and if modernized as it should be for the benefit of commerce that circles around about, it would exceed in tonnage carried in any one year ten times that which is estimated for the Panama Canal during the first year of its operation.

Between the cities of New York and Philadelphia and Baltimore and the cities south extends the old Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, a waterway of the past, still in operation, started in 1825, cut out by hand labor in the old-fashioned way, with pick and shovel. It was cut for a distance of 13 miles, completed in 1825, in the short period of four years, and connected up the waters of the Delaware River and Delaware Bay with those of Chesapeake Bay and the South, and made possible a union passageway, which saved an outside sailing distance around Cape Charles, in the open sea and bay, up the Chesapeake, from Philadelphia to Baltimore of 325 miles. To-day the Congress of the United States appropriates vast sums of money for the improvement of rivers and harbors throughout the United States, and in the bill passed the other day, and since signed by the President, dedicated no less than $6,000,000 to the improvement of river banks alone along the lower Mississippi, but this old canal has stood as it was left by its builders in 1829, carrying a mere modicum of commerce when it might carry millions of tons, and awaiting the day when a generous and farseeing Government will open it up and permit it to be used as an artery of the trade that seeks a passage through it. Owned by a private company in which the Government of the United States is a stockholder, there it stands, with its depth of 9 feet, and its old locks not more than 24 feet wide, with boats built especially to its own limitations. There it stands to-day, checked by its ancient limitations, an opportunity to the public, but enthralled. There it still stands, charging freight upon such commerce as passes through it at a rate sometimes far exceeding that charged by the competing railroads. The time has come——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Chairman, the official reports emanating from the Post Office Department during the past two or three years have contained much data relating to the receipts and operating costs of the postal service. These data have presented opportunity for wide consideration of postal problems in which the public has direct interest, and one consequence has been an increased demand for a reduction in the postage rate on letters or first-class mail matter. During the present Congress hundreds of petitions, resolutions, and memorials have been filed in the Senate and House of Representatives favoring a reduction of the first-class postage rate from 2 to 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof. It is evident that a strong public sentiment has developed in favor of cheaper letter postage, and as petitions are constantly arriving it is the duty of the Congress to give this subject serious consideration.

The people have based their appeals upon official statements. The Postmaster General, in his annual report for 1909, gave the annual receipts from first-class mail as $132,304,844.51, out of a total postal revenue of $203,562,383. He reported the expenses on first-class mail as $78,630,649.89, leaving a profit of $53,674,194 on the letter mail. For the year 1911 it has been reported that the first-class mail receipts were much greater than in 1909, when specific official figures were gathered, and the letter mail profits for the fiscal year 1911 have been estimated as exceeding $70,000,000. The facts clearly demonstrate that the ratio of profit on the first-class or letter mail is out of proportion and places upon the public a high rate of postal cost.

In the Post Office Department reports for 1909 there were supplied interesting figures illustrating postal-service revenues and expenses. One statement gives the revenue, expense, and profit and loss per pound and per piece for first-class mail.

These figures are reported:

Revenue per pound	$0.84001
Expense per pound	$0.49923
Profit per pound	$0.34078
Pieces per pound	45.10
Revenue per piece	$0.01862
Expense per piece	$0.01107
Profit per piece	$0.00755

It is hoped that the time will not be far distant when a rate of 1 cent per ounce can be authorized by Congress for the universal handling of letters throughout the United States, and it is regretted to find that the general average expense for handling letters now exceeds 1 cent per piece. The average number of pieces per pound is stated as 45.10, which includes letters and postal cards; and as the expense is reported as $0.01107 per piece, it is evident that a universal rate of 1 cent an ounce would be less than the expense per piece for the service rendered.

The official figures are not convincing that universal 1-cent letter postage throughout the United States is feasible at the present time. It is quite probable that a flat reduction in the first-class postage rate from 2 to 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof would curtail the postal revenues by at least $30,000,000 and produce a greater postal deficit during the first year under such reduced rate than has ever heretofore been known. But the official reports have exhibited a large profit on the letter mail and in some form the people should benefit by participation in the earnings.

The present first-class letter rate of 2 cents is applicable to all letter mail whether addressed to your neighbor or to a correspondent thousands of miles distant. The law does not differentiate between the letter for delivery from the post office of mailing and the letter sent from Washington to San Francisco, Alaska, Canada, Mexico, or even England or Germany. The letter addressed to a person in the town of mailing involves no transportation charges by railroads, steamboats, or steamships. If letters can be sent all over the country and to England and Germany for 2 cents, and if the profit per piece on all first-class mail matter exceeds three-fourths of a cent, it is evident that the local or so-called drop letters are handled at an exorbitant profit, and the people are entitled to cheaper rates for their local letters.

As previously stated, the expenditures for first-class mail transportation and handling in 1909 were $78,630,649.89, as applied to the following purposes:

1. Transportation	$9,958,917.77
2. Railway post-office car service	1,061,804.24
3. Railway Mail Service	8,102,140.48
4. Rural Delivery Service	15,439,230.94
5. Compensation of postmasters, clerks, carriers, rentals, miscellaneous	40,519,373.35
6. Other expenditures directly assignable	2,300,558.60
7. Other expenditures not directly assignable	1,248,624.51
Total	78,630,649.89

Items 1, 2, 3, and 4, aggregating $34,562,093.43, do not enter into the cost of handling local or drop letters. The last three items aggregate $44,068,556.46 and only part of that amount is chargeable to the local correspondence, as approximately 20 to 30 per cent of the mail in the towns and cities having letter-carrier service is of a strictly local character. In this connection it will be of interest to note the following official and authoritative statement in a report to the Postmaster General in 1909 by a special commission of expert postal officials who conducted an investigation of the pneumatic-tube mail service. These gentlemen said:

It is shown that the combined postal revenue collected during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1908, at the six post offices in Boston, New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Chicago, and St. Louis was nearly $51,000,000, this being about 27 per cent of the entire postal receipts of the country. The first-class mail originating in these cities is about 27 per cent of the first-class mail originating in the United States, amounting to about 8,000,000 pieces daily. The special-delivery matter delivered at these offices last year was over 4,000,000 pieces, this being about 30 per cent of all such matter delivered in the entire country. The first-class mail of local origin for local delivery—a very profitable class of matter—amounted to 2,620,000 pieces daily, this being about 31½ per cent of the total first-class mail of these cities. The subcommittee estimates a profit to the postal service of about $9,000,000 per annum from this mail alone.

In the six cities mentioned they say that about 31½ per cent of the total first-class mail was of local origin and for local delivery, and, as reported, it was "a very profitable class of matter," producing a profit of $9,000,000 per annum in the cities mentioned.

If we again refer to the seven items of expense heretofore stated for the transportation of first-class mail, and eliminate the first four items and 60 or 70 per cent of the cost of the last three items, therefore ascertaining the charges applicable to the "mail of local origin for local delivery," it will be seen that the cost of handling local letters on an average in all cities and towns having mail carrier service will figure less than one-quarter of a cent per piece, leaving fully three-fourths of a cent profit on the local letter mail under a postage rate of 1 cent per ounce on local or drop letters, including delivery by carriers. Can there be sound argument against granting a local delivery 1-cent postage rate? The people seek a reduction. They are entitled to it, and the Congress is honor bound to grant some concession.

No one can complain of a 2-cent rate to England and Germany as being extortionate. The people distinguish between the local service and that involving transportation by railroads or steamboats, and which necessitates an expense for railway postal cars and railway postal clerks for sorting mail en route so as to insure expeditious delivery. In view of the official figures showing a large profit on the general handling of letter mail, and an excessive profit on the handling of local or drop letters for delivery by carriers from the post office of mailing, it is impossible for the Congress to defend its failure to enact legislation reducing the letter rate on local letters from 2 to 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery.

To recite at length the various minor changes in letter postage rates since the establishment of this Government would be monotonous. Prior to 1845 the number of pieces or sheets of paper to a letter formed the basis of postage rates, but the act of March 3, 1845, declared weight as a standard, and fixed one-half ounce as the basis. Length of haul and zone limits also served as the basis upon which postage charges were made in the early days of the postal service, but with the development of improved transportation facilities these complicated methods of computing the postage were superseded by a universal rate over the entire United States. Postage on letters was reduced to 5 cents for each half ounce or fraction thereof; then to 3 cents; and the Congress finally authorized a postage charge at the rate of 2 cents an ounce or fraction thereof.

In 1872 Congress officially recognized the difference between the cost of handling letter mail for local delivery and letters which require an expense for transportation or special attention. The letter-postage rate established in 1872 (R. S., 3904) provided that—

Letters commonly known as drop or local letters delivered through the post office or its carriers shall be charged with postage at the rate of 2 cents where the system of free delivery is established, and 1 cent where such system is not established, for each half ounce or fraction thereof.

This act was partly repealed by an act approved March 3, 1885, which gave an additional advantage to the public by fixing the letter rate at 2 cents per ounce instead of "for each half ounce."

The present law says:

Upon all matter of the first class * * * postage shall be charged * * * at the rate of 2 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery at letter-carrier offices, and 1 cent for each ounce or fraction thereof where free delivery by carrier is not established.

The Congress in 1872 and in 1885 appreciated the great advantages to be derived from cheap means for the conveyance of intelligence to the people, and no congressional enactment has served the people to greater purpose than has the act of June 8, 1872, which reads:

To facilitate letter correspondence and to provide for the transmission in the mails, at a reduced rate of postage, of messages, orders, notices, and other short communications, either printed or written in pencil or ink, the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to furnish and issue to the public, with postage stamps impressed upon them, "postal cards" manufactured of good stiff paper, of such quality, form, and size as he shall deem best adapted for general use; which cards shall be used as a means of postal intercourse, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Postmaster General, and when so used shall be transmitted through the mails at a postage charge of 1 cent each, including the cost of their manufacture.

This law, enacted "to facilitate letter correspondence" and provide "a reduced rate of postage," directs that the Postmaster General shall not only furnish the cards of "good stiff paper," but shall print them and transmit the postal cards through the mails at a charge of 1 cent each, including the cost of the manufacture. That the people have appreciated this facility and postage reduction is evident, for they purchase nearly a billion of these postal cards annually, while, in addition to the Government postal cards, they also send through the mails many millions of private post cards, upon which the 1 cent first-class rate is paid. From $7,000,000 to $9,000,000 are annually paid to the Government for postal cards, and the Post Office Department is at an expense of $170,000 to $190,000 for the paper and printing plus many thousands of dollars for shipping the cards to the various post offices in addition to the cost of selling this great volume of cards.

But these facts merely go to illustrate that the United States postal service now has a 1 cent postage rate which could be extended to the great benefit of the people. The statistics of postal revenues and expenditures clearly demonstrate that a further reduction in the rate for letter postage is feasible, and as an entering wedge H. R. 32892 was presented in the Sixty-first Congress and reintroduced in the Sixty-second Congress as H. R. 15.

The bill provides:

That upon drop or local letters, for delivery through the post office or its carriers, postage on mail matter of the first class shall be charged at the rate of 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery at letter-carrier offices where the system of free delivery is established: Provided, That the postage be fully prepaid by stamps affixed to said matter.

The postal service of the United States was not established as a money-making institution, and no feature of the service should be operated by the Government at an exhorbitant cost to the people.

Without attempting to argue pro or con as to whether the time has arrived for the authorization of a 1 cent letter postage rate universally throughout the United States, it must be conceded and generally recognized that, inasmuch as the postal receipts and profits on first-class mail matter are proportionately abnormal as compared with other classes of postal business, some portion of the profits on the letter mail should be rightfully granted the public. As previously stated, the natural conclusion would prompt a distinction between transportation and nontransportation letters, and the solution is a cheaper rate on letters of local origin for local delivery, a class of mail which is acknowledged as a "very profitable class of matter."

By all means the postage rate on these local drop letters should be reduced to 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery by carriers. Such reduction in the drop letter rate of postage would not materially affect the revenues, as it is probable that it would not involve a curtailment of more than five millions of dollars when allowance is made for the normal annual increase in postal business. The change being but slight in proportion to the aggregate of first-class receipts and profits, a further step—looking to a reduction in the first-class postage rate to 2 cents for the first ounce and 1 cent for each additional ounce instead of two cents for each ounce in excess of the first ounce—would give some benefit of the profits to all patrons of the mail service. These concessions will eventually lead to the adoption of a universal 1 cent letter rate in the United States, which should be approved as soon as the postal revenues and expenditures shall warrant such legislation.

For many years 1-cent letter postage has been authorized for local drop letters at post offices "where free delivery by carrier is not established." The time has now arrived when the 1-cent rate can be extended to include the delivery of local or drop letters from letter-carrier offices, and the profits derived from handling letter mail indicate that the 1-cent letter rate should not be restricted to letters delivered by carriers in the cities, towns, and villages having mail-carrier service, but should also be applied to letters of local origin for local delivery on the rural mail routes emanating from the various post offices.

The patrons of the post-office service will appreciate a 1-cent letter rate for letters of local origin for local delivery, and with the establishment of the new rate will come a great increase in the number of local letters, producing greater postal revenues and profits. Individuals, business establishments of all classes, banks, churches, societies, fraternities, clubs, and, in fact, all forms of business, social, and domestic life, would benefit by the proposed reduction in letter postage. A reduction in the letter rate of postage would be tantamount to a decrease in taxation or a curtailment in the cost of living, and the Government should lead the way to lighten the burden of taxation and high prices.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, the very interesting discussion that we have had this afternoon has taken a wide range, embracing everything from politics to the question of transportation and the development of agriculture, but in the few minutes that I shall speak I wish to address myself more particularly to the bill under discussion, H. R. 17470, introduced by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO], to whom great credit is due for his untiring and patriotic efforts in behalf of the measure. The stated purpose of this bill is to pension the widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or in the Philippine insurrection.

Mr. Chairman, on the 26th day of July, 1911, I introduced a bill in this House (H. R. 12816) to provide for pensions to widows and minor children of soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the War with Spain. The bill H. R. 12816, to which I refer, is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12816) to provide for pensions to widows and minor children of soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the War with Spain.

Be it enacted, etc., That if any officer or enlisted man in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States who served 90 days or more during the War with Spain or Philippine insurrection, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, has died or shall hereafter die, leaving a widow, such widow shall, upon due proof of her husband's death, without proving his death to be the result of his Army or Navy service, be placed upon the pension roll from the date of the filing of her application therefor under this act at the rate of $12 per month during her widowhood: Provided, That said widow shall have married said soldier prior to passage of this act; and said widow shall also be paid $2 per month for each child of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow, leaving a child or children of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, such pension shall be paid such child or children until the age of 16: Provided, That in case a minor child is insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless, the pension shall continue during the life of said child, or during the period of such disability.

SEC. 2. That no claim agent or attorney, or other person engaged in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claims under the provisions of this act, shall directly or indirectly contract for, demand, or receive for such services in preparing or prosecuting such claim a sum greater than $10, which sum shall be payable only upon the order of the Commissioner of Pensions by the pension agent making payment of the pension allowed, and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or who shall wrongfully withhold from a pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of a pension, or any part of a pension claim allowed or due such pensioner or claimant under this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every such offense, be fined not exceeding $500, or be imprisoned at hard labor not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

I introduced that bill after careful consultation with people in the State which I have the honor in part to represent, who are particularly interested in a measure of this kind. This bill, introduced by me, was quite generally considered in our State by those interested in this legislation and generally indorsed. I have before me General Order No. 5, issued from the headquarters of the Department of the Ohio, United Spanish War Veterans, Akron, Ohio, February 16, 1912, signed by Harry S. Quine, department commander, and Joseph Wein, department adjutant, paragraph 8 of which says:

8. The Willis bill. This bill, known as House resolution 12816, to provide pensions for widows and minor children of soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Spanish-American War, is now before Congress. This is a most important measure. See that your Congressman hears from you, and work in every way possible for its passage.

So you will see there is a very clear indorsement of H. R. 12816, which I introduced. This statement is due me, Mr. Chairman, because I wrote to and conferred with a large number of people who are interested in legislation of this kind in the State of Ohio, and had pledged them my enthusiastic efforts in securing the passage of H. R. 12816. Subsequently the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO], who has served his country and his State with such distinguished ability, both here and on the battle field, without knowing that I had introduced any such bill introduced his bill, H. R. 17470, which has been generally indorsed by Spanish-American veterans throughout the country. I am perfectly willing to transfer my allegiance from the bill which I introduced to the bill now under discussion, which was prepared by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO]. There is no difficulty between us and no pride of authorship. He is interested and I am interested, Mr. Chairman, in getting some legislation along this line, and it makes no difference whose bill is passed. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, we have reached the time in the history of this country when it is proper that there should be some legislation for the relief of widows and those dependent upon the boys who went out and fought in the war of 1898.

It is now some 14 years since that war came to a close, and it ought to be noted, as a matter of fairness, that this is the first time that the Spanish-American veterans have asked anything at the hands of the Government, and they are not now asking anything in their own behalf. They are asking legislation for the benefit of the widows and minor children of those who fought in that war. It has been stated that there was not that degree of hardship in the war of 1898 that was experienced in other wars. That is true, to some extent, but yet there was enough of hardship; in the fever camps, in the new conditions of climate, which the boys had to endure, there was suffering, there was disease, and there was death. I have taken pains to look up the matter in the statistics furnished by the publication which I have before me, a statistical exhibit prepared in the Adjutant General's Office in 1899, and I find by that publication from the State of Ohio alone, of the troops that went out in the Spanish-American War, not counting those who lost their lives in the Philippine insurrection, 219 lost their lives from disease. From the country as a whole there were 3,729 who lost their lives from disease. In the committee report some other facts are given which are of interest. There was much fierce fighting, with heavy losses. In this war there were 826 battles and skirmishes, in 515 of which men were killed and wounded. The whole mortality of the campaigns was something like 12,000 lives. I think in any legislation of this kind it is only proper that the results of the conflict should be taken into consideration. This is not the place nor have we the time to go into the great results of the Spanish-American War. Everybody knows that as one result Cuba is free and is now one of the flourishing Republics of the world; that Porto Rico is emancipated, and this great Republic is performing its duty in the Philippine Islands, and as a result the people of those islands are enjoying peace and prosperity never before known there.

Another important result was the reuniting of our common country. Men from the North and men from the South served side by side and shoulder to shoulder. Union blue and Confederate gray were blended in the Nation's banner; the sons of Union soldiers and the sons of Confederate soldiers—yes, and the sons of those who had once been slaves—all vied with each other in devotion and service to our country. Lincoln's words in his first inaugural address were almost prophetic when he said:

We are not enemies, but friends; we must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection. The mystic chords of memory stretching from every battle field and patriot grave to every living heart and hearthstone all over this broad land will yet swell the chorus of the Union when again touched, as surely they will be, by the better angels of our nature.

This was prophecy; the reunited Nation resulting from the Spanish-American War was the fulfillment. The soldiers, sailors, and marines who fought in the Spanish-American War and the Philippine insurrection made history. We must not forget the widows and orphans of those who bore the heat and burden of the day.

I think it is only proper that this Government at this time should take some steps to make it possible for the widows and helpless minor children to have some further recompense at the hands of the Government. It should be noted, Mr. Chairman, and I alluded to it earlier in my remarks, that this bill is not for the purpose of giving anything to the soldiers. They are not asking anything for themselves. They are simply asking that the same rule shall be applied to their widows and orphans as has been applied to the widows and minor children of soldiers of other wars. As the committee report well says:

The amended measure merely continues the well-recognized statutory policy of our Government in dealing with the veteran soldier and sailor and their dependents. Ordinary gratitude and public policy dictate that the Government shall not abandon in their need those few who offered their lives to it in the time of its dire need.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. Just one more minute.

Mr. CRAGO. I yield to the gentleman two minutes additional.

Mr. WILLIS. It seems to me, then, Mr. Chairman, that the time has come that we should apply to the widows and minor children of those who fought in the Spanish-American War the same rules of justice and equity that have heretofore been applied to the dependents of soldiers, sailors, and marines of other wars.

And it should be noted that the provisions of this bill are extremely modest. The report states that—

In amended form, the measure grants $12 monthly to the widow of an honorably discharged soldier or sailor who served during the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection during her widowhood, and $2 monthly for each child under 16 years of age, provided that the widow shall have married the soldier prior to the passage of this act. The pension is to be limited only to the widow who is "without means of support other than her daily labor and an actual net income not exceeding $250 per year."

It proposes to grant a pension of $12 a month to the widow of any officer or enlisted man who fought in the Spanish-American War or Philippine insurrection, provided that widow does not have an annual income of $250 or more. It seems to me that that is a very modest and reasonable proposition and ought to meet with the unanimous approval of this House.

It must be perfectly apparent that when we are considering the granting of pensions to soldiers it is a comparatively easy matter for a soldier himself to get his evidence; but it is otherwise with his helpless widow; she does not know the name or residence of her late husband's comrades and can not secure the necessary evidence. The report clearly shows this difficulty when it says:

Under present law the widows of the veterans of these warfares have pensionable status if they can show that their husbands' deaths were directly caused by disabilities incurred in the service. This limitation has, however, been removed by statute with reference to the widows of veterans of prior wars because of the difficulty of furnishing proof that the death was traceable to antecedent disability incurred in war service. When the veteran seeks a pension for himself he knows, and probably can trace, his comrades in arms in order to furnish the requited proof. When the widow asks a pension for herself she is left helpless and invariably has no knowledge of the identity and whereabouts of the men who served with the deceased veteran. In practice it has been found that it is rarely practicable for her to gather the proofs.

I have cases in the eighth district, and I think of one just now. It is of a boy who fought in an Ohio regiment. He served his country well. No disease developed in the service, but subsequent to his home-coming he was stricken by a fatal malady and died, leaving a wife and little family without means of support. His widow has been unable to locate his comrades or to furnish the necessary evidence. As a matter of fact, the widow and those children are being supported to-day by the local camp of Spanish-American War Veterans. That this is the case in many instances is shown by the following from the report:

At present the destitute widows and their dependents are cared for in the main by the United Spanish War Veterans. It is inequitable to ask the men who offered their lives to their country in war service to make this additional financial sacrifice, when the burden should be carried by the mass of our population which did not serve with the colors.

It does not seem to me that that is just; it does not seem to me that it is wise or patriotic that these widows and children, the children of these defenders of the flag, should have to look to the camp of the Spanish War Veterans or to any other source than the Government of the United States for recompense. Let us do justice by passing this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting certain portions of the committee's report.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, the year of 1898 witnessed an outburst of patriotic enthusiasm in this country most agreeable and encouraging to every lover of American institutions. Some of the results of that war have already been stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS]. He might perhaps have summarized all by stating that the one great result was to compel the recognition of the United States as a world power and to advance us into the front rank of all the nations of the world.

The men who enlisted in that war took their lives in their hands, the same as those who enlisted in other wars, and many of them served just as faithfully, just as patriotically, and suffered and endured equally as much. A few miles from my own city there was encamped a large number of men, who had been sent home from that war ill. They were known as the "typhoid regiment." Some of them died. I know of no reason, Mr. Chairman, why their widows, left, as this bill provides, without any means of support save an income of not more than $250 per annum, should not have the small pension which this bill awards.

I call the attention of those in charge of the bill to the fact that one of the proposed amendments perhaps changes the sense of the bill. It provides, as drawn and introduced by my colleague [Mr. CRAGO], "that when a soldier who has been honorably discharged has died, or shall hereafter die, leaving a widow or minor child or children under the age of 16 years, such widow shall, upon due proof of her husband's death, without proving his death to be the result of his Army or Navy service, be placed on the pension roll," and so forth. In amending so that it shall apply only to widows "without means of support," and so forth, the word "without" has been so placed that it might be held to connect the entire sentence and limit the pensions to widows without minor children as well as without an income. I call attention to that. It can readily be corrected. The intention, of course, is that a widow without the specified income shall have a pension for herself and a pension for each minor child, and that if she dies the children shall have a pension until they are 16 years of age.

I am heartily in favor of this bill. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks concerning it, and on a number of other subjects. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, as per agreement, I now yield one-half hour to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY].

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes of the time so kindly allotted to me by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD].

[Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey addressed the committee. See appendix.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I yield, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CLAYTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17470, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS—WILLIAM FAY.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. MCLAUGHLIN, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of William Fay (H. R. 20816, 60th Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 26371) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object; as I understand this is the bill to carry the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriations, to take the place of the bill which was vetoed by the President?

Mr. BURLESON. It is.

Mr. MANN. What changes have been made in it?

Mr. BURLESON. The only change is that we have eliminated those provisions which attempted to abolish the Commerce Court and in lieu thereof we embody provisions carrying an appropriation for the support and maintenance of the court until March 4, 1913.

Mr. MANN. All the other provisions of the bill are just the same as in the bill that went to the President?

Mr. BURLESON. They are identical with the bill which went to the President.

Mr. MANN. All right.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURLESON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to say that I shall not at this late stage of this late session object to this method of presenting the bill. I wish that it had provided for the Commerce Court until June 30, 1913, instead of March 4, as it naturally should have; but I presume gentlemen hope that next winter they can by some bill abolish the court, so that no appropriation will be necessary after March 4. In view of the vote that has just been taken in the Senate, I do not see how that can come to pass, and I think it would have been more gracious and less grudging if you had appropriated for the court for the full fiscal year; but I make no objection to the passage of the bill. In the deficiency bill next winter we can appropriate for the other four months.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentleman think that next winter some people will have seen a great light?

Mr. GILLETT. I think very likely, and I think it very probable that the bill to abolish the court will not be pressed by you at all next winter.

Mr. BURLESON. I hope one person will have seen a great light by that time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURLESON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER. The House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, before that is done, I ask unanimous consent, inasmuch as some time has been used in the consideration of another matter, that general debate on the Spanish War pension bill (H. R. 17470) be extended until 10 minutes before 5 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. There will be no trouble about extending the time in committee.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. There was before.

Mr. MANN. There will be no trouble in extending the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks that the time for general debate on this bill be extended until 10 minutes before 5 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. We have only used 10 minutes in the consideration of the other bill.

The SPEAKER. Until a quarter to 5 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. Until a quarter to 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 17470) to pension widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or Philippine insurrection, with Mr. CLAYTON in the chair.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I do not think a real doubt exists in the mind of any man on the floor at this time that a Beef Trust exists; second, that the Beef Trust controls the source of supply.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent that the extended time be given me.

Mr. CRAGO. Take half of it.

Mr. MANN. The understanding was that the gentleman from Georgia should have how much time?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. That he should have 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO]?

Mr. CRAGO. I should like 10 or 12 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. There are only 40 minutes remaining for general debate.

Mr. CRAGO. Twenty to the gentleman from Georgia, 10 to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and 10 to myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Only 40 minutes remain for general debate, and the gentleman from Georgia is to have 20 minutes.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Yes; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania 10, and the gentleman from New Jersey 10.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR].

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote with pleasure for this just measure, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon it and other subjects.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, in the 20 minutes that have been accorded me I intend to confine my remarks to the pending bill proposing to pension certain widows and minor children of officers and enlisted men who served in the War with Spain and the Philippine insurrection—not for the purpose of discussing the bill in its phraseology or present form, but to direct some observations generally to the subject upon which the House is about to take action. Some few months ago the opportunity was presented me to discuss this bill, and at that time my remarks were addressed particularly against that portion of the bill which provided for pensions to assistant surgeons, contract doctors, dentists, veterinary surgeons, and the like. It is a pleasure to note that as the bill comes back from the Pensions Committee that committee has stricken from it that portion of the bill to which my objections were then stated, leaving the remaining part of the bill intact.

I agree altogether with the remarks made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] when he said that the time has come when the soldiers who fought in this war should be recognized with pensions, but I submit that this bill is not a proposal to pension the widows and children of soldiers who fought in the Spanish War and the Philippine insurrection. This bill provides pensions for widows of all officers and enlisted men of the Army and the Navy and the Marine Corps who served in that war, whether they fought or not. As a public policy in a matter of this character a distinction should be made as between the word "served" and the word "fought." To-day the Government pensions the soldier of the Spanish War who fought and by wound or by disease or infirmity contracted disabilities, and to widows and children if the soldier died during the war or at any time afterwards.

The law now provides a pension for him and his widow and dependent children. I approve that legislation, for it is both wise and right. The law now provides a pension for the widows and children and other dependents of soldiers who were engaged or served in that war and who in consequence thereof lost their lives as a result of wounds and disabilities so contracted. The report of the Commissioner of Pensions recites payment at present for War with Spain as follows: To invalids, widows, minor children, mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters, sons and daughters, and helpless children. The statute to-day gives them pensions, and in addition to that each recurring session the Congress passes many special private bills for cases not now covered by the general law. So what is this proposal? It is to give to the widow and children of soldiers who served in that war and came out without being in any battle, without a wound, without disease, strong and sound in body, a pension of $12 a month for all time to come. I recognize that whoever rises here to oppose a proposition to give a gratuity or pension to a woman in black or a child without father invites the criticism of this House. I recognize that from the State of Georgia well-nigh 5,000 volunteered and went to the service, with the usual quota from my district, to say nothing of those from our State who were in the Regular Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. They know there is no just service I will not perform for them. They likewise know that I will not lay unjust burdens upon their neighbors and all the people to carry out a political propaganda. They do not expect, they do not want it done—not the real men. Colleagues, does not this bill involve a public policy of the Government in regard to the duty the Government owes to its soldiery and also to the rest of the country, who are the toilers and taxpayers? Has the time come when we shall pass an act that gives a right of pension to the widow of a young man, by reason of his service when he never left the camp in which his company and regiment were quartered? The terms of this bill will give a pension to a widow whose husband volunteered in the service and never left his State when the war was in Cuba and the insurrection over in the Philippines. Yet you see this bill proposes in its terms to take the widow of a young man who for 90 days was enlisted and was never ordered to the front, never heard a command to charge or to retreat, and gives her a pension on the theory that it is the duty of the Government and a wise policy. This bill provides in its terms that there is no young man on the roll as a Spanish or Philippine soldier whose widow and child shall not be a recipient in the case of his death of a pension, having due regard for the date of his marriage to his wife.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I will.

Mr. WILLIS. I want to ask the gentleman if there is not a provision in the bill which says in order to receive a pension the widow must not have an income in excess of $250 and that that would cut out a great many?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Undoubtedly. Now, Mr. Chairman, this particular legislation has no precedent in pension legislation of any sort. The war of 1898, as it is called under the terms of the bill, covers a period of four years, and yet the record shows that almost every regiment of volunteer soldiers who enlisted for the War with Spain in 1898 was discharged and mustered out the same year or early the next. Is it a wise policy or public duty for the Government to accord a pension to a widow of a soldier when the young man enlisted for the war, served 91 days, 4 months, or 5 months, and was mustered out hale, hearty, strong, without an infirmity, with experience in the world, having confronted no danger, encountered no peril, as thousands of them were turned out; never in the hospital, never ill with a disease, never within 1,000 miles of a cannon, nor within 1,000 miles of an armed force with loaded guns? I can not give the exact per cent of the soldiers who under this bill would have pensions extended to their widows, who during their service carried no gun on their shoulders except for military drill in camps. Yet they are to transmit the right of pension at the expense of the National Treasury and the toiling masses.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I will.

Mr. PAYNE. Does not the gentleman know that the conditions over here at Camp Alger, almost in sight of the city of Washington, were more deadly than any battle fought in that war?

Mr. RODDENBERY. And I will say to the gentleman that the existing law already provides for a pension to the widow and children of everyone who died from a disease contracted at that camp or anywhere else. That is the law now.

Mr. PAYNE. Is it not impossible to trace that because of the undermining of the boys' constitution while they were in camp under these deadly conditions?

Mr. RODDENBERY. That might be true, but it is hardly as impossible of ascertainment as to ascertain how much the life of the gentleman from New York will have been shortened by reason of his arduous and long service here.

Mr. Chairman, at the end of 10 years after the great Civil War the Government had paid in pensions $28,000,000, and already at the end of 10 years after the Spanish War and Philippine insurrection the Government has paid $35,000,000 to the Spanish War pension roll. That great conflict recalls Bull Run, Manassas, Vicksburg, Cold Harbor, Spottsylvania, and, finally, Gettysburg. With a Government policy wisely extended to soldiers and their widows, beginning the first year of the war, at the end of 10 years we had paid out $28,000,000, and at the end of 10 years from the Spanish conflict, never to be dignified in this country as a war comparable to the one of the sixties, the Government has paid to the soldiers and their widows $35,000,000. Stand and contemplate it if you will.

I will not apologize for these remarks. I base them, gentlemen, upon my deliberate judgment as an humble Member charged with the performance of a public duty as a legislator. As much as I would be disinclined to oppose a bill to give a Government gratuity to unfortunate widows and children, I can not subscribe to this measure, whatever be its penalty, when I believe it is an unwise public policy and an unsound legislative proposal, and one that the real fighting soldier of any war would not ask. My opposition to this bill was voiced on the floor months ago. Each constituent was mailed a copy of my observations then. They know my opinion and position. To-day with full knowledge the voters of my district in the Georgia primary are returning me to Congress without an opposing candidate. As they honor me with their ballots at this hour I render to them and the country the service which my judgment dictates and perform my official duty as God gives me to see it.

Under the five-minute rule we shall submit some amendments to this bill, with the desire and purpose of making it accord with what, in our humble judgment, is a wiser and better policy. I regret that it is to be passed in the closing days of this Congress. Last Wednesday this bill was on the calendar all day, and no Member raised his voice to support or to oppose it. To-day it has been under consideration all day, and when the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and other gentlemen discussed other subjects, there was at no time 35 Members on the floor, and those gentlemen always speak with intelligence, with ability, and with knowledge that is calculated to give information. One was discussing the important parcel-post legislation, another was discussing the agricultural extension bill, and when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] rose to address the House with intelligence and ability, as he always does, there were but 22 Members on the floor. Where are these patriotic gentlemen that a roll call will bring in here after awhile to do justice to the Spanish War soldiers and their widows? When the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] rose to support this measure there were 19 Members on the floor. Where were the gentlemen that are moved to support this legislation because of their love of the soldier and their desire to render patriotic devotion to the dependent widows? Where are they? Some gentleman says they are at the ball game. I do not know. But when the roll is called many of them will answer, and they will go back home and tell of their devotion to the men who fought for the country.

Mr. BUTLER. And the fairness of the umpire.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Ah, gentlemen, I address these remarks to your sound and candid judgment. Let us pension, as we are doing, the soldiers of these wars under existing law. But before we extend a policy to grant a pension to the widow of a soldier who braved no danger——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. What?

Mr. RODDENBERY (continuing). Who enjoyed a holiday——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. What?

Mr. RODDENBERY (continuing). And who drilled and had delightful encampments, let us stop and think——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I can not. If I had the time I would. I will under the five-minute rule.

Gentlemen of the committee, this bill is sweeping, it is inclusive, it takes in all. The committee report says 401,000 soldiers served in this war. Shall we pass this bill and place on the backs of our people added millions to bear? Is that what we shall do in order to encourage men to enlist in defense of the country? Is that the policy that we should adopt to reward men who fight for the flag? Is that a part and parcel of a wise national policy of pensions? On the other hand, gentlemen, will not this character of legislation ultimately arouse the sentiment of the people in the country and cause them to doubt and disavow the wisdom of such legislation? On the contrary will it not cause many soldiers in this country who volunteered from really patriotic motives to reach the conclusion—the deliberate conclusion—that the pensions they get hereafter are not a mark of national love but a token of political cowardice? Will they not come to the conclusion that the Congress of the United States is an asylum where are gathered those whose minds are so fevered with political ambition that all one needs to do is to say, "Pension," and the pension comes? This proposed legislation does not honor the genuine American soldier. It does not dignify the real American soldier. It does not write into our law a statute that bears on its face a just and gracious consideration for the widows of the fighters who enter the armies of this Republic.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, in following this legislation under discussion through the various phases of a legislative bill it did not occur to me that it was necessary to gather much information or argument in favor of such a plain, straightforward bill as that under consideration to-day.

I would that I had plenty of time in which to answer the strictures, the remarks, made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY]. The ignorance displayed by him of the events of 1898 and 1899 is almost sublime. It is only equaled by the supreme indifference with which he reads into this bill something which the bill itself does not contain, and which you to-day know that it does not contain.

Mr. Chairman, I am not one of those who believe that there is no limit to the amount of money that this Government may expend on pensions. The friends of this measure are not of that class who would have our Government enter new fields in the matter of pension legislation. We do believe, however, that the policy heretofore pursued by this Government makes not only possible but necessary such legislation as is proposed by this measure.

You, of course, are aware of the fact that before a widow of a Spanish-American War soldier, or of a soldier who served in the Philippine insurrection, can be pensioned it must be shown to the complete satisfaction of the Pension Department that the soldier died as a direct result of wounds or disease received in the service. This is not the case with the widow or minor child of a soldier who served in any other war of the United States, and this has not been necessary for a period of more than 22 years. The bill under consideration merely seeks to extend the provisions of the act of 1890, applying to widows and minor children of the men who served in the Civil War, to the widows and minor children of the soldiers who served during the Spanish-American War and the Philippine insurrection. Can any good reason, other than that it is an additional expenditure of public money, be given in opposition to such a measure? Can any good reason be shown why any discrimination should be made between the widows and minor children of the soldiers who served in the war of 1898–99 and the war of 1862 and the widows and minor children of the soldiers of other wars?

I claim not; and, therefore, I contend that this bill should become a law. It should be adopted because it agrees with the well-established policy of this Government in caring for the dependents of those who went to the front and fought the battles of our country in the past. We look with pride on the valor and the heroism of the men who have upheld this Government in its hour of need.

In 1898, in answer to the call of the President, thousands of our young men abandoned the peaceful walks of life, shouldered their muskets, and went forth to do or die, as might be required of them. Many of them came back after serving six months, a year, or two years, as the case may be. During this time they were out of the earning class and were forming habits of life in many cases not calculated to later put them in the front ranks of the earners, and on their return many of them were incapacitated. In nine cases out of ten this service in the Tropics, under conditions never before endured by American soldiers, left its marks, and while the hospital records may not tell it, there had been implanted in them the seeds of disease which a few years later was to tell its awful tale of weakness and distress, either in the shortened span of the soldier's life or in the soldier's death.

The men of 1898-99 were widely scattered. In many cases after the war they left their homes and went to the larger centers of population. Being a smaller fraction of the total population than were the men of the Civil War, they did not form that great powerful organization which could and did demand, and rightly so, that the Government should give them needed legislation.

Again, the old home life of half a century ago made it less necessary that the dependents be cared for by outsiders than it is to care for the dependents of the Spanish-American veterans. Many of these dependents are now being cared for by organizations and individuals, comrades in many cases, and it does not seem fair that out of their love for a comrade they should have this additional burden.

I ask you to-day is it not fair that this great Government of our should take from the shoulders of those men who served their country as best they knew how in its hour of need the burden of caring for these dependents?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAGO. I regret I can not yield. I have but a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CRAGO. We closed the Spanish-American War with practically no debts. We have added to our wealth, we have added to our commerce, we have added to the greatness of our country as the direct result of the Spanish War.

Oh, it is easy to stand in places like this and talk about the smallness of the Spanish-American War. I am not here to compare it with any of the other great wars that this country has had, or anything of that kind. I am not here to laud the Spanish-American War soldier. His deeds speak for themselves; and the flag of our country floating proudly to-day on the ruin of a former despotic Government, with a peaceful Republic on our east, and our great extension of commerce, speak louder than any words of mine of the good and splendid service done by those soldiers of the war of 1898 and 1899.

Mr. Chairman, I have practically no time to go into the details of this question. We are simply asking here for the first time on the floor of this Congress some legislation, not for these men themselves, but for those whom they may leave behind them, dependent on them for their living. We are asking that they be cared for by this great Government of ours, and we assert it is abundantly able to assume any burdens in that respect.

And now in looking up the record of the first few months of the Spanish-American War and the first few months of the Civil War, I want to read some remarks made by the Secretary of War in his report, made for an entirely different purpose. I have no doubt it will be a surprise to the gentleman from Georgia. He says:

> Taking all organizations which were in service from 90 days to 5 months during the rebellion, and whose records are sufficiently complete to enable a definite statement to be made with regard to them, it is found that the total strength of these organizations amounted to 157,484 officers and men, and that the deaths in action, or of wounds received in action, numbered 367, while the deaths from disease, or causes other than wounds received in action, numbered 2,356, making the total deaths from all causes 2,723. From the commencement of the Spanish War in the latter part of April until the 30th of September, 1898, there were 274,717 officers and men in service. The deaths in action, or from wounds received in action, during this period numbered 345, and the deaths from disease, or causes other than wounds received in action, numbered 2,565, making the total deaths 2,910. In this connection, it should be remembered that a good part of our Army during this period was operating in a tropical country at the worst season of the year.

The record of deaths in the Spanish War was almost a repetition of the record of deaths in the first five months of the Civil War.

It must be remembered that no complete record was kept of much of the sickness incurred by the soldiers of the Spanish-American War, and to-day it is practically impossible for the widow of such a soldier to show the cause of his death to be due to his service, even though we believe and know the soldier would be living to-day were it not for the disease incurred in the service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time for general debate has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. TRIBBLE was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act if any officer or enlisted man who served 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, either as a regular or volunteer, during the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, has died or shall hereafter die leaving a widow or minor children under the age of 16 years, such widow shall, upon due proof of her husband's death, without proving his death to be the result of his Army or Navy service, be placed on the pension roll from the date of the filing of her application therefor under this act, at the rate of $12 per month during her widowhood, and shall also be paid $2 per month for each child of such officer or enlisted man under 16 years of age, and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow, leaving a child or children of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, such pension shall be paid such child or children until the age of 16: Provided further, That said widow shall not have married said officer or enlisted man after he shall have passed the age of 50 years: And provided further, That the beneficiaries under this act shall include the widows and orphans of acting assistant surgeons, contract doctors, dentists, veterinary surgeons, and officers and enlisted men in the United States Revenue-Cutter Service on vessels temporarily under the control of the War or Navy Departments: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to reduce any pension under any act, public or private.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 7, after the word "insurrection," insert the words "between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, inclusive."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. AUSTIN. I shall be very glad to.

Mr. TRIBBLE. What does the gentleman understand by "service" in this bill? The point I want made clear is this: The United States had a standing Army and a standing Navy at the time when this war began. Of course, a part of that Navy was in defferent parts of the world and did not come in contact with this Spanish-American War service at all. Does this bill include those men, and just because of the fact that the war happened to be going on at that time, are they to receive pensions, when they may not even have heard of the war? They might have been in Alaska and the war have been over before they heard of it.

Mr. AUSTIN. In answer to the gentleman I will say that I had nothing to do with the preparation of this bill, and the author of it will be better prepared to answer the gentleman's question than myself.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I undertook to get an answer from the gentleman who drew the bill, and he declined to answer.

Mr. CRAGO. I will be glad to answer the gentleman.

Mr. AUSTIN. This bill provides for the widows of all officers and men who served 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, either as Regulars or Volunteers, during the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Suppose a battleship was standing off the coast of Alaska and did not participate in the Spanish War, never was ordered to take part in that war, and suppose, for the sake of illustration, that the officers and men on that battleship did not hear of the war until it was over. Would they be included in this bill?

Mr. AUSTIN. I should think their widows would be included. These men were in the service, ready to be called, and for the purpose of meeting the enemy wherever they could be found.

Mr. Chairman, I was elected to the Sixty-first Congress, and one of the first bills I introduced was a bill similar to the one we have under consideration.

I followed the introduction of that bill with a speech on the floor of the House, giving the reasons why, in my opinion, that legislation should receive the favorable consideration of Congress. I not only entertained that view, but I founded my belief in the justice of that legislation on personal knowledge. I knew that it deserved the approval of the American Congress.

Four regiments for the Spanish-American War were enlisted in the district that I have the honor to represent, and one of the smallest counties of that district, Scott County, with a voting population of 2,500, furnished 500 private soldiers to the Spanish-American War. Knoxville, my home town, stood next to New York City in the number of recruits furnished to the Volunteer and Regular Army during the Spanish-American War. Ninety per cent of the men who enlisted in that section of the country were poor men. They were laboring men. They were men who depended upon their daily toil to meet the responsibilities of life. These men were born and reared in a mountain country, in a healthful, salubrious climate. The First Tennessee Regiment served in the Philippines, the Fourth Tennessee in Cuba, and the Ninth Tennessee Immunes in Porto Rico.

Now, I know from traveling over the 10 counties in my district, coming in contact with the men who served in our Army, that many of them came home with tropical fevers and malaria, and every year a majority of these men are afflicted and their earning capacity impaired, if not destroyed, as a result of the recurring tropical fever and malaria which they will carry in their systems as long as they live.

These men, as I say, were laboring men; they were the sons of the toilers in the shop and in the field; young men in the prime of life. One gentleman discussing this bill said that they spent a delightful time in encampment. Why, Mr. Chairman, we have not forgotten the terrors and fatalities that overcame the American troops——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, we certainly have not forgotten when the soldiers had to be trained and schooled and drilled on the field of Chickamauga, near Chattanooga, when the dread scourge of typhoid fever mowed them down by hundreds, until the War Department was compelled to move them into the mountains of eastern Tennessee and northern Alabama.

We can all remember when the Regular Army and the Volunteers were brought home from the battlefields of Santiago, Cuba, where many had died of yellow fever, and the survivors were carried in our vessels to the extreme eastern point of Long Island, and there during the summer nursed and cared for. I remember distinctly the pathetic pictures and the scenes described in the eastern papers about the emaciated condition of the young stalwart men that left the American shores for Cuba when they were unloading from the vessels from Santiago and had to be carried like children into the hospitals and tents and there nursed for months.

Why, there passed through this city only a few months ago a procession carrying the remains of the sailors from the battleship Maine. There were hardships and suffering all along the line, in Porto Rico, in Cuba, in the Philippine Islands, and in the instruction camp at Chickamauga, and elsewhere. As to this war not being full of hardships, I want to quote from the record. The whole mortality of the campaign was 12,000. There were 826 battles and skirmishes, and in 515 of them men were killed or wounded. I distinctly remember the occasion of the First Tennessee Regiment that had actually served out its term in the Philippine Islands and had embarked to return home, when, on account of a dangerous uprising in the islands, they returned and took part in the fighting.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are hundreds of deserving widows of these men scattered all over the country. While the gentleman says that this is a sweeping bill, there are more hardships and restrictions under the provisions of this bill to secure a pension than in any pension bill that ever passed the House for the relief of widows of soldiers. The amendment submitted by the committee requires that the widow must show that she is without means of support other than her daily labor.

Here is a rich and prosperous country. These men volunteered and enlisted without the hope of bounty, pension, or reward. They had no thought or object except the honor of our country and the preservation of our flag, and ill does it become the American Congress to halt or cavil or hesitate for a moment in doing justice to these deserving widows and orphans. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I submit an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will wait until the committee amendments are disposed of. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 10, by inserting after the word "widow" the following: "without means of support other than her daily labor and an actual net income not exceeding $250 a year."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment. I think it ought not to be adopted. It has no place in this bill, in my judgment. Members who have had experience with pension cases in the Pension Bureau know that no class of cases causes more trouble than those that arise under what is known as the remarried widows' act, where a widow receives no pension unless she is able to show, just what this amendment would require, that she has no support except her daily labor and has no income exceeding $250 a year.

In my judgment, and I think my judgment will be borne out by the experience of other Members who have had work in the bureau, no cases offer more chance for injustice, or result in more injustice, than those involving this very provision. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] has spoken very well of the character of men composing regiments sent into the Spanish War and to the Philippines to put down the insurrection there and of the hardships undertaken by these men. He spoke eloquently of the fact that those regiments were recruited from what we know as the common people. It is always so; our soldiers come from that walk in life, and rarely, if ever, is one of them a man of property. Companies were recruited from the district that I represent. I know a very large number of the young men who went to that war and took part in the putting down of the insurrection. Almost without exception they were of the class of men spoken of by the gentleman from Tennessee, men without property; and with very few exceptions they are workingmen to-day, and the widows of the men who have died are in great need. I believe this amendment would make an improper discrimination and would result in opportunity for injustice such as we encounter when we try to operate under the law now in existence containing this provision. I sincerely hope that it will be stricken from this bill.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, just one word in explanation in favor of the committee amendment. Speaking for the friends of this bill, and as it was originally introduced, we of course much prefer to have the measure passed without this committee amendment, but this same provision was for several years in the act which was passed for the benefit of the widows of the soldiers of the Civil War, and it was thought that by making this restriction, while I admit it is a hardship, it would have a better chance of becoming a law at this time with this amendment in it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAGO. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. My recollection is that up to 1890 no widow should be pensioned unless she traced the death of her husband to injury received in line of duty, and in 1890 was passed a law giving the widow $8 a month, provided she could not support herself by her own labor and provided, as the law was administered, that she did not have to exceed $100. That afterwards was changed to $250; but I had the honor, if I recollect right, in 1907, of advocating and voting for the law that increased, some 40 years after the close of the Civil War, the pension of those widows from $8 to $12 a month. This begins at $12 a month.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and, on a division (demanded by Mr. NORRIS), there were—ayes 62, noes 13.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 3, by inserting after the word "minor" the words "child or."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, by striking out after the word "man," in line 20, all of line 20 and all of lines 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25 on page 2, and line 1 on page 3, and inserting in lieu thereof:

"Previous to the passage of this act: Provided, however."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 19, by striking out after the word "shall" the word "not."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 4, by striking out the words "90 days" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "six months."

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I shall not consume the five minutes, but I would have the committee bear in mind that the proposal of this amendment is to require six months' service instead of 90 days' service before the pensionable status shall arise. This does not affect the provision of existing law respecting the widow of any soldier or the dependent child whose husband or father contracted disease or wound and died from that cause. It does not affect that in any manner whatever. They get their pension without regard to whether their husbands served 6 days, 1 day, or 90 days. Under existing law the widow, dependent child, mother, father in certain cases, get a pension where the soldier died from disease, wounds, or from disabilities contracted in the service. Now, this amendment merely provides before the widow of a soldier who contracted no disease, who received no injury, who received no wounds, but who came out without any record of infirmities of any kind, can obtain a pension that he shall have served 6 months instead of 90 days. The fairness of it I simply submit to the judgment of the committee.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In answer to the request for this amendment, permit me to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that all of our pension legislation is based on this 90 days' service, and also to the fact that in the Spanish-American War so fast were events moving that our regiment, the Tenth Pennsylvania, crossed the continent, crossed the Pacific Ocean, engaged a large part of the Spanish army in the Philippine Islands in the engagement of July 31, had nine men killed and many others sent back home as a result. The widows of many men who served in that engagement, under the provision of the gentleman from Georgia, would not be entitled to a pension.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERY) there were—ayes 39, noes 55.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, in looking over the language of the bill, it has been suggested in an informal meeting of the committee, in line 3, page 2, after the word "or," there should be inserted the words "leaving a," so it would read "or leaving a minor child."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to make the verbal correction which is indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the amendment suggested is agreed to.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, at the end of line 5 and the beginning of line 6, by striking out the words "regular or."

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, so many Members have just come in since general debate closed on this bill that I desire to state that the provisions of the present bill give a pensionable status to widows of soldiers of both the Volunteer Army and the Regular Army, as well as the Navy and Marine Corps. Under orders of the War Department during the entire period of the war there were stationed in various parts of the United States soldiers of the Regular Army and naval forces who were never ordered to the front, who were never ordered out of their State or location. They continued during the entire war in just the same status that those soldiers and regiments and naval forces were in prior to the war and have continued since the war. This bill by its provisions gives to widows of officers and soldiers of the Regular Army and Navy the same pensionable status as it gives to the volunteer soldier who went to the front. It gives the same status to the soldier who enlisted in the Regular Army, who remained in the same situation he was the two years before the war, who stayed there during the war, and has been there ever since; and I want Members to understand that the passage of this bill gives to the widow of every officer and enlisted man of the United States Army and Navy a pensionable status although he may never have left the place of his camp or the seas 2,000 miles from Cuba or the Philippines. For these reasons I feel it my duty to oppose it. I submit this amendment respectfully to the judgment of the committee.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, just a few remarks in reply to the proposed amendment. If Members will recall at the beginning of the Spanish-American War our regular establishment was a very, very small Army. The Army was increased in size, and many patriotic men who wished to see service under their country's flag flocked into the Regular regiments just as they did into the Volunteer regiments, and I want to say, as one who served in a volunteer regiment, we never felt better than when we had alongside of us a Regular organization of the United States Army. [Applause.] And I want to say, too, that the men who served in these Regular regiments during the Spanish-American War or the Philippine insurrection—and every one of these organizations served either in Cuba or the Philippines—deserve great praise, and I think it would be the rankest injustice to let these men who saw their three full years of service get less than that which is awarded to the Volunteer soldier——

Mr. HOUSTON. What was the size of the Regular Army?

Mr. CRAGO. It was increased from 25,000 to 62,000, and was then raised, according to my recollection, to something over 100,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand it was 25,000 in the beginning.

Mr. CRAGO. Just about that, I think.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is what I thought.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I heartily agree with the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] regarding the regular soldier. It is true that we had but a meager standing Army when the Spanish-American War broke out and young men rushed into our militia, and those who were acceptable to the Regular Army requirements and whose who were able to pass the stringent rules necessary for admission into the Regular Army served this country, whether they were stationed at home or whether they saw service on the battlefields of Cuba. Those who were at the front were no more willing to shed their blood in the defense of the Stars and Stripes than were those men who joined the Regular Army and under force of circumstances were compelled to spend their time here in this country.

I am glad to hear my friend from Pennsylvania say that, as a volunteer soldier, a member of the militia of his own State, he was glad to see the regular soldiers, the men of the Regular Army, advancing to their aid when their colors were fired upon.

I had not the good fortune to serve either in the militia or with the Regular Army during the War with Spain, but I did offer my services to the colonel in command of the First Regiment of Volunteer Cavalry, known as the Rough Riders. And again, unfortunately for me, his quota was filled, and I was not needed to serve in his regiment. But if I had had the good fortune, as did my good friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO], to serve with the militia, I might well say with him that when our regiment was fired on we would have been mighty glad to have had the assistance and the aid of the Regular Army of the United States. And I for one do not propose to vote for anything that will prevent the regular soldier from receiving the same consideration from this Nation that we propose this afternoon to accord to the volunteer soldier. [Applause.]

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY].

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CURLEY] is recognized.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, like the opposition of the gentleman from Georgia, has a peculiar basis, and one that it is difficult for the average Member of this House to understand, and one that in my opinion can never be understood by the average intelligent American citizen. His opposition to the bill originally was based on the fact that it proposed to do something for the widows or the orphans of persons who had rendered service during the Spanish-American War rather than for those who had died during the war. It is a peculiar position to take, Mr. Chairman, that only those are deserving of reward whose lives have been sacrificed. When that war broke out, Mr. Chairman, there were no means of knowing that it would not eventually result in a world-wide war and might perhaps continue over a period of years; but the fact remains that those men enlisted, and if they were not fortunate enough from the standpoint of the reasoning of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] to have been shot down in battle, then they were deserving of no consideration.

The fact that they stood ready to risk their all that this Union might continue in its mission was of no consideration at all provided they did not die. I contend, Mr. Chairman, that any sum of money that may be appropriated by this Government to make possible a purer and a more ideal degree of patriotism in this country of ours is well spent. After all you can not create patriotism unless it is founded on justice.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that the Spanish War destroyed every vestige of rancor and hatred engendered during the great internecine struggle from 1861 to 1865. [Applause.]

And nowhere was the lesson of unity better evidenced than in the Army, both Regular and Volunteer, where could be found every time the band played "My country, 'tis of thee" men who had fought under Lee vying with those who had fought under

Grant in one sublime chorus proclaiming "Sweet land of liberty." [Prolonged applause.]

It was an object lesson of unity and patriotism as confusing and astounding to monarchical Europe as it was pleasing and gratifying to all America.

The Member from Georgia would have the House believe that the Spanish and Philippine Wars were of little moment, and because no great battles entailing large mortality had been fought consideration other than for widows and orphans of those who had been killed should not be given.

Permit me to point out to the gentleman that in every great war the mortality from disease is invariably three times as great as from wounds or death in actual conflict.

That in this war there were 826 skirmishes and battles and in 515 of these men were killed and wounded.

That these wars which he treats so lightly represent an actual toll of 12,000 lives, each carrying with it not a light but a heavy burden of sorrow.

The pittance proposed in this measure is poor recompense to the widows with children to support and unworthy of a Nation to preserve whose honor and integrity they yielded their all.

These men confronted fevers, pestilence, impure food, and an enemy's bullets, and made sacrifice because they had faith in the honor of their country's lawmakers.

They returned by thousands broken in health, racked with tropical fevers, to find their means of livelihood gone, their places usurped by others less patriotic, and are now informed because they were not killed in battle they deserve no consideration.

This bill provides poor recompense for needy dependents, and I regret that its terms are not more liberal. True, it provides against actual poverty, but no more. It states:

A bill (H. R. 17479) to pension widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or Philippine insurrection.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act if any officer or enlisted man who served 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, either as a regular or volunteer, during the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, inclusive, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, has died or shall hereafter die leaving a widow, without means of support other than her daily labor, and an actual net income not exceeding $250 per year, or minor child or children under the age of 16 years, such widow shall, upon due proof of her husband's death, without proving his death to be the result of his Army or Navy service, be placed on the pension roll from the date of the filing of her application therefor under this act, at the rate of $12 per month during her widowhood, and shall also be paid $2 per month for each child of such officer or enlisted man, under 16 years of age, and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow, leaving a child or children of such officer or enlisted man, under the age of 16 years, such pension shall be paid such child or children until the age of 16: Provided, That in case a minor child is insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless, the pension shall continue during the life of said child, or during the period of such disability, and shall commence from the date of application therefor after the passage of this act: Provided further, That said widow shall have married said officer or enlisted man previous to the passage of this act: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to reduce any pension under any act, public or private.

SEC. 2. That no agent, attorney, or other person engaged in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claim under the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, contract for, demand, receive, or retain for such services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claim a sum greater than $5, which sum shall be payable, only on the order of the Commissioner of Pensions, by the pension agent making payment of the pension allowed; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or shall wrongfully withhold from the pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of a pension or claim allowed or due such pensioner or claimant under this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every offense, be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned at hard labor not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

This bill represents a partial measure of justice. Deserving women and little children throughout this broad land devoutly pray for its enactment; let their prayer be granted.

Realize that the marvelous prosperity and progress of this Republic was in a measure due to the loyalty of those who served. Let all share a portion of the burden entailed by this bill, then none will be overburdened, and all can rejoice in the knowledge that our best traditions have been respected, and that justice has once more been established for the survivors of those who preserved our national honor.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 3, noes 63.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 7, by striking out the word "filing" and substituting therefor the words "approval and allowance."

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this bill provides in the usual form that occurs in other pension legislation that the pension shall accrue to the person who is to draw it from the date of the filing of the application for the pension. This amendment proposes that the pension shall accrue to the person who may be entitled to it from the date of approval and allowance of the pension applied for and not from the date of filing.

The object of this amendment is to so frame this law that it will not cause the pension lawyers and political manipulators to stir heaven and earth to convince every widow of every Spanish-American War soldier that she has got some ground for drawing a pension and that the quicker she gets her application filed the quicker she will begin to draw. The object of this is to prevent, if possible, what exists in a great measure today, the practice of pension attorneys and other agitators along this line urging on a widow that for some particular cause she is dependent, when she is not, or that her income is so small, when it is not, so that they can get the pension application on file early and quick, knowing that if it takes them 10 years to logroll it through the Pension Office, when it does come there will be a big Christmas gift in the bag. My purpose is to so amend the bill that the widow who is entitled to a pension will file her application, establish the fact of her right to the pension, and that the Pension Office will, after prompt and fair action, approve and allow it, and that the pension will accrue from that date.

I respectfully submit the amendment to the judgment of the committee.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, this is perhaps the first pension act ever offered in Congress, prodigally reckless in its pension legislation as it has been, which has proposed to establish a new class of pensioners and at the same moment provide an arrears-of-pensions act. If gentlemen will go to the files of Congress and turn over the records of the Forty-second and the Forty-third Congresses—I think it is—and will read the discussions that attended the consideration and passage of the arrears-of-pensions act they will find some very illuminating statements from such distinguished men as Mr. Garfield, of Ohio, afterwards Senator and President, at that time chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and others.

The appropriations for pensions had then reached what appeared to them to be the enormous total of about $30,000,000. In discussing further legislation it was suggested that if the act was liberalized pensions might reach the total of $50,000,000 a year. In reply to that suggestion Mr. Garfield, and Mr. Atkins, of Tennessee, and one or two other gentlemen suggested that they had already reached the summit of pension appropriations and that the decline had begun.

The arrears-of-pensions bill was enacted in 1879, and gave pensioners a claim upon the Treasury from the date of the incurrence of disabilities. I have heard in the last few days from a gentleman formerly a Member of this House, and a distinguished one, how he was instrumental in turning over to one of his constituents the sum of $9,000, with which the constituent had the good fortune and the good judgment to buy black lands in Iowa, which made him a rich man, and from that day to this he has lived in luxury on his fortunate investment. That is one instance of how such bills as this have operated in the past.

Mr. Chairman, if I may be indulged for a moment longer, I want to tell the House a little story that came to me a few months ago: An eminent gentleman and citizen of this city told me he was at a dinner party at which Mr. William R. Morrison, formerly a Member of this House from Illinois, and afterwards chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, was present. They were discussing the enormous growth of pensions.

Mr. Morrison said that if the Republican Party during the period from 1870 down to the passage of the arrears-of-pensions act in 1879, and subsequently, had remained in unquestioned control of the country, and if its political supremacy had not been seriously menaced, in his judgment Mr. Garfield's opinion would have proved to be correct, and the pension charges would not have reached $50,000,000. But greedy pension attorneys saw an opportunity. A raid on the Treasury was organized. Voters combined and made their demands and then, as now, they compelled Members of Congress to do their bidding. Billions of dollars have been paid out since and more billions, I fear, will be paid out hereafter.

Mr. Morrison said in the same conversation that Mr. Garfield stated that it would be imposible for it to reach such a sum as $50,000,000, because long before that the American people would have lost their patience, and the system would break down of its own weight.

A few days ago, in discussing this particular bill, I ventured to say that it appeared that no demand for pensions made by any organized body of voters could be withstood. I did not anticipate that there would be so speedily and so overwhelmingly submitted evidence of the truth of my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The rules of the Committee of the Whole require that when an amendment is proposed the Member offering it may speak for five minutes, and after that some gentleman in opposition must be recognized for five minutes, and thereafter no other debate shall be in order on that amendment. I claim the floor in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman shall have the floor.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I yield the floor to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. CURRY].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that under the rules and practice of the House a Member recognized under the five-minute rule can not yield time to another Member.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I have repeatedly tried to get the attention of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] was recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Did the Chair rule that I can not yield the floor to another Member for debate in Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not yield time under the five-minute rule. If the gentleman from Massachusetts yields the floor, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. CURRY], if that will suit the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. That is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to go into a lengthy discussion of the merits of this bill. With the most that has been said on the floor of the House I entirely agree. There are a few arguments made by the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. RODDENBERY, that, however, I want to answer. I take this occasion to say that I think the gentleman from Georgia or the gentleman from any other State who stands up here and intimates to the people of this country that any man who went out and bore arms for the Government is not a patriot is misrepresenting his constituents.

I was a soldier in the Spanish-American War, and I served for 21 months in the Philippine Islands. My father bore arms for four years in the Confederate Army and stood shoulder to shoulder with Senator THORNTON, and they were "bunkies" for many a day. My grandfather was a soldier in the Mexican War and my great-grandfather fought with George Washington, and I am proud of them all and have no apologies to offer for what I myself did. I say to you, sir, we soldiers who went to the Philippines were all of us anxious to get home just as soon as we possibly could. I think you will all remember that when the American Army and the Philippine army were facing each other outside of Manila on the 4th and 5th of February, 1899, every soldier prayed that we would have no war; but it came, no matter who was to blame—it was really a soldier's battle—shots were exchanged between the armies.

The treaty of Paris was then pending, and many here will recall that it was impossible at that time to secure ratification of that treaty until Mr. William J. Bryan, the Democratic leader then, came to Washington and had a conference with the Democratic Senators, and owing to his persuasive eloquence the treaty of Paris was ratified by 1 majority in the United States Senate, and the Philippines became a part of this country.

The first American troops in the Philippines were State troops. They had not originally enlisted for service beyond the borders of their Commonwealths. They had become national guardsmen to uphold their constitutions and the statutes of their States, if necessary, after all civil power had failed, by force of arms. That is all.

But the accident of an international conflict took them into Federal service. The President ordered them to Cuba and to Porto Rico, and then to the Philippines, and, like good soldiers, they obeyed.

They landed and occupied Manila on the 13th of August, 1898, and thereafter to the night of the 5th of February, 1899, were inactive—in garrison. They became restive. They yearned to return to the homeland. They were among strangers in the Tropics, 10,000 miles from the White House, and many were sick, and some others had died from disease contracted in the line of duty.

But a clash came between them and the army of Aguinaldo, and they went forward, following the flag in its defense, valiantly, and to the glory of the Republic. Later they were relieved and were succeeded by Regulars, and Volunteer Regulars, and the war, inaugurated without fault on the part of the Americans who actually engaged in it, was prosecuted, as of record, to the 4th day of July, 1902. As a matter of fact, it was prolonged even into 1906.

In the Spanish-American War and the Philippine insurrection incidental thereto, more than 400,000 men took part, only about 100,000 serving exclusively in the Philippine Islands—Regulars, Volunteer Regulars, and Volunteers.

There were, the statistics show, all told 826 battles, engagements, and skirmishes, in 515 of which Americans were killed and wounded. The total mortality of the campaigns was 12,000. In other words, the most of the men who went to the Spanish-American War still live and are not dead heroes, and because of this fact some gentlemen, it seems, are of opinion that the average Spanish-American War soldier was not much of a fighter; that instead, he was a faker.

A soldier may survive a war, he may never have been shot at, he may never have fatally experienced dangers commonly attending such strife, and yet he may have rendered valuable and useful service.

I cite a case in point, that of the Thirty-first Infantry Volunteer Regiment, commanded by a gallant officer, Col. James S. Pettit, a disciplinarian of the first order. Gen. Otis was in quest of a regiment for hazardous duty, requiring tact and diplomacy on the part of officers, to go against the Moros in Mindanao, fierce and ferocious warriors, professional pirates and religious fanatics. At least half a million of them. They dwelt within a stone's throw of the equator, so to speak. He could spare but one regiment to keep the peace down there, and he detailed the Thirty-first.

There was not a night of the long stay among the Musselmen that assassination, and oftimes massacre, of the entire post was not imminent, there being one, two, and three companies at a post.

Yet so successful was the undertaking that when Gen. Kobbe, commanding the Department of Mindanao and Jolo, came to muster out the regiment in 1901 he expressed deep regret therefor, saying in orders:

> It was the fortune of the regiment to have little of the active field service for which it is preeminently fitted by discipline, through instruction, and the determined character and manhood of a carefully selected personnel, but they may return to their homes with the fullest assurance that the services of no other organization in the Philippines has been more valuable than theirs scattered among hostile and suspicious people, alien in race, religion, and habits, the regiment by the fine example of its conduct and by just and honorable dealings converted these into friends and adherents. It could have rendered no greater service to the country to which it is returning, nor to the races with whom it has been thrown. From the beginning the duties have been most trying and perplexing, often at lonely and remote stations in a tropical climate and without respite and relaxation.

To-day, because the Thirty-first began its occupation in the right way, Mindanao is not only amenable to American rule, but it is content and prosperous and protests against any change from the governmental order of things under the Stars and Stripes.

It was said by the gentleman from Georgia that the surviving soldiers of the Spanish-American War are fakers. Wherein, pray?

We associate with them daily. They belong to the professions, they are in all lines of business, they even have seats on the floor of this House, and one of them was President of the United States, and all the world knows that he was, and many people desire that again he may be returned to that high position.

Indeed, there are some conspicuous living heroes of the Spanish-American War whose careers form pages of our brilliant military history who scarcely can be classed as fakers. As, for example, Gen. Wood, than whom in these latter days the Army has not had a bigger or brainier head. Then there are Funston, and Bell, and Pershing, and Col. Lockett, who commanded the Eleventh Cavalry, the only volunteer mounted regiment serving in the Philippines in the days of the empire. Then there are many others, and of those who are gone there was Lawton, who rests in Arlington, a grand soldier, a fair fighter, and a fine gentleman.

Turning to the Navy we find inscribed on imperishable tablets such names as Dewey, Bob Evans, Schley, Sampson, Sigsbee, and Sperry, and they are magnificent men, who earned for our Navy by their service in the Spanish-American War a rank in efficiency, discipline, and achievement not eclipsed by any navy of Europe.

The Spanish-American War was not much of a war in its number of casualties, but in accomplishment it scored for the renown of the Republic and the courage of the people as no other event since the War between the States.

The truth is, Mr. Chairman, and every Member of this House who knows his constituency knows it is, the Spanish War veterans are among the good, respected, and industrious citizens of their communities. They do not and have not attempted to do business on their soldier records. Indeed, if they are to be blamed it is because they do not exploit these enough to let it be simply known that they were in our latest war, which did more to make the United States a recognized world power and first-class nation than any other cause contributing to the effacement of the almost universal impression among foreigners that the Yankee's God was gold and his spunk spurious.

Furthermore, the Spanish War demonstrated beyond all cavil the existence in the souls of our youth the same spirit of patriotism that made minute men in 1776 and volunteers in sixty and sixty-five, so that we need not fear.

It is now 14 years since war was declared against Spain by the Washington Government. The Spanish War veterans have not asked and are not asking as much as a favor at your hands. They only say to you that precedent should be followed, that indigent widows and orphans of dead Spanish War veterans should be cared for, in part, by the United States. They themselves are doing this now. They should not be expected to, though; they should not be permitted to do so. It is discreditable to the Government and the people to put this burden on these veterans or to suffer them longer to assume it.

Nor do I believe that Congress will be parsimonious and cheap in this matter. Individual pique may prompt certain Members to be hostile to and slanderous in their assaults against these veterans, but, in my judgment, there are too many true-blue Americans in the Senate and the House to defeat, or long delay, the passage of this bill, meritorious in every sentence and word, although, it must be said, scant in its liberality.

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we are getting away from the amendment that has been offered here.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman to make a motion to strike out the last word?

Mr. SPEER. Yes. I wish to speak on the amendment that was offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY]. His amendment is that the pensions shall begin with the date of approval instead of the date of the filing of the application.

Now, that is against the general rule. Why should we introduce a new rule in pension legislation, which has not been in force before? It would be a premium on the holding up of approvals, to make pensions begin at the time of approval. Surely the Members of the House will not favor that.

Also, the remarks by the gentleman from Texas on this amendment as to arrears of pensions are out of place. There is nothing of that kind in this bill. It does not grant to anyone arrears of pension. The pensions will begin only from the date of filing of the application. It does not provide that the pension will be retroactive, and go back to an earlier period.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I am opposed to the adoption of this amendment for reasons that every man on the floor must be familiar with. All of us know that at times it requires us to go two or three times to the Pension Bureau in order to obtain a pension for a deserving soldier or a more deserving widow of a soldier. If the pension was to start from the day on which the application was approved, then, in many instances, the widow of the soldier would be deprived of the legitimate pension sometimes for as long as a period of six or eight months. I do not believe it is the desire, wish, or intention of the gentleman from Georgia to impose a hardship of this nature on the Spanish-American War soldier or on his widow. I think that if he will think for a moment or two longer he will realize that the widow of a soldier, if she is actually entitled at all to this pension, is entitled to it from the date on which the application is filed.

In this connection I wish to state that in every pension bill, whether general or private, it reads that the pension shall start from the date on which the application is filed. I trust the gentleman from Georgia, in order to have us pass on to more important business, will withdraw his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERY) there were 3 ayes and 66 noes.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this section and all amendments close in five minutes.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, before that is put, I want to state that there was an understanding that I should have eight amendments, and I really only have six, and this is the fifth.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, by adding, in line 19 after the colon, the following: "Provided further, That any widow or child as aforesaid shall not be construed to have a pensionable status under this act unless it is affirmatively shown that the deceased husband or father being an officer or enlisted man was during the said War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection actually engaged in or present and exposed to danger in one or more battles or skirmishes."

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to direct the committee's attention to this amendment. It provides that a pensionable status shall accrue to the widow of an enlisted soldier of the Army or Navy who was present at or actually exposed to danger in one or more battles or one or more skirmishes during the war.

The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. CURRY] observed a moment ago that there was fighting in the Philippines and in Cuba. I well understand it. My amendment proposes—and I should be glad to support not only the amendment, but the bill, if the amendment is adopted—that those who shall be pensioned under this act shall be the widows and children of men whose husband or father at some time during said War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection engaged in or was present and exposed to danger in one or more battles or skirmishes.

Now, gentlemen, what can be the objection to this amendment? It opens the door of the Treasury to the widow of every soldier or sailor engaged in a battle or a skirmish, or exposed to danger in a battle or skirmish, or who was actually in battle, although he sustained no injury, received no wound, and contracted no disease. What more does a soldier or sailor want than that? What more does wisdom, justice, or gratitude require?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. As I understand, the motion of the gentleman from New Mexico was to close all debate on this matter in five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. That motion was withdrawn.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, if the committee adopt the amendment the effect on the bill is to say that if a soldier was engaged in a battle or skirmish, or exposed to danger in a battle or skirmish, his widow and children are entitled to a pensionable status. Remember that the present and existing law now gives to every widow and child of a soldier a pension without regard to the time of service; if while in camp or on a vessel of the Navy or in the Army anywhere he was wounded or contracted a disease of which he then or subsequently died. Let me call attention to the fact that unless you adopt this amendment, if a war vessel was at New York or in California during the War with Spain, when the officer or enlisted man of such ship dies the widow and children of every such man would draw a pension under this bill.

Do the people indorse it? Is it right, is it just that the family of the regular officers and regular enlisted soldiers of the Army or Navy should have this pension when they were in the service before and in it now and were moored and anchored in the different ports and harbors of this country far removed from the seat of war? Yet this bill takes them in. My amendment does not deny to naval officers or an Army officer or an enlisted man of the Navy or an enlisted man of the Army or the volunteer forces a pension for his dependent widow if he was engaged in battle skirmish, exposed to danger in one or more battle skirmishes. Gentlemen, vote it down if you choose, but I submit that it is founded in the very essence of justice, it is embedded in the eternal principles of love and gratuity to those who deserve it, and it distinguishes between the struggles in the great war of the sixties and the skirmishes of the war of 1898, if you may so call it. I hope gentlemen will support this amendment, and I respectfully submit it to your candid judgment as Representatives of all of the American people. I am ready to support this bill if this amendment is adopted in substance as offered. It is just, and the country and the fighting soldiers will approve it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not prevail. There can be no reason founded in justice and right why the widow of a soldier who died in the service from disease should be denied a pension, and the widow of a soldier who died in battle should be given a pension. This amendment, as I understand it, provides that the widow shall not receive a pension unless the soldier engaged in actual battle and was subjected to danger on the battle field. The record of all the armies of the past 200 years, as reported in Longmore's tables, shows that out of every four men who died one died as the result of wounds received upon the battle field, while three died from diseases contracted in the service.

Mr. RODDENBERY. But they get a pension for that now.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No. The gentleman proposes to cut off the widows of those who faced disease in the hospitals, who subjected themselves to the real dangers of war, without its pomp and glorious circumstance, and to confine the gratuity, as he chooses to call it, to the widows of those who were fortunate enough to find the enemy on the battle field.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The gentleman is in error.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I was a soldier in the Spanish War, and though I did not participate in any of its battles I have nevertheless seen soldiers die. I believe there is some compensation for the sacrifice when a soldier gives up his life upon the battle field. It is at least a glorious death, and his children will point their children to the fact as their brightest legacy. He goes down in the storm of battle cheered on by the shouts of his comrades, the gleam of his banners, and the din of resounding arms. He gets some taste of—

> That stern joy which warriors feel
> In foemen worthy of their steel.

But the boy who is stricken with disease, who languishes and suffers the tortures which are known to none as they are known to the helpless, fever-racked soldier in an Army hospital, is the one who makes the real sacrifice, who pays the debt of patriotism in its fullest measure. No soldier ever feared the enemy on the battle field; it is that silent, sulking foe, who passes the sentinel unchallenged and saps the lifeblood of its victim as he sleeps, who sounds no bugle call, beats no drum, and whose battle field is the division hospital. This is the enemy the soldier fears, and from him, and him alone, he prays the god of battles for deliverance.

Two boys march side by side, undergo all the hardships of the campaign, both inspired by the same lofty patriotism. One is stricken with disease, and while he suffers the tortures of a pain-racked body and a broken heart the other goes out to battle. Both survive; yet the gentleman from Georgia would pension the widow of the one whose great good fortune brought him face to face with the enemy, and say to the widow of the other, "Your husband's sacrifices are not worthy this grateful tribute of his country's love." I know that the soldiers who were fortunate enough to participate in the battles of that war would never countenance such an unjust discrimination, and I do not believe this House will. [Applause.]

The soldier who volunteered in the Spanish War, who obeyed every lawful order of his superior officer, is entitled to as much credit and his widow is entitled to as generous consideration by this Government as the soldier who, by some good fortune, was able to meet the enemy on the battle field. [Applause.] And in the name of thousands of soldiers who volunteered, animated by patriotism as high as ever inspired soldiers who engaged in any battle in the history of this Republic, I call upon this House, by an overwhelming vote, to vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERY) there were—ayes 4, noes 78.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 1 insert:

"Provided, That the widow of any soldier or sailor of the Civil War who married the soldier after June 27, 1890, shall be entitled to the same pensionable status as those widows who married the soldier or sailor prior to that date."

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has already reserved the point of order.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve all points of order on that amendment. No point of order has been stated, and I reserve all points of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold that the reservation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is quite as comprehensive as that of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to give pensions to widows of soldiers of the Civil War who married after June 27, 1890. It is proposed, now, in this bill to give to the widows of soldiers of the War with Spain a pension, regardless of the origin of the cause of the death of the soldier. That war occurred eight years after the passage of the law of 1890, which limited pensions to widows who married prior to that date. There are many of these old soldiers who have but little, and some who have nothing outside of their pensions on which to support themselves and wives. If they married after that date, their widows are left penniless. It is the dread of their declining years to know that this Government will not care for their widows. They go to their graves feeling that the Government which they defended is not entirely just; and they are right. It is not just, and we here in Congress are responsible for the injustice. This amendment will cure this most unjust discrimination, and we ought to pass it. I am in favor of the bill now before the House, and I trust it will become a law at this session, but we can not justify our course in depriving this other class of widows of the right to a pension. When we do justice to a part, why not do justice to all? There are thousands of widows who married soldiers of the Civil War in their old age and cared for them in their declining years. They are not pensionable because they married after June 27, 1890. Why should that arbitrary date control a widow's right to pension? I appeal to this House to correct this wrong. Let us do justice, even at this late day. Twenty-two years have passed since then, and that is all too long a time for Congress to permit this wrong to prevail. There are thousands of old soldiers who have no other means of support for themselves and wives except their pensions.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois if at the time of the passage of that amendment it was not the intention of the House to do away with the idea of women marrying soldiers for the purpose of obtaining pensions after their death, and if it is not a fact, in spite of the law at that time, that these widows married old soldiers knowing they were not going to receive any pension because of the passage of the act of June 27, 1890? So the widows merely desired, as the gentleman from Illinois well stated, to care for the soldiers in their old age; that affection instead of a paltry pension was the basis for their act.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; and many widows who married after 1890 were widows of soldiers who had died, and these widows were then getting pensions and gave up the right to a pension and married the soldier knowing that under that law they would be deprived of the pension in the case of his death. That reason does not exist now. Twenty-two years have elapsed since that law was passed. We have passed a law increasing pensions to the old soldiers; we have passed a law increasing pensions to widows who married prior to that date, and I submit to the House in justice and fairness that those widows who married after that time should be given a pension.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insist upon his point of order?

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, with all due deference to the wishes and arguments of the gentleman from Illinois, I must make the point of order against his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Chairman, I insist it is germane. The subject matter of the bill is pensions. It relates to pensions to widows, and the amendment which I offer relates to the same subject. You have no right under the rules to defeat this joint provision simply because it relates to the widows of another war.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not had an opportunity to look up any precedents on the question, but as the Chair understands it a measure of the kind referred to, covered by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, would come from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. This comes from the Committee on Pensions, and this relates entirely to widows of officers and enlisted men who served in the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection and not with the War between the States, commonly called the Civil War. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is not germane to the bill, and therefore the Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken, and sustains the same.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 3, line 2, by striking out the words "previous to the passage of this act" and substitute therefor the following: "Prior to July 5, 1902."

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the bill which we have before us provides that the widow of a soldier who married prior to the passage of this act shall be entitled to a pensionable status if other conditions required obtain. The amendment which I offer provides that the widow only shall have a pensionable status in case where the soldier was married to her prior to July 5, 1902. Now, the holdings of the War Department are to the effect that the War with Spain and the Philippine insurrection ended July 4, 1902. My amendment provides that only the widows of those soldiers who were married on that day, or prior to the close of the war, shall have a pensionable status. Under the provisions of this bill the effect of it is that a strong, hale, healthy young man, with no disease, no sickness, no dangers in the insurrection or skirmishes, comes out a single man and subsequently marries, and if in the prime of life, from an accident or otherwise, he dies, his widow draws a pension, although during the period of his service he was a single man.

No such consideration on principle has yet been applied to the widows of the old soldiers of a war that was a war, and the wars in the past were Herculean as compared with the Spanish War. And I say, if you propose to extend pensions broadcast and open the doors of the Treasury of this country on political grounds, the amendment I offer is wise, prudent, and well timed. This may be, gentlemen, a good political bill to pass. It originates from the Republican side of the House and comes from a Democratic committee. It may afford a refuge of political safety for some gentlemen whom the "bull moose" seeks and would destroy, and possibly others, but when it comes to real patriotism and real reward to the brave American soldier, it is a travesty, it is a fraud. It is a political sham. Its passage will be an unwise use, with all due respect to my colleagues, of sacred legislative power with which the people have intrusted us.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I notice this afternoon's procedure is very similar to what has frequently occurred during this session.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I am glad the gentleman has arrived. He has not been here during the day.

Mr. SLOAN. I have listened to three installments of the gentleman from Georgia, at least, and expect to hear some more, because in the last eight months when pension matters came up, two brilliant young Members from Georgia, RODDENBERY and TRIBBLE, have succeeded in obstructing the embattled hosts of those beyond the middle aisle. And it reminds me of a Spanish War story.

Some citizens of this city decided to remove what they considered a reproach upon their race and decided to furnish a company, uniformed, armed, and equipped at private expense, and present it to President McKinley on a certain day shortly after the declaration of war. The time for the company to appear was set at 4 o'clock p. m. President McKinley was waiting for it down in front of the White House. Four o'clock came, and no company; 4.10 o'clock came, and no company; 4.20 o'clock came, and no company, not a foot beat; 4.30 o'clock came, and no company, not a drum beat. Finally the President said to his private secretary, "Cortelyou, call up the barracks and see what is the matter with that company." The voice that came back said: "Mr. Cortelyou, Mr. Cortelyou, send down the White House police to der barracks. There are two drunken Irishmens in front of der barracks and won't let the company oudt." [Laughter.]

I thought when they got through with the pensions relating to the Civil War there would be no further obstructions in front of the barracks. But I know now that the two obstructionists still stand before the barracks. [Laughter.]

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment has been exhausted. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 65.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

SEC. 2. That no agent, attorney, or other person engaged in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claim under the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, contract for, demand, receive, or retain for such services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claim a sum greater than $5, which sum shall be payable, only on the order of the Commissioner of Pensions, by the pension agent making payment of the pension allowed; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or shall wrongfully withhold from the pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of a pension or claim allowed or due such pensioner or claimant under this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every offense, be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned at hard labor not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Page 3, line 10, strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to section 2, in lines 11 and 12, by striking out the words "pension agent" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "disbursing clerk."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, lines 11 and 12, strike out the words "pension agent" and insert in lieu thereof the words "disbursing clerk."

Mr. CRAGO. We accept that amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that under the pension appropriation bill adopted the other day and signed by the President the pension agencies are abolished, to take effect on the last day of January, and if you amend the bill as you propose now you are giving the authority to the officer designated in that change of the pension law, whereas the authority will remain in the pension agencies of the country until the 1st of January?

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that he insert after the word "agent" the words "or disbursing clerk."

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Would it not be safer to insert before the gentleman's amendment, "on and after the date the new law goes into effect"?

Mr. BORLAND. I think in deference to these suggestions the language would be perfectly clear if all these words "by the pension agent making payment of the pension allowed" should be stricken out, making the payment only on the order of the Commissioner of Pensions. It strikes me that that language is clear without designating who makes the payment. The words "by the pension agent making payment of the pension allowed" do not add anything to the force of the language. I ask leave to modify the amendment by striking out, on lines 11 and 12, the words "by the pension agent making payment."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, lines 11 and 12, by striking out the words "by the pension agent making payments."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment, to insert a semicolon after the word "Pensions," in line 11, in lieu of the comma.

Mr. MANN. The semicolon is there.

Mr. BORLAND. It is after the word "allowed." It should be after the word "Pensions." If the amendment, however, is not necessary I will withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri withdraws his amendment.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill favorably, with amendments, to the House.

[By unanimous consent, leave was granted to the following gentlemen to extend their remarks in the RECORD: Mr. CURLEY, Mr. CRAGO, Mr. THAYER, Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey, Mr. SLOAN, Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia, Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi, Mr. SPEER, and Mr. DONOHOE.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill, with amendments, to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker, having resumed the chair, Mr. CLAYTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 17470) to pension widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or Philippine insurrection, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reports that that committee has had under consideration the House bill 17470, and has authorized him to report it back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Is it in order now to offer a motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. Not right now. That comes after the third reading. If a separate vote is not demanded on any amendment the Chair will put the amendments en bloc. The question is on agreeing to amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill

The question was taken, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit with instructions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] offers a motion to recommit with instructions, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Moved to recommit H. R. 17470, a bill to pension widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or Philippine insurrection, to the Committee on Pensions, with instructions to said committee to report the same back with the following amendments:

Amend, on page 2, by adding in line 19 after the colon the following: "Provided further, That no widow or child as aforesaid shall be construed to have a pensionable status under this act unless it is affirmatively shown that the deceased husband or father—being an officer or enlisted man—was during the said War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection actually engaged in or present and exposed to danger in one or more battles or skirmishes."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I move to lay the motion to recommit on the table.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman does not wish to debate it, I am perfectly willing to withdraw the motion to table it.

Mr. MANN. The motion to recommit is not debatable after the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The motion to recommit is debatable unless the previous question is moved on the motion to recommit.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman is not mistaken.

The SPEAKER. It is as broad as it is long.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the motion to table an amendment would carry the bill with it, and I think a motion to table a motion to recommit might do the same thing.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman is mistaken. The reason that a motion to table an amendment takes all the papers with it is very obvious, but a motion to recommit has nothing to do with the papers.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not had a chance to look it up, but I think the gentleman is endangering the bill by his motion.

Mr. MURRAY. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his motion to lay on the table. I have tried to help the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO], who has had charge of the bill in the committee, and have had an understanding with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] with reference to his attitude in regard to this entire matter.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I do not understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts is under any obligation to make that request. I certainly appreciate it, but I ask the gentleman not to make the request at my instance, because I do not understand that it is any violation of the agreement.

Mr. MURRAY. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] to withdraw the motion, so that we will not have to vote it down.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts withdraw his motion to table?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question being taken on a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERY), there were—ayes 10, noes 57.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 5294. An act to establish in the Bureau of Statistics in the Department of Agriculture a Division of Markets; to the Committee on Agriculture.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 38. An act to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes;

H. R. 20362. An act granting a pension to Catherine Wise;

H. R. 26236. An act conferring upon the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co. the privileges, rights, and conditions heretofore granted the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Co. to construct a railroad across certain lands in Comanche County, Okla.;

H. R. 26099. An act authorizing the towns of Ball Bluff, Libby, and Cornish, in the county of Aitkin, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in Aitkin County, Minn.;

H. R. 26235. An act to authorize the city of Chicago to construct a bridge across the Little Calumet River, at Indiana Avenue, in said city;

H. R. 24565. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes;

H. R. 24016. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 11877. An act to amend section 8 of the food and drugs act, approved June 30, 1906.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Georgia to withdraw his point of order for a moment. I wish to ask for an order concerning the hour of daily meeting of the House.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I withhold the point of order for a moment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that for the remaining days until the final adjournment of Congress the daily hour of meeting of the House shall be 11 o'clock instead of 12.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman simply make that for the remaining days of this week?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. At the request of the gentleman from Illinois, the minority leader, I make the request for the balance of this week.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that during the remaining days of this week the hour of daily meeting be fixed at 11 o'clock instead of 12. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I now renew my point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CRAGO. I move a call of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Would not the gentleman attain his object just as well to raise the question on the passage of the bill, rather than on the motion to recommit? We have been here all day and some of us are pretty tired.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I should be more than pleased to accede to any suggestion coming from the gentleman from Illinois, but in this particular instance I raise the question now of no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The previous question having been ordered on the bill, it being Calendar Wednesday, if the House should now adjourn would the bill come up to-morrow as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. The bill would come up next Wednesday as unfinished business.

Mr. MANN. I think the Chair is right.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, may I ask if, by unanimous consent, the bill can be taken up to-morrow, failing the absence of a quorum at this time, as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. Speaker CANNON decided half a dozen times that you could do anything by unanimous consent.

Mr. MURRAY. Then I ask, Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent that this matter be considered the unfinished business when the House meets to-morrow at 11 o'clock, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent, the previous question having been ordered on the bill and amendments to final passage, that it shall be considered as unfinished business, when the House meets to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I want to see this measure pass, but I want to know, if some one who is not here to-day should object to-morrow, would it interfere with the bill being considered as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. He could not object to-morrow to what was done to-day. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I am constrained to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-one Members present—not a quorum.

Mr. CRAGO. I move a call of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, was not the House dividing when the point of no quorum was made?

The SPEAKER. It was. The call of the House will take place automatically. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURRAY. Is the roll call on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia to recommit?

The SPEAKER. The roll call is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia to recommit, and those in favor of the motion will answer "aye," and those opposed will answer "no."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 13, nays 166, answered "present" 8, not voting 203, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House do now adjourn. All in favor will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Fifty-one gentleman have risen in the affirmative. Those opposed will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Thirty gentlemen have risen in the negative. The ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to.

Accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, August 22, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. ADAMSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13563) to provide for the construction of four revenue cutters, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1232), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FITZGERALD: A bill (H. R. 26371) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes; to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. ROTHERMEL: Resolution (H. Res. 706) to pay witnesses and other expenses of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor; to the Committee on Accounts.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CURLEY: A bill (H. R. 26372) granting an increase of pension to John Carroll; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26373) granting an increase of pension to Humphrey E. Connors; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26374) granting an increase of pension to Daniel Sullivan; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, petition of citizens of the State of New Hampshire, against passage of a parcel-post bill; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio: Memorial of the Grand Council of Ohio, United Commercial Travelers, favoring 1-cent letter postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, memorial of the Grand Council of Ohio, United Commercial Travelers, favoring change in date of national elections; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, August 22, 1912.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. GALLINGER took the chair as President pro tempore under the previous order of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. BORAH and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. CULBERSON. At his request, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], on account of illness, be excused from further attendance in the Senate at the present session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request will be granted.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Crane	McCumber	Root
Bacon	Culberson	Martin, Va.	Simmons
Bankhead	Cullom	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Cummins	Massey	Smith, Md.
Bourne	Dillingham	Myers	Smoot
Bristow	du Pont	Nelson	Thornton
Bryan	Gallinger	Overman	Townsend
Burnham	Heyburn	Page	Warren
Catron	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Wetmore
Chamberlain	Jones	Pomerene	Works

Mr. THORNTON. I announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. FOSTER]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to state that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably absent from the city. I desire this statement to stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty Senators have answered to their names—not a quorum. The names of the absentees will be called.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. TILLMAN answered to his name when called.

Mr. OLIVER entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names; not a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

After some little delay, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. REED, Mr. CLAPP, and Mr. CURTIS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to state that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and myself were at a conference committee meeting and that is the reason why we did not sooner appear.

Mr. SANDERS entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (at 10 o'clock and 28 minutes a. m.). Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. Without objection, further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with. Petitions and memorials are in order.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there are a good many very important conferences going on which take the time of Senators. I therefore move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock noon to-morrow. The question is on that motion.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, what is the special reason for that?

Mr. WARREN. To give Senators who are engaged on conference committees time to confer. Senators, like myself, who are busy in conference can hardly remain in the Senate to keep a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25713) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6384) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6851) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21094) to create a commission on industrial relations.

ENTRIES ON RECLAMATION LANDS.

Mr. ASHURST. I present a letter in the nature of a petition from the president of the Yuma County Water Users' Association of Arizona, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

YUMA COUNTY WATER USERS' ASSOCIATION (INC.),
Yuma, Ariz., August 15, 1912.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I do not know how soon Congress may adjourn, but I judge from the complicated matters yet on hand that the session may continue for some time yet, and much contrary to my intentions to ask further work from you and Senator SMITH and Congressman HAYDEN, I am compelled to call your attention to a grave emergency matter which we have thought would not come to be acute for quite a while; but in this I find I am mistaken, therefore I trust you will pardon my further solicitation.

President Orme, of Salt River project, visited me a few days ago and informed me that Mr. Davis, of Reclamation Service, had recommended that the farm unit at Salt River project be established at 40 acres, and that engineers are now staking out the entered land in accordance with such recommendation, and that an official order is not unexpected to be issued at any time.

Should this matter become established before the next session of Congress, relief may not be possible, therefore an emergency exists which we ask our Representatives to determine what can be done now with this matter.

The law provided for units of 160 acres or less, thus raising the presumption that where lands were adapted to grain, hay, and stock propositions the maximum acreage would, in all reasonableness, be adopted by the Secretary of the Interior.

Such was the expressed opinion and assurance of the preceding Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ballinger, and upon such opinion many entrymen made investments and improvements that will be almost a total loss if the acreage is now reduced.

What unit is established at Phoenix will, in all probability, be established at Yuma.

Let me now explain wherein the hardship affects the entryman:

First. The Government invited entries of 160 acres—of course with the reserved right to reduce. That put the entryman upon his own judgment as to the amount he should enter and improve, and that judgment was, of course, based upon reason and experience as to the nature of the crops the lands and climate were adapted to. Fruits are out of the question except upon the mesa. Vegetables are also out of the question for want of market, and under all reasonable conditions only a limited acreage could be put to such crops. Ninety-five per cent of all our valley lands are best adapted to the staples of grain and hay; therefore our entrymen used caution, reason, and good business sense in entering 160 acres.

Second. Many such entries are now fully improved or in process of improvement upon such basis. They are laid out in fenced lots—some for alfalfa, some for grain, some for pasturage—and the houses, corrals, barns, and farm machinery have been provided on such a basis, proportion, or scale as make a complete farm of such necessary diversity of crops as the soil, climate, and market indicate. Should such farms now be reduced, all plans will have to be made over again to adapt them to the reduced acreage.

Third. It was for just such condition of affairs that Congress passed the law of June 25, 1910, prohibiting further entries on reclamation lands until the project is declared open and the farm unit is established. Such was a wise provision, for the reason that no one could be misled into making an investment on a larger scale than the unit permitted. But what about those entries made prior to June 25, 1910, upon which, both previous and since, the entrymen have extended their clearings, cultivation, and other improvements in accordance with the expressed urgent requests of the department that they should prepare as much land to utilize the water as possible? The price of land here, if compelled to be thrown on the market, will not bring the cost of clearing and work of putting in cultivation, and if the acreage is reduced, it will mean bankruptcy for a large majority of such entrymen. We believe the land will eventually come up in price, but not in time to save the present generation from terrific losses. Can it be possible to believe that Congress will permit its industrious citizens to be so entrapped? The department is controlled by the ideas of theorists and land agents, who make wild statements, such as how many tomatoes or melons may be grown to the acre, etc., whereas if one one-hundredth of the land was put to such crops they would rot on the ground for want of a market.

This is, indeed, an emergency that I believe should be met by the present Congress now in session. Unless settled it will paralyze further efforts in the line of development, and retrenchment and hedging against the inevitable will be the principal occupation from now henceforth.

These entries are scattered all through the patented lands, which are immune from reduction to less than 160 acres.

To see these struggling entrymen singled out for such hardships and uncertainties makes enemies of the Government.

There is nothing to be gained by such procedure. The reclamation law is all right, but its administration is controlled by men who have no experience with the soil and are deficient in business experience—all of which is embarrassing for a Republican to admit.

I propose the following amendment to the reclamation law:

"Land entries under the reclamation law of June 17, 1902, of 160 acres or less, and made prior to June 25, 1910, shall not be subject to reduction to a lesser farm unit than the acreage entered."

Yours, truly,

EARL B. SMITH, President.

PROTECTION AGAINST FLOODS OF THE COLORADO RIVER.

Mr. ASHURST. I present a telegram in the nature of a petition from the mayor of the city of Yuma, Ariz., and also a telegram from the Yuma County Commercial Club, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There being no objection, the telegrams were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

YUMA, ARIZ., August 20, 1912.

Senator HENRY ASHURST,
Washington, D. C.

The following resolution was this day introduced and unanimously adopted:

Be, and it is hereby, resolved by the Common Council of the town of Yuma, Ariz., That the Congress of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, memorialized and prayed to make the appropriation for the protection of lands and property in the United States against the flood waters of the Colorado River, as recommended by the President of the United States in his message of June 14, 1912, and the recommendation of the Interior under date of June 13.

J. H. SHANNSSEY, Mayor.
S. FRANK STANLEY, Clerk.

YUMA, ARIZ., August 21, 1912.

Senator ASHURST,
From Arizona, Washington, D. C.

The citizens of Yuma solicit your assistance in enacting into law the resolution introduced in Congress per Document No. 846, appropriating million and quarter for completion of protection work on Colorado below Yuma.

YUMA COUNTY COMMERCIAL CLUB.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I report favorably from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (H. R. 25970) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1912 and for prior years, and for other purposes, with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 1061) thereon. I give notice that I shall endeavor to bring up the bill at the first moment when the floor is available.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

REPUBLIC OF NICARAGUA.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 385, authorizing the Committee on Foreign Relations to investigate the alleged invasion of the Republic of Nicaragua by the armed sailors and marines of the Navy of the United States, reported it without amendment.

EXCHANGE OF CERTAIN PROPERTIES BETWEEN PORTO RICO AND WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 313) relative to the exchange of certain properties between the insular government of Porto Rico and the War Department, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1063) thereon.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. BACON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 6781) in reference to the issuance of patents and copies of surveys of private land claims, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1064) thereon.

Mr. CATRON subsequently said: I ask for the present consideration of Senate bill 6781, reported by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] from the Committee on Private Land Claims this morning.

Mr. CULBERSON. What is the calendar number?

Mr. CATRON. There is no calendar number.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was reported this morning and has no calendar number.

Mr. CULBERSON. From what committee was it reported?

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia reported the bill from the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is it a unanimous report of that committee?

Mr. CATRON. Yes, sir; it is reported with an amendment.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 6, after the word "claim," to insert "in New Mexico," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the payment into the Treasury of the United States of one-half of the cost of surveying and platting, which may have heretofore been made or which may be hereafter made, of any private land claim in New Mexico which may have been confirmed, and in reference to which the survey and plat thereof may have been or may be reported to the General Land Office and approved, a patent shall be issued to the confirmee, his heirs or assigns, for such claim, and also copies of the field notes of such approved survey and plat thereof when requested from the proper officer, the cost of the copies of such field notes of such survey and plat to be paid for by the confirmee, his heirs or assigns, in addition to paying the said one-half of the cost of surveying and platting said claim.

SEC. 2. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONFEDERATE VETERANS' REUNION AT ADA, OKLA.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 349) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Confederate Veterans' reunion to be held at Ada, Okla., in September, 1912. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if the joint resolution contains the usual provision that some parties are held responsible for the safe return of the tents and cots?

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Yes; there is such a provision in it.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear that part of it read.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. There is a provision in the joint resolution holding the parties responsible for the safe return of the articles.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The usual provision for a bond is in the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORT OF ENTRY, NEW ORLEANS, LA.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 23112) to extend the limits of the port of entry of New Orleans, La., and I submit a report (No. 1062) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] to the bill.

Mr. THORNTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. O'GORMAN:

A bill (S. 7490) for the relief of Carl Anderson (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WILLIAMS:

A bill (S. 7491) to authorize the Postmaster General to settle the accounts of Capt. J. H. Estes; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 7492) for the relief of John E. Johnson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 7493) for the relief of Thomas G. Running; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. CULLOM:

A bill (S. 7494) granting an increase of pension to Mary J. Forbes; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MYERS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 136) concerning the release and payment of individual Indian moneys.

Mr. MYERS. The joint resolution is accompanied by a memorial in favor thereof, which I ask may be printed with it, and that it also may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution and accompanying memorial was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and the memorial was ordered to be printed with the joint resolution, and also in the RECORD, as follows:

Memorial of the Brotherhood of North American Indians.

To Sixty-second Congress, second session, the honorable the United States Senate:

Your memorialists desire to call attention to the needs and requirements of the individual Indians throughout the Indian country in connection with the restricted use and enjoyment which they now have in their own money and funds.

According to statistics published by the Department of the Interior there are in the hands of Indian superintendents and agents and deposited in national and State banks about $20,000,000 which belong to individual Indians. In other words, these moneys and funds are the absolute property of certain individual Indians and are not, in anywise, the property of the Indians as a tribe or nation, and should not be supervised by anyone, not even a Government official.

By the act of April 30, 1908 (35 Stat. L. 70-73), authority is granted to disbursing officers to deposit individual Indian funds in national banks. This has been modified by subsequent legislation which allows these funds to be deposited in solvent State banks as well as national banks. Instead of pursuing the policy inaugurated in the Interior Department and Indian Office when these individual funds began to accumulate, after the passage of the Dawes Act of February 8, 1887, the Indian Department has seized upon the legislation referred to as an excuse and justification for depriving the Indians of the moneys that belonged to them and have accordingly deposited these funds in banks, refusing to allow the Indians to use all their money for any purpose without an order of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. This has been of great benefit to the banks and parties interested in the use of the money, but has been a detriment to the Indians and has deprived them of their property without adequate reason. The policy was inaugurated several years ago of allowing some of the Indians $10 a month of their own money with which to buy food, clothing, and other necessaries of life; but the complaints of the Indians were so insistent and so frequent that the Indian Department was authorized, in certain cases, to modify the $10 a month order and to allow the superintendents to recommend in certain individual cases the use and expenditure of money in more liberal amounts. This latter method has been entirely unsatisfactory to the Indians and hundreds of complaints have been received from which it appears that Indians who are actually in want of the bare necessities of life and who have to their credit in banks thousands of dollars, have been unable to obtain a dollar for food, clothing, and other necessary household expenses. In many instances these Indians have died in want. Many references to this can be furnished. They did not even have the money to pay for a coffin or other burial expenses and an order had to be secured from the superintendent to buy such articles, to be paid for out of the Indian's funds, after his death, and the balance to be held in the bank, after his heirs were determined by the Secretary of the Interior, to the credit of such heirs, and, if no heirs were found, all of the money would revert to the State wherein the Indian died.

The system now in use in the Indian Department in this respect has grown to be so powerful, and the influence of the banks controlling these moneys is so great, that it is next to impossible for Indians to receive any part of their funds in such quantity as to make every use really profitable and beneficial to the Indians. The Indians can not even build a barn or a house, or buy a horse or a cow without the close supervision of an Indian superintendent and the payment by such superintendent for these things. Accusations are frequently made that the Indian superintendent gets some pecuniary benefit from such transactions. This close supervision, unnecessary and unwarranted attention has resulted, in more than one instance, in the abuse of the power, gross favoritism to dealers and Indian traders as well as contractors and financiers.

Particular attention is called to one case of very recent origin, that of the superintendent of the La Pointe Indian School, where a gross abuse was found by Government officers in the handling of these individual funds.

In the education and civilization of the Indians in accordance with the present allotment policy of the Government and the gradual elimination of the Indian Service, permitting the Indians to take care of themselves, it is impossible that they should have the necessary experience in the use and expenditure of funds unless they are permitted to have the control of their own moneys, derived from the sale of lands which they may have inherited, from the leases of their lands, from the sale of timber, or from other sources. Children are taught the wise use and expenditure of money by placing in their hands that which belongs to them and instructed the use of such funds, permitting them to buy their own clothes and gradually to become self-supporting and self-sustaining.

The present policy of the administration branch of the Government toward the Indians has resulted in many instances in pauperizing them and placing them in a condition and position where they can not with any degree of respect or honor properly care for themselves or their families. They do not have respectable homes in which to live or proper or nourishing food, and yet these same families or some member thereof may have on deposit thousands of dollars and can not get a cent of the money for use for any purpose. It is no wonder that the President, in a special message, has recommended appropriations for hospitals for the care of these Indians. But why not, instead of providing for their care, give them what is theirs—i. e., their own money—that the diseases may be prevented? Starvation, poverty, and the lack of occupation is the cause of much disease, suffering, and sorrow among the Indians. Why not remove the cause rather than provide for the remedy? It has been said by people advocating hospitals for the Indians that much of their disease and ill health is caused by too many people using the same towels or by insanitary conditions in their homes. But what can they do on $10 or $25 per month; how can they provide the necessary articles required when they can not get their own money deposited in banks, much less get assistance from the Government attempts to guide and protect them? Many of the Indians are told, so the brotherhood is informed, that they can not have any of their money until they demonstrate to the officers of the Government that they can make a living for themselves and be entirely self-supporting; that they must go to work at some gainful occupation and report periodically regarding their occupation, expenditure of money, etc., and that if the superintendent is satisfied after 6 months or 12 months that they have been diligent and have succeeded in accumulating a competence during that time he will give them ten or twenty-five dollars of their money. What self-respecting white man anywhere in the United States would have the ambition or desire to better his condition under such circumstances, and why should the Indian do any more? Any white man under the same circumstances, no matter how incompetent or imprudent, would be allowed to have sufficient of his own money and funds to support and maintain him. The Indians do not have the right of appeal to any tribunal after they are turned down by the Indian Department. They make a few calls upon the superintendent and ask for their money, through an interpreter, and are turned away with some flimsy excuse and soon lose heart and settle down to the hard life again, or, as the Indian officer says, "Gamble what little they have away or get drunk." Wouldn't a white man do the same thing?

There is every reason why individual Indians should have the unrestricted use of their own moneys. The resolution under consideration provides for payment of one-fourth of the moneys within 30 days after the passage of the act and the balance in quarterly installments at periods of three months until the entire sum now on hand or on deposit is paid out to the Indians to whom the moneys belong. It prohibits the further use of banks as depositaries for individual funds and authorizes and directs the payment of all Indians' money directly to the Indians as soon as it comes into the hands of a superintendent or Indian agent.

We believe that this is the only way in which the Indian can be taught the correct use of his own resources. The Indians can learn the use and value of a dollar much quicker by expending it themselves than they can by having the money spent for them by an Indian agent. Besides the right and exercise of self-dependence given an Indian, the same as a white man, courage and ambition. If the first fourth is not spent properly the remaining three-fourths can be withheld for their benefit.

We earnestly urge the prompt and favorable report of your committee on this joint resolution in order that it may, if possible, become a law at this session of the Congress.

BROTHERWOOD OF NORTH AMERICAN INDIANS,
By RICHARD C. ADAMS,
Great Sachem.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL (H. R. 27970).

Mr. GUGGENHEIM submitted an amendment proposing to pay a sum equal to one month's salary to the employees on the maintenance roll of the Senate Office Building, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRADLEY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $200 for an additional amount to pay the superintendent of the Senate Press Gallery a salary of $2,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment to pay Clarence Johnson and Rodney Sacket $10,000 for indexing the executive journals of the Senate, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. REED submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 for the Columbia Polytechnic Institute of the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

STATUE OF SAM HOUSTON.

Mr. SANDERS submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 30), which was read and referred to the Committee on the Library:

Whereas the city of Chattanooga, Tenn., has a beautiful park named Houston Park in honor of Sam Houston, who was at one time governor of Tennessee, and said city is desirous of erecting a statue in his honor in said park like the one in the Statuary Hall in the Capitol of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the city of Chattanooga, Tenn., be allowed to send a proper representative, who is hereby authorized to make a cast of the statue of Sam Houston now located in the Statuary Hall in the United States Capitol.

THE AMERICAN NAVY (S. DOC. NO. 939).

Mr. GALLINGER presented an address by Maj. F. A. Mahan, United States Navy, retired, made before the American Chamber of Commerce in Paris, on the subject of the United States Navy, our country's urgent need, which was ordered to be printed as a Senate document.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. PENROSE. I desire now to make a motion that the statements made by me yesterday (S. Res. 386) be referred to the subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, of which I believe the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] is chairman, for their consideration and investigation at the earliest date practicable, and that they be empowered to send for the persons mentioned by me in my statement and such other witnesses as they may desire to call and find available. I ask that this motion lie on the table until later in the day.

Mr. BACON. I do not want to interfere in the slightest degree with what the Senator from Pennsylvania seeks to accomplish, but I suggest, in order that it may be considered before he brings it up later, whether the motion should be directed to a subcommittee. I think the motion must be addressed to the committee, and they can submit it to the subcommittee.

Mr. PENROSE. I modify the motion in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia—that the Committee on Privileges and Elections be directed to instruct the subcommittee.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask that the motion lie on the table until later in the day, at such time as it may be convenient for the Senate to consider it and convenient for any Senators who may desire to do so to address themselves to the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OLIVER in the chair). The motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania will lie on the table, in the absence of objection.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT OMAHA, NEBR.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 25282) to authorize the Union Pacific Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill, only there is some morning business which I wish to present. However, I will wait.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls attention to the rule of the Senate, which the Chair has no disposition to enforce in this case:

3. Until the morning business shall have been concluded, and so announced from the Chair, or until the hour of 1 o'clock has arrived, no motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject upon the calendar shall be entertained by the Presiding Officer unless by unanimous consent.

Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Iowa?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Union Pacific Railroad Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Utah, and its assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the city of Omaha, in the county of Douglas, State of Nebraska, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and expressly reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADMISSION OF ADULTERATED SEEDS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the other day, while the calendar under Rule VIII was under consideration, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] asked that the bill (H. R. 22340) to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated seeds and seeds unfit for seeding purposes, be transferred from Rule VIII to Rule IX. The bill was reported to the Senate by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I have a telegram from that Senator asking that the bill be acted upon at this session, with section 4 eliminated from the bill as reported to the Senate. That is the part of the bill which was objectionable to the Senator from Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be now considered and that section 4 be eliminated.

Mr. BORAH. Will the bill lead to any debate?

Mr. SMOOT. If it does, I will withdraw the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have received a number of objections concerning this bill, and I understood that the Senator reporting it was not desirous of bringing it to the front at this session. As I have received no further information regarding it, I am not prepared at this time to present to the Senate such matters as have been communicated to me.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the facts. I stated that section 4 was proposed to be stricken from the bill, and that that was agreeable to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. That is the only objectionable part of the bill, so far as I know—the only section against which protests have been made.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the bill had better be read, and then I can see what section 4 is. I will withhold my objection to the bill until it can be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, has this bill been taken up by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not yet been taken up by unanimous consent. It is being read for information.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have had a great many complaints made in reference to this bill. I talked with the author of it, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]; and my understanding was that it was not to be brought up at this session, and I have so stated to my correspondents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask is there objection?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I believe when the Senator from Michigan understands the particular matter that is to be eliminated from the bill he will find that it covers the question about which he had correspondence. Before the Senator came in I made the same objection, not understanding that section 4 was to be eliminated.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will permit the bill to be read, so that we may understand what it contains, reserving the right to object.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I simply want to corroborate in part what the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has said. I have had a great many letters objecting to the new section 4 in the bill. Outside of that everybody from whom I have heard seems to be in favor of the bill. If the new section 4 is eliminated I think it will remove all objections that exist to the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall move to strike section 4 from the bill.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I also want to say that I have had a good many protests against section 4, but, as my recollection goes now, the protests were confined entirely to that section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendments reported by the committee.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, in section 1, page 2, line 15, after the word "purposes," at the end of the line, to insert "when shipped in bond through the United States or imported for the purpose of manufacture, but such shipment shall be subject to the provisions of the act of August 5, 1909."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 18, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 4. That no person, firm, or corporation shall ship or deliver to any common carrier for shipment from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia any such grain or seeds for seeding purposes, the car, case, bag, or package containing which is not plainly marked so as to show the kind of grain or seeds, the percentage of germination, the percentage of adulteration, the name and address of the consignee, and the place where the grain or seed was grown.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I only rise to express my surprise at the change possible in the sentiment of the Senate within so short a time. In 1905, when I offered an amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill covering this class of questions it received the most prompt disposal. One of the most distinguished Senators, the then Senator from the State of Wisconsin, Mr. Spooner, joined by those of the same class in point of service, said that it had never been considered for a moment that Congress should undertake to deal with such a question. They did not proceed to the point of ridicule, but they made it evident that the amendment which I offered, which was intended to protect seeds and plants, could not receive even respectful consideration. Only a few years have elapsed; we have now drifted away from conservative lines; and I suppose we will do what they said the proposed legislation at that time would do, set one man against another as a spy to criticize, either justly or unjustly, his act in order that he might perform his act. That was the line of the attack. They said we would have every man who ships a tree constituting himself a censor over every other man who ships a tree, and every man who raised seed and shipped it a censor over every other man's actions. I am not going to oppose this legislation. I thought at that time it was a legitimate subject of legislation, but the Senate did not. I think probably there were one or two—not to exceed three—Members of the then Senate who seemed to think it might be a proper subject of legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] desires to have the bill go over until tomorrow, and therefore I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Mr. HEYBURN. I rise to a point of order. I understood the order was that the bill go over. It has not yet received unanimous consent for consideration, as I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will withdraw the request for unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request is withdrawn.

Mr. HEYBURN. So that it will not "go over"; it will merely remain on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations, I report favorably, with the late amendments, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill (H. R. 26371) and as we are getting pretty well along in the term, I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming, from the Committee on Appropriations, submits a report.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator from Wyoming if that bill has yet been submitted to the committee?

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator asks has the full committee been called together, I will say no, it has not; but I think I have spoken to every one of the members of the committee regarding it. Does the Senator wish to resist the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULBERSON. I have not been consulted about it, Mr. President, and I am on the committee.

Mr. WARREN. Well, Mr. President, of course I am perfectly willing to take it up in the committee, but I am not always able to get the members of the committee together, I am sorry to say.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am ready to meet with the committee at any time. I do not know what are the proposed changes in the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I had supposed, of course——

Mr. CULBERSON. I object to its present consideration.

Mr. WARREN. I supposed, of course, we would have the bill read.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think it ought to go to the committee, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 26371) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas objects to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Are we not entitled under the rules to have the bill read at this time? Can it not be read the first time at length?

Mr. CULBERSON. This is a bill which passed the House of Representatives and has not even been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, as I understand, though it may have been considered by a subcommittee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] objects. So that, under the rule, the bill——

Mr. WARREN. Let me say to the Senator from Texas he probably remembers that when we were in full committee and the bill came back from the House after it had been vetoed by the President, the chairman of the committee was instructed how to handle the bill; and I am handling this bill in the way I was instructed; but, if the Senator wishes, I will withdraw it and call the committee together, so that the Senator can take any course he wishes. I have no desire to——

Mr. CULBERSON. This is an entirely different bill from the one which was considered by the committee on the occasion referred to by the chairman of the committee. This bill, as I understand it from the public prints, has passed the House of Representatives with a change limiting the appropriation for the Commerce Court to the 4th of March instead of the end of the next fiscal year, and that bill, so far as I have any information, has never been submited to the full Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. The way to find out what is in the bill is to have it read, if the Senator desires to go into it and read it all. Of course he has that right. We had before us in committee two bills, two forms which were passed upon, one of which I offered, the other of which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] offered. The committee was fully advised of every item in both those measures. Now, if the present measure is different from that the reading will develop it. I do not think it is. I thought I had the authority of the committee then given me to present it.

Mr. CULBERSON. If the chairman of the committee states that he was under the impression that he had authority from the full committee to act upon this bill, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. WARREN. I do not want to act upon it until the Senator is satisfied, and that can only come from a reading of the bill. There may be changes distasteful to the Senator and to me, but I think the Senator will find that it corresponds almost exactly with the measure we agreed upon.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator if the change is not what I have already indicated?

Mr. WARREN. So far as I know, the change is confined to four employees of the court and to the rent and contingent expenses.

Mr. CULBERSON. As I remember it, it is limited until the 4th of March.

Mr. WARREN. Until the 4th of March as to those four employees.

Mr. CULBERSON. If that is the bill, I repeat that, so far as I have any information, it has never been submitted to the full committee; but, in view of what the chairman of the committee states—that he understood he was authorized on the previous meeting of the committee to report a bill which had not been passed—I will not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BORAH. I understand there is no change in the bill except the four changes which the Senator from Wyoming has stated. If that be true and if it is not necessary to read the entire bill, I shall not object to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It will be read.

Mr. BORAH. Is it necessary to read the entire bill under those circumstances? We dispensed with the reading of the bill day before yesterday.

Mr. ROOT. The bill had better be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not necessary to read it, if the Senate by unanimous consent orders otherwise.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. ROOT. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if it is not possible for him to indicate what portions of the bill are changed from the bill as it was presented and passed upon by the Senate the other day?

Mr. WARREN. The chairman's authority seems to have been challenged. I would rather the bill would speak for itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to dispensing with the reading of the bill, and it will be read in full.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not arise to enter any objection, but in order that I may be properly advised, for if I understood the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] aright, he stated a moment ago that he would not object to the consideration of the bill if it were not to be read at length, thereby indicating that he might object if the bill were read at length. I desire to know what the rule is? It seems to me that it is not fair to that Senator to proceed with the reading after he has thus indicated that he would object to the consideration of the bill if it was to be read at length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not a specific rule on that subject, but Senators can not make qualified objections. The bill was ordered to be read, and the reading will proceed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill and read to line 11 on page 2.

Mr. BORAH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashhurst	Cullom	Martin, Va.	Shively
Bacon	Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Bankhead	Curtis	Massey	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Dillingham	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Bristow	du Pont	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Fall	Oliver	Smith, S. C.
Burnham	Gallinger	Overman	Smoot
Catron	Heyburn	Page	Thornton
Chamberlain	Johnston, Ala.	Penrose	Townsend
Clapp	Jones	Perkins	Warren
Clarke, Ark.	Lippitt	Pomerene	Watson
Crane	McCumber	Root	Works
Culberson	McLean	Sanders

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The reading of the bill will proceed.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I will withdraw the objection to dispensing with the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York withdraws his objection.

Mr. McCUMBER. I object to dispensing with the reading of the bill. I ask that the reading be proceeded with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota objects to the reading being dispensed with, and the reading of the bill will be continued.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill to line 21 on page 9.

Mr. BORAH. I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until 12 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho moves that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until 12 o'clock.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if we are going to pass on the question whether we shall carry over an appropriation bill for an hour or two, I think we ought to have a quorum. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Bacon	Dillingham	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Borah	Fall	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Fletcher	Oliver	Smoot
Bristow	Gallinger	Overman	Thornton
Bryan	Heyburn	Page	Townsend
Burnham	Jones	Perkins	Warren
Catron	La Follette	Pomerene	Watson
Chamberlain	Lippitt	Reed	Wetmore
Clarke, Ark.	McLean	Root	Williams
Crane	Martin, Va.	Simmons
Culberson	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. Not a quorum. The names of the absentees will be called.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CURTIS and Mr. McCUMBER answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until 12 o'clock.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

Mr. REED. I move that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain the motion to dispense with the reading of the bill, the rule providing that it shall be read upon demand, and objection is made to unanimous consent to dispense with its reading.

Mr. REED. Can not the reading be waived by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes. Does the Senator from Missouri ask unanimous consent?

Mr. REED. Yes; I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. SMOOT. Is not that in violation of the unanimous-consent agreement, which is—

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Thursday, August 22, 1912, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 22913) to create a department of labor; such consideration, however, not to interfere with the consideration of appropriation bills or the reports of conference committees. (Aug. 20, 1912.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not see that the request interferes with that. The Senate has given consent to consider the pending bill. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] asks unanimous consent that the further reading of it be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I will withdraw my objection for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I ask the chairman of the committee whether he would have serious objection to adding an amendment to the bill? I do not want to delay the bill, but there is one matter—it is not of great general importance, and yet it refers to a matter, I think, that would be a very great individual injustice in connection with the appropriations for the Indian Office if carried out as proposed. The salary of the First Assistant Indian Commissioner prior to the passage of the last legislative bill was $3,000. An estimate was sent down to make that salary $3,500, and that was adopted. An estimate was also sent down to make the salary of the Second Assistant Indian Commissioner, who is really, I think, the most hard-worked officer connected with the Indian Office—and in saying this I do not disparage any of the others—$2,750; but in some way that was overlooked, and his salary was left at $2,250. In the deficiency bill of last session this injustice was recognized, and $500 was added so as to make the second assistant's salary $2,750. Then it came down to this session, when a further estimate was sent in increasing the salary of the first assistant commissioner, and also for an increase in the salary of the second assistant commissioner over the $2,750, but some mistake was made in considering the bill in the other House, and the salary of the second assistant commissioner was put back to $2,250, while the salary of the first assistant commissioner was left at $3,500, making a difference between the salary of those two officials of $1,250. It was the intention of Congress at the last session to make the salary of the second assistant commissioner $2,750, and it ought not to be less than that. The bill as now reported carries only $2,250 for this officer.

I do not want to delay the bill by offering an amendment making this salary $2,750, if the chairman thinks it would delay the bill, but will depend on it being taken care of in the deficiency appropriation bill that is to follow. I should like to know of the chairman what he thinks about that?

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator from Washington that it would open a very wide door and would very materially delay matters if we should entertain adding an amendment of that kind to this bill. It would throw the bill back where we would have to have another conference upon it, and we would have to meet the same conferees on the part of the House, who have absolutely refused to allow the amendment to which the Senator refers.

I will say further to the Senator that I agree with him as to the capacity of the official to whom he refers; I agree with him that that official ought to have the salary which the Senator has named; and I agree with him that I intend, so far as I can, that he shall have it. A year ago in the legislative bill that provision went out with other matters, but the case was so plain that he ought to have the increase that later it was put into the deficiency bill and the conferees on the other side were satisfied to let it go through.

As the Senator from Washington has said, it was estimated for this year to go into the legislative bill as a regular salary, and we inserted it in that way. We met the conferees on the part of the House, but for some reason, while it was one of the very last things that we surrendered, we were compelled to surrender it, because they said we could again take care of it in the deficiency bill. Of course, many things are said in conference that I do not wish to repeat, but the only way we could take care of it was to let it go out there and to introduce it in the deficiency bill, which I hope soon to report here for passage.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, with that statement of the chairman of the committee, I shall not offer the amendment; but I wanted to get these facts into the RECORD, because I know Congress did intend that this salary should be $2,750 per annum, and that Congress does not desire to treat unjustly this competent and hard-working official.

Mr. ROOT. If I am in order, Mr. President, I should be glad to hear read those paragraphs of the bill which make provision for the Department of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is in order, and the paragraphs will be read.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] has asked that a certain part of the bill be read. I should like to inquire from the Chair if the bill has ever been read in the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill was dispensed with by unanimous consent a few moments ago.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will it not be necessary to read the bill at some stage before its passage?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not——

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not see how we are to know what is in the bill unless it is read in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not, if the Senate, by unanimous consent, dispenses with the reading. Bills ordinarily are read twice by title by unanimous consent, and not read in full.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the Chair, when the bill gets into the Senate, if that unanimous consent would still be binding against the reading of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that unanimous consent having been given to dispense with the reading of the bill, it would not be competent to raise the question again in the Senate. The portion of the bill requested by the Senator from New York to be read will, without objection, be read:

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

For Secretary of State, $12,000; Assistant Secretary, $5,000; Second and Third Assistant Secretaries, at $4,500 each; director of the Consular Service, $4,500; counselor for the Department of State, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $7,500; 8 officers to aid in important drafting work, 4 at $4,500 each and 4 at $3,000 each, to be appointed by the Secretary of State, any one of whom may be employed as chief of division of far eastern, Latin American, near eastern, or European affairs, or upon other work in connection with foreign relations; assistant solicitor, $3,000; law clerk, $2,500; clerks—2 of class 3, 2 of class 1, 2 at $1,000 each; 3 assistant messengers; chief clerk, $3,000; 2 Assistant Solicitors of the Department of State, to be appointed by the Secretary of State, at $3,000 each; law clerk and assistant, to be selected and appointed by the Secretary of State, to edit the laws of Congress and perform such other duties as may be required of them, at $2,500 and $1,500, respectively; 2 chiefs of bureaus, at $2,250 each; 5 chiefs of bureaus, at $2,100 each; 2 translators, at $2,100 each; additional to Chief of Bureau of Accounts as disbursing clerk, $200; private secretary to the Secretary, $2,500; clerk to the Secretary, $1,800; clerks—16 of class 4, 16 of class 3, 25 of class 2, 41 of class 1, 3 of whom shall be telegraph operators, 16 at $1,000 each, 19 at $900 each; chief messenger, $1,000; 5 messengers; 22 assistant messengers; messenger boy, $420; packer, $720; 4 laborers, at $600 each; telephone switchboard operator; assistant telephone switchboard operator; in all, $317,560.

For 2 clerks to be employed in the Department of State and to be charged with the distribution of information among the diplomatic missions, 1 at the rate of $1,800 per annum and 1 at the rate of $1,600 per annum; in all, $3,400.

Contingent expenses, Department of State: For stationery, furniture, fixtures, typewriters, including exchange of the same, repairs, and material for repairs, $11,000.

For books and maps, and periodicals, domestic and foreign, including the payment in advance for subscriptions to the same, for the library, $2,000.

For services of lithographer and necessary materials for the lithographic press, $1,500.

For miscellaneous expenses, including the purchase, care, and subsistence of horses, to be used only for official purposes, repair of vehicles and harness, telegraph and electrical apparatus and repairs to the same, street car tickets not exceeding $100, and other items not included in the foregoing, $7,000.

For purchase of an automobile mail wagon for official use of the Department of State, and maintenance of the same for fiscal year 1913, $1,000.

For rent of buildings in the District of Columbia for the use of the Department of State, $11,720.

Mr. SIMMONS. As the bill, by unanimous consent or order of the Senate, is not to be read, and as there is but one copy of the bill in the Senate, and Senators can not get that, I ask unanimous consent that that part of the bill which relates to the Commerce Court be read.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to ask, for information, what reading of the bill is now going on?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was read a first and second time by title when it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It will be read a third time before the vote upon the passage of the bill is taken. It is the opinion of the Chair that the reading of the bill at this stage is simply for information and not one of the three readings required by the rules of the Senate. By unanimous consent, the reading of the bill in full has been dispensed with. Without objection, the portion of the bill referred to by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Commerce Court: For the following until and including March 4, 1913, namely: Clerk, at the rate of $4,000 per annum; deputy clerk, at the rate of $2,500 per annum; marshal, at the rate of $3,000 per annum; deputy marshal, at the rate of $2,500 per annum; for rent of necessary quarters in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, and furnishing same for the Commerce Court; for books, periodicals, stationery, printing, and binding; for pay of bailiffs and all other necessary employees at the seat of government and elsewhere, not otherwise specifically provided for, and for such other miscellaneous expenses as may be approved by the presiding judge, $33,888.89; in all, $42,022.22.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I can only give what I learned from the other side. I am informed that it is the opinion that the abolition of the Commerce Court having received so large a vote at another place, and in fact in two places, the court might be abolished by a special act early in 1913, and that anyway Congress will pass the next legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill before March 4 and could care for the other four months, for on March 4 the Congress ends. That seemed to be the opinion of those who have introduced the measure as it is. The Senate committee is submitting to it on the ground that it provides for the operations of the court until beyond the day on which the next appropriation bill will pass and future contingencies can be therein provided for.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Do I understand that the committee, having been polled or interviewed by the chairman, agree to the passage of the bill as proposed here?

Mr. WARREN. It does.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it would seem to me that the adoption of that provision would be an indication of very great confidence on the part of one of the political parties that they would be in power after that time. That is about the way it seems to me. They are quite confident, according to that expression, that after the 4th of March they will be able to do as they please; and among the things that they please to do will be the abolishment of this court. They may not be correct.

Mr. BACON Mr. President, I would suggest another reason for it in addition to that suggested by the Senator from Idaho, and that is that the opposition to this court is by no means confined to the Democratic Party, but that the opposition to it in both parties is so general that the conviction is quite fixed that the court is certainly to come to an end in the near future. Therefore, so large a proportion of the membership of the two parties being of that opinion, it is better merely to appropriate a little at a time, so as not to run beyond the time when the court doubtless will be abolished. I presume there is no doubt about the fact that the court is doomed, and it is only a question about when that sentence will be carried into execution.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not mean to indorse their prophecy. I think their prophecy will fail. They are basing it upon their expectation of electing a Democratic President and having a Democratic Congress, in both of which expectations, I believe and sincerely hope, they will be mistaken.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if we do not have a war, or something of that kind, to divert public attention from the issues that are now uppermost in the minds of the American people, I think that confidence is well founded; but if in the meantime we get up a war with some other country there is no telling what may happen.

Mr. HEYBURN. With Nicaragua, for instance.

Mr. BACON. Or Mexico. There is a very general feeling that possibly something of the kind may develop between now and the 1st of November; and if we should have a war with Mexico, possibly the well-founded anticipation of the Democrats will be disappointed, because war is something which generally claims the public mind, occupies their thoughts, diverts their attention, and warps their judgment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator is a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, and the observations he has just made strike me as very interesting and suggestive. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia if he really entertains any apprehension that between now and the election we may have a war with some foreign country?

Mr. BACON. I do not know whether the State Department—which now seems to be in control of the armed forces of the United States, orders them around, without even saying that it is being done in the name of the President of the United States, and invades a friendly country—will continue that course. We have now some 500 men, I think, in Nicaragua, and I see by the newspapers this morning that preparations are being made to put 2,000 more there. If the State Department is to control the question as to whether or not the Army of the United States shall be used and the Navy of the United States shall be used in taking part in hostilities in a country with which we are at peace, and if the State Department is to be consistent and apply the same rules to Mexico that it has applied to Nicaragua, of course we shall have war. I do not know whether the State Department is going to be permitted, especially in the absence of its chief, who is on his way to the Orient, to order transports filled with marines and send them to other countries, or whether it is going to be permitted to order men-of-war and battleships and cruisers, without even a suggestion of by-your-leave or even a matter of information being given to Congress—I do not know whether that is going to be done or not.

I should like very much for some Senator to point out conditions in Nicaragua which justify an invasion by some 2,500 or 3,000 of the armed forces of the United States to take part in battles in that country. I should like some one to point out the difference in conditions in Nicaragua in that regard from the conditions in Mexico.

As suggested to me by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], and absolutely correctly, there is not one-tenth of the justification of it in Nicaragua that there would be in Mexico. The fact is, Mr. President, I have not a doubt in the world, as I said yesterday, that this matter of a pretended interference in Nicaragua for the alleged purpose of protecting consulates and American property or citizens is, in reality, for the purpose I indicated yesterday, of protecting an officer who has been sent there as a collector of customs and known and designated as an American collector of customs. It is, in my opinion, for the purpose of protecting him in the collection of customs, to protect some American capitalists who have made loans to that country, and a condition of the loan is that the customs shall be collected by this officer and paid over, and I have not a doubt it is to protect that situation that the armed forces of the United States are being employed. I do not charge it as a fact; I am simply expressing an opinion.

I am well founded in that opinion, however. I do know the fact that they tried to negotiate a treaty with the Government of the United States and that a treaty was negotiated by the executive department and sent to the Senate, and that the Senate has refused to ratify the treaty, and will not ratify it—I am sure of that—which treaty was for the purpose of accomplishing the very thing that is now being done without a treaty and without any shadow of law. I have a copy of that treaty in my desk, but I will not stop to read it, because Senators are familiar with the general outlines of it; but it distinctly provided for the negotiation of a loan between Nicaragua and some capitalists in the United States, who were named, by the way, and then went on to provide that an officer should be selected who would be known as—I have forgotten the exact title; but he was to be, in fact, a collector of customs; and, while he was to be appointed by the authority of the Government of the United States, he was to be nominated by these capitalists, who were going to have their loans thus protected; so that they were, in fact, the ones who appointed him or were to appoint him. Then the proposed treaty went on to provide that the United States Government would sustain that officer in the collection of customs, which means, of course, that the United States Government, with its Army and Navy, or so much thereof as may be necessary, will sustain that officer in the collection of customs and that no armed forces or any other kind of forces shall interfere with him in that function, which, of course, means the guaranteeing of the permanency of whatever government may be back of that loan. I presume it makes no difference to these capitalists who may be in force and in power in Nicaragua, provided he is one who will recognize their appointee down there—at least, that would be the case under this treaty—and provided they could have the assurance that the United States Government would with its military forces sustain in power those who would thus recognize their appointee.

That treaty was urged and pressed with the utmost earnestness upon the Senate. It was not only urged and pressed upon the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations, but, as every Senator within the sound of my voice knows, by personal appeals to each individual Senator made from the State Department for the ratification of that treaty. Then it eventuated that it was discovered that the treaty could not be ratified; it was then apparently dropped, and we heard nothing more about it.

The next thing we had was the information that the officer had, in fact, been appointed; that he is in Nicaragua discharging this function—collecting customs duties for the purpose, I presume—though I do not have the details—of paying them over to the capitalists who have loaned money down there; and as internal disorders and revolutions endanger this officer and his collection of these customs duties here is the Navy and the Marine Corps of the United States used for the purpose of protecting the Nicaraguan Government, that recognizes and sustains that officer, and protecting that Nicaraguan Government against revolutionists because of the fact that that Nicaraguan Government recognizes and sustains him.

I say, Mr. President, I state that as my opinion, but it is a little more than an opinion; it is a conviction, and it is borne out by the narration of events which appear in the newspapers in a manner and under conditions which would clearly indicate that the narration was inspired and authoritative.

The point I am coming to is this: The learned Senator from North Carolina asked me whether I had any apprehension of any such catastrophe as war being forced upon this country, and I replied that if the same authority which now assumes and does, in fact, send an armed force into another country is to continue to exercise that power, there will be very much more reason and justification in the Secretary of State or those who represent him in his absence ordering the Army of the United States into Mexico than there is in ordering the armed forces of the United States into Nicaragua. Why? Because, in the first place, it would rest upon a very much stronger foundation. It would not rest upon the pretended premise that the invasion of Nicaragua rests upon, but it would rest upon the very strong foundation that it was, in fact, for the protection of the lives and property of American citizens, which are there seriously jeopardized, and are not only jeopardized but are now being destroyed in Mexico.

I do not wish to be misunderstood about this. I do not myself think that the conditions in Mexico would justify any invasion of Mexico, but I do say there is tenfold the justification there than there is for the invasion of Nicaragua, because we need not term it anything else but an invasion of Nicaragua. Nicaragua, it is true, is rent with civil war, and our armed forces are there taking sides with one particular side, which happens to be the side which now has the distinction of being known as the Government in power and of being the supporter of this so-called American collector of customs. But the conditions are otherwise very much the same there.

I say, Mr. President, I do not wish to be misunderstood. I do not think there could be any possible justification for the invasion of Mexico. We deplore the conditions there, and the time must come when those who are suffering on account of those conditions must be compensated and made whole; but for us to precipitate a war with Mexico would be a matter of infinitely greater moment and of greater disaster than it would be if we were to undertake to assume compensation for every injury that the Government of Mexico, or, rather, the people of Mexico, either those in armed rebellion or those in arms in favor of the Government, have inflicted upon innocent persons or property of American citizens.

The Senator from North Carolina asked me whether I had any apprehension of a war being forced upon us by executive officers in the near future, and between now and the election. Sir, I do not know what to expect. When, while Congress is in session, the branch of the Government which the Constitution says shall have the power and which shall alone have the power to declare war or to originate actions of war, that a subordinate in the State Department, or the head of the State Department, or the President of the United States himself, if you please, should assume the authority and usurp the function of Congress, and without even communicating with Congress, undertake to invade a country with the armed forces of the United States—I say, when that is done I do not know what is going to happen.

I had occasion to say on a former day that we have had assurances from the President of the United States that we would not invade Mexico or order troops across the border without first receiving the authority so to do from Congress, and until there is something to the contrary from him I must assume that such is his determination.

I think it would be absolutely without any possibility of justification or authority if it was done without the authority of Congress. Even if Congress were not in session it would be his most imperative duty to call Congress in session before he ever undertook such a responsibility and such an authority, which could not be otherwise than a usurped authority. I say we have had his assurances that it shall not be done, and until something arises to indicate a change of mind on his part I shall not anticipate that it is to be done. I sincerely hope not.

Now, Mr. President, while I am on my feet I want to say another word about this Nicaraguan matter. On yesterday I introduced a resolution for the purpose of having an investigation as to the circumstances under which this invasion of Nicaragua has been undertaken and prosecuted, specifying other matters in connection therewith to be investigated. As that involved the expenditure of money, the Chair very properly, upon a suggestion made by myself, ruled that it should go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and it was sent there yesterday morning. I saw the chairman of that committee yesterday afternoon and asked him to report the resolution back from the committee this morning. We are nearing an adjournment, and it is important that it should be done, and done promptly.

Mr. President, before this day's session is over I hope, and shall certainly expect, that a report shall be made from that committee, and that the expenditure required to investigate that performance in Nicaragua will be authorized by the report.

I want to say just one further word, Mr. President, in regard to this resolution for this investigation, and that is this: There is but one doubt in my mind as to the propriety of its introduction, and that is that it is a matter, in my opinion, of such gravity that it may be necessary to investigate it at the other end of the Capitol. That is the only doubt there is in my mind as to the propriety of the Senate proceeding with the investigation.

Mr. President, this is no slight matter. If we have a Government of laws, then those of us who are charged with the responsibility of making laws and those of us who are charged with the responsibility of carrying out a very fundamental feature of law, to wit, the question of deciding whether there shall or shall not be war—if we have, I say, this Government of law, it becomes us not to sit supinely and see that usurpation of power and do nothing to correct it.

What can happen in this country if officers can deliberately and knowingly and defiantly set aside law, and, above all things, set aside law in the use of the Army and Navy of the United States? Of course, there is an old adage that all men think all other men mortal but themselves, and we naturally think that our Government is superior to the disasters and calamities which have overtaken other Governments; but, Mr. President, the fathers did not think so when they made the Constitution of the United States. They designed this to be a Government of laws, and that no man, and especially no official of the Government, shall be above law or be authorized to disregard law.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. I wish to make what I deem a pertinent suggestion. A former President of the United States by an Executive proclamation in terms suspended the operation of the land laws of the United States for an indefinite period.

Mr. BACON. It matters not to me who that President was, whether he was a Democrat or a Republican, unless there was something in the law which authorized him so to do I think it was a question which ought to have been investigated at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. HEYBURN. No one claimed that there was any authority of law for such an action by the President.

Mr. BACON. Without knowing who that President was——

Mr. HEYBURN. It was President Roosevelt.

Mr. BACON. I am sorry the Senator mentioned him because I shall not now finish my sentence. I do not wish to be personal in regard to the matter.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the junior Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I am just as much opposed to the suspension of the law, so called, by President Roosevelt, as anyone, but it ought to be said that not only the President but his legal advisers claimed that he had the power to do so.

Mr. BACON. Of course we all recognize the principle laid down in the books that——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the vote yesterday very clearly indicated that it was not the desire of the majority of the Senate here to further continue the consideration of this joint resolution or to vote upon it at the present session. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside for the session, to take its place on the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I do not know of any rule governing this body that authorizes such a proceeding. It may be laid aside temporarily, but it may not be laid aside to a given time under any rule to which my attention has been called. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. I do not know that I have lost the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia has not. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. BACON. I am not finding any fault with the Chair, but I simply want other Senators who are now claiming the floor to understand that I had not yielded it. I do not know whether the Senator from Vermont rose with reference to the question of the unfinished business or not.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest a point of order, whether the Senator at this hour has the floor or not. The unfinished business is in order.

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HEYBURN. And it has not been laid before the Senate formally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been laid formally before the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then I was inattentive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia has the floor.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me? I wish to suggest that, if agreeable to the Senator from Iowa, who has charge of the floor, I should be glad, at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Georgia, to have him lay the unfinished business temporarily aside for two purposes—to complete the appropriation bill under consideration and also to permit the Committee on Appropriations to report to the Senate the deficiency appropriation bill, so that it may go to print and copies be distributed and the Senate become familiar with its terms.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I made the statement I did because I felt compelled in good faith to make it, and to prefer the request which I submitted to the Senate. I have long ago said to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] that whenever I became convinced that there was no intent on the part of the Senate to vote upon the joint resolution at the present session I would no longer press it. I have made the request, it has been denied, as I understand it, and therefore I ask that it be temporarily laid aside, inasmuch as it has been my understanding all the while that it was not to interfere with the consideration of appropriation bills and reports of committees of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The further consideration of the appropriation bill is in order. The Senator from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I was about to say at the time of the arrival of the hour requiring the unfinished business to be laid before the Senate that, of course, we all recognize the legal principle that whatever a man does under an honest claim of right does not constitute a crime. Of course I do not refer to personal violence; but a man may even take property which does not belong to him and yet if he is indicted for having so done he can plead in justification that de did it under an honest claim that it was his property; and a good defense to be made by the man would be the fact that he did in good faith claim it as his right. Therefore what I said in response to the senior Senator from Idaho as to the investigation at another end of the Capitol would not apply to a case where, as the junior Senator from Idaho says, it was done under a claim of right and under an advice from legal advisers that he did have the right. It may have been an entirely mistaken claim and a mistaken advice, but it would free one from crime or from liability to conviction for crime. It would free him from a judgment of the violation of the law if he honestly did it under the claim that the power did rest with him to do it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. That probably would be interpreted to mean that it would free him against any charge for impeachment. I was not referring to anything so drastic. Of course he could not be impeached now; he is not in office.

Mr. BACON. No; and I did not know when the Senator propounded the question the fact to which he alluded. I had not had my attention called to it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not intend to carry the suggestion that far. I cited it as an instance of the careless manner of the execution of the law. No advice by the Attorney General could change the law. No wrong impression in the mind of the President could change the law.

Mr. BACON. No; it could not change the law; and it could not make it a proper thing for him to have done, but it would free him from liability for the charge of a willful violation of the law.

I do not hesitate to say, Mr. President, that whenever an executive officer does undertake to set aside and suspend the execution of a law, he does that which he is not only not authorized to do, but for which he is greatly to be censured, to put it in the mildest form, whenever he does it.

But, Mr. President, at the time the Senator from Idaho made the suggestion, which was really in furtherance of the idea which I was endeavoring to present to the Senate, I was endeavoring to call to the attention of the Senate the great danger that there is in this Government, intended to be a government of law, in acquiescing in and by our acquiescence in a manner indorsing the violation of law by any man charged with the administration of the law or the execution of the law or any other official of the Government, whatever department he may be in, in a case in which there is a higher responsibility to obey the law than there is, if possible, upon the private citizen.

I may be wrong about this proposition, Mr. President, as to whether the executive department has the right to use the Army and Navy of the United States in a foreign country, except in cases of great emergency for a very limited purpose, without the authority of Congress. Anything which looks to military operations, anything which looks to taking part in warfare, to taking sides between contending armies in a foreign country is, to my mind, an absolute and an utter violation of the law of the land, and should not be passed by by the Senate of the United States or the House of Representatives without properly noticing it and condemning it.

I had not the slightest idea when I rose of saying anything on this subject, but the question of the Senator from North Carolina led me into it. I do not disguise the fact, in response further to the inquiry of the Senator from North Carolina, that there are whisperings going around which I will not myself credit as to what is going to happen when Congress adjourns. While I do not credit it, I repeat if the power exists in the case of Nicaragua it exists in the case of Mexico.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia if in the conclusion which he reached in the earlier part of his remarks, that because the Government had sent marines to Nicaragua for the purpose of protecting certain property rights there was therefore a probability that troops would be sent to Mexico for the purpose of protecting personal rights which have been invaded here, rights affecting life and liberty, the Senator has not overlooked the fact that this is a day of dollar diplomacy.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, in the differentiation which I made between the case of Nicaragua and the case of Mexico I called attention to the fact of the negotiation, I presume the negotiation, of a loan. Certainly there is one contemplated in the proposed treaty, in the appointment of an officer there to collect customs known as an American officer, an American collector of customs, although there is no authority of law for him to use any such designation or to represent the Government of the United States or the authority of the United States in any particular. I have endeavored to show the difference between that and the case in Mexico.

I want to say that there are some features in what we commonly know as dollar diplomacy which are commendatory. I think it is to be commended whenever it is sought by legitimate means to extend the trade of this country, and the use of the term "dollar diplomacy" in that connection I have no objection to. But when it is sought to promote the personal fortunes and interests of particular individuals and to put the power of the Army and Navy of the Government of the United States back of the particular enterprise upon which those individuals are engaged, then so far as that may be designated to be "dollar diplomacy" I do not believe in it.

I presume that the inquiry of the Senator from North Carolina is directed to the fact that there is that condition of affairs in Nicaragua. In Mexico, on the other hand, we have a large number of American citizens, some of whom have gone there to live and have taken up their residence there, who have been exposed to all the dangers which result from the internecine war, the rebellion, and the revolution, and that there are still a larger number of our citizens who have invested their money there and who otherwise have many millions of dollars invested in the Republic of Mexico in mining industries and cattle industries and others of kindred character, all of which, of course, it is important should be protected, and all of which I want protected, with the limitation that we shall not embroil ourselves in war, and all of which I constantly hope and anticipate shall in the future be properly compensated in regard to any damage which may be suffered by any of those injured.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. FALL. I understand the Senator to agree that there might be exceptional cases in which the President would be justified in landing or authorizing or directing the landing of marines or troops for the protection of property or life in a foreign country where it was in danger.

Mr. BACON. That is true, but it is within certain limitations.

Mr. FALL. Of course I understand the Senator to take the position that the question as to the justification for such an act is one which is personal to the Chief Executive.

Mr. BACON. Not altogether.

Mr. FALL. I want to see if we are not in pretty thorough accord. In the particular instance which is under discussion, that of the landing of marines and of men from the ships of war in Managua, granting for the moment that there has been nothing preceding their arrival there which could in any way indicate that the United States or any of its citizens were interested in fomenting the revolution, if there had been a sudden outbreak in Managua and the American consulate was threatened and lives of American citizens were threatened and a gunboat happened to be in the harbor within reach, does the Senator agree that under those circumstances there would have been justification in their landing for the purpose of protecting lives?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, we have the right to land there for the purpose of seeing that the consulate itself is not violated, because that is American territory.

Mr. FALL. Exactly, and——

Mr. BACON. But the Government has not the right to land an Army, because that is what it amounts to, and say that one of the opposing armies shall not make war on that particular section.

Mr. FALL. I am not in disagreement with the Senator at all. I think that to land an army and to say to the present Government, on the one hand, or to those who are attacking the present Government, upon the other, that we are going to retain the Government as it stands, or we are going to overthrow the Government as it exists, would not possibly be justifiable under any circumstances without the authority of Congress. I have that distinction in mind as clearly as the Senator. But, on the other hand, I would not like to see the rule laid down that, even in Great Britain, for instance, if there was a riot in Liverpool and the property of the American Government in its consulate there was endangered, and the life of the American consul, or the lives of those who might seek sanctuary in the American consulate, because foreigners, or even citizens of the country itself, seek sanctuary in American consulates, where they are supposed to be under the protection of the American Government. Under those circumstances I think the captain of an American ship would have the authority, and it would be his duty, to land marines for the purpose of protecting that consulate; and in the event the consulate was attacked, under his duty to humanity and his Government and under international law, he would be clearly justifiable in using such force as was necessary for the defense of that consulate and using such weapons as he had at hand with which to do it.

I do not believe that under any circumstances a civilized nation like Great Britain would consider it an act of war. She would have a right to make diplomatic representations to this Government, and we would have the right to reply, showing exactly the conditions under which we landed, and that no offense was intended to the Government of Great Britain. Does not the Senator agree with me?

Mr. BACON. When the Senator gets through I will be glad to reply.

Mr. FALL. I was simply stating a case and asking if the Senator would not agree with me.

Mr. BACON. I want to state the case as I understand it when the Senator has finished. I can not answer yes or no. I yielded to the Senator to make his statement, and I will wait until he concludes.

Mr. FALL. I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator.

Mr. BACON. I simply want to give the Senator an opportunity to conclude.

Mr. FALL. Then the question is, Under these particular circumstances would not the Senator justify the landing of a sufficient force to protect the American consulate and the use of such force as was necessary, even in Liverpool?

Mr. BACON. Now, Mr. President, the proposition is simply this: The Senator has very fortunately instanced a case that is one where the conditions would be easily understood and the rights of the Government under those conditions I think somewhat easily defined. The sole function of the landing of the United States marine forces, for instance, in a foreign country for the purpose of protection indicated by the Senator is to protect the consulate itself and those who are connected with it. It does not go to the extent of saying that nobody shall make war in such manner as to endanger that consulate in the progress of that war. It does not go to the extent of saying that the United States Government has the right to land troops in Liverpool for the purpose of preventing warlike operations which may endanger the consulate in their legitimate prosecution.

For illustration, suppose England were at war with Germany and there should be a German fleet drawn up in the Mersey for the purpose of bombarding the city of Liverpool. We have a fleet of battleships there, if you please, superior in numbers and in power to the ships of the German fleet. It would certainly be beyond our power to say to the German fleet, "You shall not bombard Liverpool, because in so doing you will endanger the consulate of the United States." That is absolutely out of the question, and yet that is an exactly parallel case to that which is presented.

We have the right to land troops in case of disorder for the purpose of protecting the consulate from being looted or from being itself specifically attacked; but we have not the power to interfere with our Army and Navy for the purpose of stopping military operations in a hostile country or government against another government upon the ground that in the prosecution of those hostile operations, in the ordinary course of warfare, the shot and shell which should fall in Liverpool would endanger the consulate. It is the same thing as to a small country as to a large country, except in one case we do not assume to do it while in the other case we do so as flippantly and carelessly as a boy robs a bird's nest.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. FALL. I will ask the Senator, if with nations having no particular interest except the preservation of life or the preservation of their consular agencies or their consulate quarters, it is not a matter of common knowledge that other nations do say, and always say, that it is a rule of international law, generally well understood, that in the bombardment by an attacking army or an opposing force, as in the case supposed, for instance, the German Army, which the Senator instanced, the bombardment of a post not fortified can be stopped by other nations, and that it is a general rule of international law that it shall be stopped?

Mr. BACON. I think not. I think there is no doubt about the recognition in the interest of humanity of the fact that there must be opportunity given for noncombatants to leave the zone of danger, but——

Mr. FALL. That is, where there is a fortified post and the same character of resistance is likely to be made as in making an attack?

Mr. BACON. Of course, there must be a resistance; but the question of fortification must be armed resistance. Of course, where there is no armed resistance there is no excuse for it. It is wanton barbarity. If that is what the Senator means, I agree with him, but the simple fact that there is no fortification does not affect the case. There must be a condition where those who are in possession of the town are holding it by an armed force.

Mr. FALL. Then, does not the Senator agree that even in the case of two attacking armies we have a perfect right to land our marines, take charge of our consulate, and use armed forces to repel the forces of either of the armies which might undertake to attack our consulate?

Mr. BACON. If they undertook to attack the consulate per se, undoubtedly that is a different thing altogether, but the fact that the consulate is located in the city which is on the scene of war does not justify it.

Mr. FALL. But if there is an attack made upon the consulate, we have the right to repel force with force.

Mr. BACON. If it is the consulate proper, nobody will dispute that.

Mr. FALL. Now, admitting that certain capitalists in the United States are interested in Nicaraguan affairs, by the assistance of the State Department of the United States—I am not stating these as facts, but admitting all that the Senator has drawn out, as I understand, from the facts which he has adduced here—admitting that an attack was made on the American consulate in Managua, simply because of the fact that by an assumption of authority of the State Department a man who was not authorized to act was acting there, if that man had sought a sanctuary in the consulate and the consulate was attacked because of his being there, would we not yet have the right to repel that force?

Mr. BACON. Where is the line or letter which indicates anything of that kind in the Nicaraguan case?

Mr. FALL. I understood the Senator had been arguing all morning the proposition that somebody, without any authority of law, had appointed a collector of the port, or collector of customs, at Managua at the behest of certain capitalists in the United States, and that because of this appointment we were landing troops to protect this collector.

Mr. BACON. Not at all. It was the landing of troops for the purpose of taking sides with the faction that is identified with this man. There was no attack upon the consulate at all. There is no such evidence.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator means to say that the troops of the United States have been landed in Nicaragua for the purpose of taking sides between two clashing forces, I think the Senator will be perfectly justified in introducing a resolution here of the very strongest character, expressing the sentiment of Congress as to such a circumstance.

Mr. BACON. If such is not the fact, I certainly would not have taken the time of the Senate. It is upon the assumption that that is the fact, as I gather it from the narration in the papers, which I repeat, appears to be given upon authority. There is in yesterday's dispatches a narration or a story, as the newspaper men call it, a statement of the fact that the State Department has given out that one of these factions has alienated itself from the State Department, and it is assumed that the State Department is the Government of the United States. Of course, I want to say that my whole contention is upon the basis of that being the condition, as stated by the Senator.

Mr. FALL. That is what I wanted to bring out clearly. We have the right to use an armed force to protect life and property when they are threatened, and I agree with the Senator, when he holds that we have no right simply to interfere between contesting bodies and take sides with either of them.

Mr. BACON. In this particular case, if I recollect the statement in the paper correctly, these troops were landed and carried over a 6-mile run of railway to the city of Managua for the purpose; I think the statement made this morning is that 2,100 other men, making in all 2,500 marines, that we are to have there—an Army, indeed—and in support of that Government. It can be for no other purpose. Of course nobody will say that 2,500 men are ever sent into the interior of a country for the purpose of protecting a consulate. It is for the purpose of taking part in a war, and in my humble judgmen it is a gross violation of the laws of this country.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that, admitting these facts to be as stated, we have no right to take sides.

Mr. BACON. The only thing which gives me any hesitation in what I say about this investigation by the Senate is that if the facts are true there may possibly be developments on account of which there might be an investigation at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I suppose I have at least a common interest with the Senator from Georgia in the matter which is now under discussion. It will be remembered that his original resolution was referred to the Committee on Cuban Relations. At that time I advised with the President with reference to that resolution, and he assured me that in his opinion there was no reasonable doubt as to his right to pursue the course which had been pursued in Cuba.

But, Mr. President, while I propose to talk upon the matter now under discussion, I want for a few moments to refer to another matter, which is of deeper interest to me, and that is to Senate bill No. 3.

Mr. WARREN rose.

Mr. PAGE. I will yield in a moment. If I remember correctly, on Monday evening, as we were about closing, I asked unanimous consent that at the termination of the consideration of the joint resolution providing for a constitutional amendment the Senate would take up Senate bill No. 3. I want to read from the RECORD as to what occurred.

I now ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the consideration of the joint resolution of the Senator from Iowa my bill be taken up and made the special order, if that is a proper request, Mr. President.

* * * * * * *

The President pro tempore. The Chair will state the request as the Chair understands it. It is that upon the conclusion of the consideration of the joint resolution now before the Senate, Senate bill

No. 3 be made a special order and be taken up for consideration. Is there objection?

* * * * * * *

The President pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Now, it is apparent——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont if he has not skipped a part of the report of what took place? Has the Senator not omitted some of it?

Mr. PAGE. I have read what I thought to be the vital part of the request for unanimous consent. The Chair stated the request, asked if there was objection, and said: "The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered." If the Senator would like to have the other part read, I will read it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will read it later.

Mr. PAGE. Very well. It seems to me that it was the sense of the Senate as expressed at that time that when we got through with the joint resolution which was being discussed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] we should take up Senate bill No. 3. I personally believe that we have substantially concluded the consideration of that joint resolution, and I further believe that I am doing no wrong to the Senate, but rather that I am carrying out the unanimous-consent agreement of the Senate when I proceed now in my own right upon the floor to take up and discuss Senate bill No. 3.

I want to say to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] that at any time when I may do so without prejudice to my right to the floor I shall be glad to yield to him temporarily, but I do not wish to yield the floor unless assured by the Chair that I may do so without surrendering it, except temporarily, to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Vermont holds the floor, does he?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont has the floor on the pending bill.

Mr. WARREN. I want to put no obstacle in the way of the Senator. Of course he has the right under the rules of the Senate to debate any subject he pleases. I would be glad, if the Senate is in the humor to now permit the legislative bill to pass, to get it out of the way, so that it may go to the other House and be perfected. I would also be very glad, let me say without comment, to report for printing, so as to have it ready to take up later, another appropriation bill.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I must insist upon retaining the floor unless I can be assured that there will not be a general discussion precipitated to interfere with the consideration of Senate bill No. 3.

Mr. MASSEY. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MASSEY. I ask what is the bill pending before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, Mr. President, I can not make an agreement of the kind suggested by the Senator from Vermont, because any Senator may break it. I should be glad to make an attempt to conclude the legislative bill, but I can only put the request in that way.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I confess that my knowledge of parliamentary practice is sadly deficient, as has been shown by the treatment of this bill for the past six months. I believe, however, unless the Senator from Wyoming can assure me that there is some way by which I may temporarily yield the floor and then resume it, that I must insist upon retaining the floor.

Mr. WARREN. Let me ask the Senator from Vermont to yield to me to make a report from a committee.

Mr. PAGE. I yield with pleasure.

[At this point Mr. PAGE yielded to Mr. WARREN.]

Mr. MYERS. I will ask the Senator from Vermont if he will yield to me for a moment for routine business, without taking the floor from him?

Mr. PAGE. If I may do so without prejudice, but I am fearful I may lose the floor if I should yield. I think, therefore, I had better maintain my position.

I now ask, Mr. President, that the Senate will consider some remarks I am about to make upon Senate bill No. 3, and I would be glad if Senators would place this bill upon their desks as well as Report No. 405, made on Senate bill No. 3, Calendar No. 348.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. PAGE. For a question.

Mr. CUMMINS. For a question. About how long does the Senator from Vermont expect to address the Senate?

Mr. PAGE. I am unable to say.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask so that we may arrange our affairs accordingly.

Mr. PAGE. I am unable to say, Mr. President.

Mr. CUMMINS. During the remainder of the day, probably?

Mr. PAGE. Possibly; perhaps during the rest of the session.

This bill is to provide cooperation with the States in promoting instruction in agriculture, and so forth, and if the Secretary will kindly read the caption of the bill I will be obliged, if I may be permitted to ask him to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3) to provide for cooperation with the States in promoting instruction in agriculture, the trades and industries, and home economics in secondary schools; in preparing teachers for these vocational subjects in State colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts, in State normal schools, and in other training schools for teachers supported and controlled by the public; in maintaining extension departments of State colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts; in maintaining branches of State experiment stations; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia will state his point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand the unfinished business is still the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to the joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business has been temporarily laid aside by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. May I ask the Chair when it was so laid aside?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. About half an hour ago.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not understand that the unfinished business had been temporarily laid aside.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Having taken the floor, can I be disturbed in making any remarks I wish to make here?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will be protected in his rights. Of course any Senator has the right to rise to a question of order or to ask a ruling of the Chair.

Mr. PAGE. I have no objection to that. I have not only no objection, Mr. President, but I would be exceedingly pleased if every Senator in this body would ask any questions that occur to him as I proceed with this discussion. I do not want the discussion of this bill limited in any way whatever. The fullest discussion is what will best please me.

Section 1 gives a definition or construction to the several descriptive terms used in specifying the classes of institutions which are to receive the benefits of the several appropriations under this act.

I should like to have the construction clause, which appears on the second and third pages of the bill, read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the portions of the bill referred to will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

CONSTRUCTION.

That the following words and phrases, as hereafter used in this act, shall, unless a different meaning is plainly required by the context, have the following meanings:

First. "School of secondary grade" or "secondary school" or "high school" shall mean a school offering studies and courses of lower than college grade which are designed to provide vocational education in agriculture and home making for persons above 12 years of age and in the trades and industries for persons above 14 years of age; and which, by courses of training approved under the provisions of this act, give vocational instruction in all-day classes to those persons who are preparing for agricultural, industrial, or home-making occupations; or in part-time and continuation classes to persons engaged in or experienced in agricultural, industrial, or home-making vocations; or in evening classes to persons above 16 years of age employed during the day in the respective vocations for which they are given instruction.

Second. "State college of agriculture and the mechanic arts" shall mean a college now receiving, or which may hereafter receive, the benefits of the act of Congress of July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts" and of acts supplementary thereto.

Third. "Agricultural-extension department or division" shall mean a department or division which is established under the provisions of this act and under the direction of a State college of agriculture and the mechanic arts in any State, and which gives instruction and demonstrations in agriculture and home economics to persons not residing at said college nor at the district agricultural schools provided for in this act and which conveys or imparts to such persons information on such subjects through field demonstrations, publications, and otherwise.

Fourth. "Separate industrial or home economics school" shall mean a school fitting for useful service in the trades and industries and the home, and having a separate plant and equipment, and separate organization of teachers and courses of study.

Fifth. "District agricultural high school" shall mean a separate agricultural school of secondary grade, in a district composed of a group of counties, and located on a farm.

Sixth. "Branch station" shall mean a branch of a State experiment station conducting field tests and breeding work, and located on a district agricultural high-school farm.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, section 2 is a general clause making the appropriation and stating that the sums designated in sections 3 to 10, inclusive, are "for instruction in agriculture, the trades, and industries, and home economics, for agricultural tests and demonstrations, and for administrative purposes."

I now ask that the Secretary read section 3 of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 3. That for the maintenance of instruction in agriculture, the trades and industries, and home economics in departments or divisions of schools of secondary grade, other than the separate industrial or home economics schools and the separate district agricultural high schools for which provision is hereinafter made, the sum of $3,000,000 annually, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, such sum to be allotted annually to the States and the District of Columbia in proportion to their population as shown by the Federal census next preceding the year for which such allotment is made. The moneys appropriated under this section shall be known as the secondary school department fund.

Mr. PAGE. By oversight I omitted to ask the Secretary to read section 2, and I will read it myself:

APPROPRIATIONS.

SEC. 2. That the several sums as herein provided in section 3 to section 10, inclusive, be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid, as hereinafter provided, to the respective States and the District of Columbia and to the Federal departments named herein, for instruction in agriculture, the trades and industries, and home economics, for agricultural tests and demonstrations, and for administrative purposes.

Section 3 provides $3,000,000 for what is denominated in the bill the "secondary school department fund." This appropriation is for instruction in agriculture, the trades and industries, and home economics in clearly defined departments or divisions of existing high schools of secondary-school grade. That means schools which are usually conducted in the villages and towns of a few hundred population, and perhaps it would be well that I should explain to the Senate how this is likely to work out in the different communities.

It is estimated that about 15,000 communities outside the large cities will take advantage of this appropriation, or an average of 300, or a little more, for each State. Unquestionably the number will increase from year to year, and for the first few years there may be less than this number; but upon the hypothesis that this number of communities will avail themselves of the provisions of this section of this bill, it would mean that the Federal Government will contribute toward each of these schools $200. If the State should supplement this Federal fund with a like fund, it would mean, of course, $400 that each rural community would be benefited through the joint State and national appropriation.

If, as is expected will be the case, the rural community is asked to match the joint State and Federal appropriation, it means that each rural community will have a separate unit, room, or division of its school work at each high school, which will be presided over by a teacher costing, say, $800 per year.

The bill provides that the money shall be distributed, unless otherwise provided, according to the amount which the local community shall raise for the same purpose, although it wisely preserves the autonomy of the States by providing that if any State thinks it best to distribute the fund upon some other basis it can do so; always on condition, however, that the method of distribution be approved by the Department of the Interior, which, of course, in this case means the Commissioner of Education.

It should be said, however, that under the terms of the bill the State and local communities would be jointly compelled to contribute only twice as much as the Federal appropriation; but educators believe that the example set by States like New Jersey and Massachusetts—which have worked out this problem upon the basis of a contribution by the local community equal to the amount of the outside help they receive—will be the method followed in the distribution of this fund. The average appropriation to each State and the District of Columbia under the provisions of this section is $61,225.

We next come to the provision which pertains to city industrial schools. This appropriation provides for what are to be known as industrial and home-economic schools. The country schools are supposed to teach agriculture and home economics, and the city schools to teach the trades and industries and home economics. This appropriation is for the maintenance of instruction in the trades and industries and home economics in separate schools. Bear in mind that the provisions of section 3 for the rural schools presuppose that each village or town school will have a separate unit or division of its school, in which there will be a department devoted to agriculture and home economics, and perhaps, incidentally, some other trade; but this matter will probably work out by giving an $800 teacher or an $800 unit or room in the village school. The difference between this appropriation and the appropriation for what is designated as the "secondary-school department fund" is that the latter contemplates assistance to the separate divisions or departments devoted to vocational education in the high schools in the larger villages and towns, while the appropriation in section 4 is presumably to be used for separate schools at industrial centers or in cities large enough to maintain independent schools for the trades and industries.

I want to say in this connection that while the bill takes effect earlier as to certain features, such as educating teachers, it does not take effect until 1916, so far as the appropriations for rural and city schools are concerned.

The $3,000,000 appropriated by section 4 is allotted in proportion to population engaged in trades and transportation and in manufacturing and mechanical pursuits.

The question may be asked why the allotment is so made. The answer is that in taking the Federal census the population is divided under certain subheads, two of which are "Persons engaged in trades and transportation" and "Persons engaged in manufacturing and mechanical pursuits." The language of this section is therefore made to conform to the language of those census subdivisions which every 10 years records those who work in the trades and industries. The average appropriation to the different States and the District of Columbia under the provisions of this section is $61,225. I should like to have Senators see how this appropriation would work out in their own sections, because it is quite interesting to those who live in cities to know what they will get. It is estimated that 30 per cent of the population of this country will be able to take advantage of its benefits; and if, as is expected, our population reaches 100,000,000 by 1916, when this appropriation becomes available, it means that $3,000,000 will be distributed to 30,000,000 people, which would be 10 cents per capita.

Let us, to illustrate, take a city of 10,000 population and see what kind of school would naturally result from this appropriation. Ten thousand population, at 10 cents per capita, would mean that the Federal contribution would be $1,000. If the State should match this by an appropriation of a like amount, and if, as it is supposed will be the case, the town or city shall match the joint Federal and State appropriation, it would mean that the city must raise $2,000 to match the $2,000 contributed by the State and Federal Governments.

In other words, it would give them a $4,000 school, devoted to instruction in the trades and industries and home economics. A city of 100,000 population would have $40,000 to devote to this class of education. A city of 1,000,000 would have $400,000.

I should now like to have the Secretary read section 4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. That for the maintenance of instruction in the trades and industries and home economics in separate industrial or home economics schools of secondary grade, the sum of $3,000,000 annually, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, such sum to be allotted annually to the States and the District of Columbia in proportion to their population engaged in trades and transportation and in manufacturing and mechanical pursuits, as shown by the Federal census next preceding the year for which such allotment is made. The moneys appropriated under this section shall be known as the industrial or home economics school fund.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, section 5 appropriates $3,000,000 for what is designated as the "district agricultural high-school fund." This appropriation is for the maintenance of instruction in agriculture and home economics in the district agricultural high schools to be established under the provisions of this act.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If it will not interrupt the Senator in the course of his remarks——

Mr. PAGE. Not at all.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to inquire whether the appropriation provided in section 4 is made contingent upon a like appropriation, or upon an appropriation being made by each of the States getting the benefit of their proportionate share of the amount proposed to be appropriated by the bill?

Mr. PAGE. Every appropriation in this bill is made contingent upon the States appropriating a like amount or double the amount appropriated by the Federal Government. I will explain that as I go along. In every case, however, there must be an equal sum and in many cases twice as much. I am very glad, indeed, to have the Senator make the inquiry, and will be glad to have any other Senator interrupt me who desires to inform himself as to any part of this bill.

This appropriation—that is, the appropriation for district agricultural high schools—also begins with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and is allotted to the several States in proportion to the number of persons engaged in agricultural pursuits as shown by the preceding Federal census. It provides a special appropriation of $5,000 for each State with less than 100,000 people engaged in agriculture. The average appropriation for each State under the provisions of this section, basing the estimate upon the census of 1900—I have not the figures under the census of 1910—would be $65,000.

I now ask the Secretary to read section 5 in full.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. That for the maintenance of instruction in agriculture and home economics in district agricultural high schools of secondary grade as hereinafter provided, the sum of $3,000,000 annually, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, such sum to be allotted annually to the States in proportion to the number of persons engaged in agricultural pursuits, as shown by the Federal census next preceding the year for which such allotment is made; and for each State with less than 100,000 people engaged in agriculture, according to such Federal census, the additional sum of $5,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and annually thereafter. The moneys appropriated under this section shall be known as the district agricultural high-school fund.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, we now come to section 6 of this bill. It will be observed that we have in the preceding sections appropriated $3,000,000 for each of four different funds. Section 6, however, provides an appropriation of only $1,000,000 for what is designated as the "branch-station fund." This appropriation is for the maintenance of branch or demonstration stations upon farms connected with the district agricultural high schools established under the provisions of section 5. This fund is designed to give these large agricultural high schools, one of which will be in each group of 8 or 10 counties, a practical turn. Here the teachers and pupils will live on a large farm, and much of the practical work will be done by the students. Here experimenters will test and breed plants and animals especially adapted to the conditions of the surrounding counties. Here the matter of rotation schemes needed by the region will be under test, and the use of fertilizers on the local soils will be studied.

Here the college and department extension workers will center such of their work as is needed by the students. Here the students will gain a knowledge of research work, that those gifted in this form of public service may be drawn into this important work. This appropriation begins with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and is allotted to the several States in proportion to the number of persons engaged in agricultural pursuits. It makes a special appropriation of $2,000 for States having a population of less than 100,000 people engaged in agriculture. The average appropriation to each State under the provisions of this bill is $21,833.

Touching the $4,000,000 appropriated for this district agricultural high-school fund and the branch-station fund, it will probably work about as follows:

It is estimated that there will be about 1 school for whites in each congressional district outside of the cities, or about 325 in all. If in the Southern States there shall be 75 additional schools established for the colored race, it will give us a total of 400 schools. The fund to be divided to each of these schools will be substantially as follows:

First, the Government appropriates $3,000,000 under section 5; the State must appropriate the other $6,000,000; the Federal Government appropriates $1,000,000 for the branch stations connected with these schools under section 6; and to this sum another $1,000,000 must be added by the State, making a total of $11,000,000 to be divided among 400 schools, or $27,500 for each school, including the State and Federal appropriations.

Men experienced in the management of schools of this kind say it will cost about $100 for each pupil to conduct such a really good school as is contemplated by this act. If this supposition be correct, it means that every year there will be turned out from these different agricultural schools 275 boys and girls who, it is hoped, will return to the farm to join with the father—who, meanwhile, has been educated under the provisions of section 7 of this bill, which provides for college extension and farm demonstration work—in vitalizing, energizing, and stimulating a more intelligent and more profitable management of the farm.

Mr. President, I ask that section 6 be now read, as when I am through with my remarks I wish to be able to state that the entire bill has been read in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OLIVER in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read section 6, as follows:

SEC. 6. That for the maintenance of branch stations, as provided for in this act, the sum of $1,000,000 annually, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, to be allotted annually to the States in proportion to the number of persons engaged in agricultural pursuits, as shown by the Federal census next preceding the year for which such allotment is made; and for the maintenance of such branch stations in each State with less than 100,000 people engaged in agriculture, according to such Federal census, the additional sum of $2,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and annually thereafter. The moneys appropriated under this section shall be known as the branch station fund.

Mr. PAGE. I will now proceed to explain section 7. It appropriates $3,000,000 for what is designated as the "extension-work fund," being for the support at each State college of agriculture and the mechanic arts of an extension department or division to enable the several State colleges of agriculture to take to the adult farmer upon the farm in his own locality the accumulated results of experimentation and research at the agricultural colleges and experiment stations and at the departments of agriculture; and is designed to further the work of teaching and demonstrating in a practical way to persons not in the schools how actual farming can be conducted with more profitable results than at present. This appropriation begins with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, the appropriation for that year being $480,000, or $10,000 for each of the 48 States. This sum is increased from year to year until 1921, when it reaches the maximum sum of $2,980,000. All sums, aside from the $10,000 per year to each State, are to be allotted on the basis of population engaged in agricultural pursuits. The average sum to each State in 1921 and thereafter is $62,083.

I now ask that section 7 be read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested,

The Secretary read section 7, as follows:

SEC. 7. That for the support in each State college of agriculture and the mechanic arts of an extension department or division the sum of $640,000 annually, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, of which annual appropriation $10,000 shall be allotted to each of the 48 States for the benefit of such extension departments; and for the maintenance of such extension departments, the additional sum of $400,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914; the additional sum of $700,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915; the additional sum of $1,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916; the additional sum of $1,300,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917; the additional sum of $1,600,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918; the additional sum of $1,900,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919; the additional sum of $2,200,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920; the additional sum of $2,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and annually thereafter; these additional sums to be allotted annually to the States in proportion to their population engaged in agriculture, as shown by the Federal census next preceding the year for which such allotment is made. The moneys appropriated under this section shall be known as the extension-work fund.

Mr. PAGE. Section 8 of this bill appropriates $480,000 for what is designated as the "college teachers' training fund." This appropriation is for the preparation of teachers in departments or divisions of education in the State colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts of the respective States, to give instruction in, or closely related to, agriculture, the trades and industries, and home economics. I wish to make it plain that this measure not only provides the means for the employment of teachers in the school service and in college-extension service but also the means with which these teachers may be trained by the agricultural colleges and State normal and other teachers' training schools. It begins with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and allots $10,000 to each of the 48 States.

Mr. President, I must correct myself—it allots $10,000 to each of the 48 States, but an additional $10,000 for those States having colored agricultural colleges. That makes an addition of $160,000, making the total aggregate appropriation, as the bill now reads, of $640,000.

It is perhaps best, Mr. President, that I explain about this additional appropriation of $160,000, as the original bill only called for $480,000.

In December last the Southern Commercial Congress, an organization having for its special object the promotion of the welfare of the South, held a meeting here in Washington for the purpose of discussing vocational education generally, and especially with reference to its effect upon the Southern States. Upon its invitation, the executive committee of the American Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations attended in a body and assisted in the discussion and amendment of this bill. This meeting was presided over by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], and was attended by a large number of leading educators from all parts of the country, the session lasting for three days.

At that time the bill was gone through very carefully by a subcommittee appointed at that meeting, and the result was a practically rewritten bill, the bill which was reported to the Senate from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in February last.

The question of the unpreparedness of the country to take up this work was one of the leading topics of discussion at this meeting, and the conclusion reached was that we must add another half million dollars to the appropriation for the education of teachers by agricultural and mechanical colleges, and that we should put off the time when the main features of the appropriation should become available till the year ending June 30, 1916.

The bill provided that we should commence in 1914, I think, originally, to appropriate money for those schools, but after a quite lengthy and somewhat spirited discussion the conclusion was reached that we were so unprepared to go on with the main work that before the main appropriation became available we should provide for the education of teachers, and so this $10,000 per year to each agricultural college was added to the bill at that time. I believe it is one of the best provisions of the bill.

This change not only gives the several States sufficient time to prepare for the education of teachers, but it gives them ample opportunity to enact any legislation which may seem to be necessary to make the State laws harmonize with the national law; and it hardly need be said that if during the next three years it should be found that any minor changes not affecting the fundamental principles of the bill are desirable, the National Congress will be quick to make those changes.

I now ask that section 8 be read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 8. That for the preparation of teachers to give instruction in or closely related to agriculture, the trades and industries, and home economics, in departments or divisions of education in the State colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts of the respective States, the sum of $640,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and annually thereafter; of which annual appropriation $20,000 shall be allotted for the use and benefit of said departments or divisions of education in land-grant colleges in each of the 16 States which maintain separate land-grant colleges for persons of the colored race, $10,000 of which shall be for the education of persons of the white race and $10,000 for the education of persons of the colored race; and $10,000 shall be annually allotted for the use and benefit of said departments or divisions of education in each of those States which do not maintain separate land-grant colleges for persons of the colored race. The moneys appropriated under this section shall be known as the "College teachers' training fund."

Mr. PAGE. I want to say with reference to this $10,000 for the different colored schools that the bill originally did not call for this sum; but at a meeting here in Washington last December Dr. Hardy, of the State Agricultural College of Mississippi, who seemed to be a very intelligent, able educator, made a plea for the South. He said: "You do not know how much we in the South need help, and I hope that this gathering here at this time will recommend to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry that they amend this measure by giving to each State having a colored agricultural college an additional $10,000." And because of his plea the bill was so amended.

Later, upon the motion of Senator SMITH of Georgia, I think, this $10,000 was stricken out. Very soon thereafter I began receiving a good many communications asking why the $10,000 had been denied to the colored agricultural colleges of the South, which were very needy. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] was especially earnest in his plea that the $10,000 appropriation be restored. I said to him, "Senator, this is a matter that pertains to the Southern States. They have asked that it be stricken from the bill, and I do not think those of us who come from the North should go so far as to force this additional appropriation upon you. So far as I am concerned, I believe it is right and should be very glad to have it restored."

I afterwards took up this matter with the junior Senator from Georgia, Senator SMITH, telling him that there seemed to be a strong demand for the restoration of this $10,000 appropriation. He replied that if we wished to give them the option of taking or not taking the $10,000 he could see no objection. The result was that the rewritten bill contained the appropriation so earnestly contended for by Dr. Hardy, of Mississippi.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is the Senator from Vermont able to state the number of agricultural colleges in the South that would receive this sum?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir; 16.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is the number of colored schools?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Are those colleges maintained by the States?

Mr. PAGE. No; they are provided for by the Morrill Act. The Morrill Act gives to these colored colleges the same amount given to the colleges for the whites.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand.

Mr. PAGE. It may be remarked with reference to all these appropriations that it is entirely optional with the States to accept them or not. For instance, if a State does not care to accept the $10,000 or the $20,000 it is not compelled to do so, but if it does do so it must match it with as much more. I will come to that later.

Section 9 appropriates $1,000,000 for what is known as the "normal teachers' training fund," being for the preparation of teachers to give instruction in, or closely related to, agriculture, the trades and industries, and home economics in State normal schools and in other training schools for teachers.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether his view of the bill is that in case a State is given $10,000, where it has an agricultural college, or, speaking generally, where there is an agricultural college for the colored citizens of that State, the State has a right to accept either one of the contributions, say $10,000, and use it as it sees fit, either for the white or the colored agricultural college, or must the State accept or reject both the $10,000 for the agricultural college for white students and the $10,000 for the agricultural college for colored students? The point is, whether or not under the provisions of this bill the State can accept one and reject the other.

Mr. PAGE. One-half of the fund and not the other?

Mr. FLETCHER. Or whether it must accept or reject both propositions of $10,000, and, of course, if it accepts, contribute a like amount?

Mr. PAGE. If the Senator will allow me to answer that question later on, when we get to that provision of the bill which says how the fund must be allotted, I shall be glad to do so, although I will say that at this moment I am not entirely certain as to the answer to his interrogatory. I should like to consider it later when we get to that particular provision, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to ask the Chair if the bill is now in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not, the Chair is informed.

Mr. MYERS. For what purpose is the bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The legislative appropriation bill is the measure which is before the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. At any rate, at this stage, by unanimous consent, I ask leave to amend section 9 of the bill by changing the word "three," in line 23, on page 8, to the word "four."

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I do not see how the Senator's motion can be in order when the legislative bill is before the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. It is no motion. I did not make a motion.

Mr. PAGE. If the Senator will allow me, I would be very glad, indeed, if, as this bill is read, Senators would consider the necessity for amendments precisely as though the bill were before the Senate. I would be very glad if they would prepare their amendments and let me consider them, so that when the bill is really before the Senate I may, if possible, accept them without contest. I think if the Senator will prepare his amendment and let it lie on the table, to be taken up at the proper time, it will effect the purpose he desires.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be amended by changing the word "three," in line 23, on page 8, to the word "four."

Mr. CURTIS rose.

Mr. MYERS. Of course if there is any objection, that is the end of it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CURTIS. I object to this amendment, as I have a right to, because the bill is not before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made——

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, for what purpose is the bill, before the Senate now?

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand, the bill is not before the Senate. The Senator from Vermont is discussing this bill while the legislative bill is before the Senate. The bill is not now before the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. Very well; I will try to offer my amendment at an opportune time. I was under a misapprehension as to the parliamentary situation.

Mr. PAGE. This appropriation for what is known as normal teachers' training fund begins with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, that the preparation of teachers may begin at once, and is allotted to the several States and the District of Columbia in proportion to population. It makes a special appropriation of $3,000 to each of the States having a population of less than 300,000. The average appropriation to each State under the provisions of this section is $21,333.

I ask the Secretary to read section 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 9. That for the preparation of teachers to give instruction in or closely related to agriculture, the trades and industries, and home economics in State normal schools and in other schools furnishing special training for teachers, the sum of $1,000,000 annually, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, to be allotted annually to the States and the District of Columbia in proportion to their population as shown by the Federal census next preceding the year for which such allotment is made; and for such instruction as in this section is provided, in each State with less than 300,000 inhabitants the additional sum of $3,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and annually thereafter. The moneys appropriated under this section shall be known as the normal teachers' training fund.

Mr. PAGE. We now come to the administrative features of the bill, and while they are not all as important as the general appropriation features, I apprehend that they will be the subject of quite as much interest to Senators who wish to give attention to this matter as the others, because in these administrative features we take up a good many points that might properly be the subject of discussion.

Section 10 appropriates $90,000 for what is designated as the "administration fund." This appropriation is subdivided as follows: Forty thousand dollars to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior in paying the necessary expenses of administering the provisions of this act relating to schools of secondary grade and to the preparation of teachers in agriculture, the trades and industries, and home economics; $35,000 to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture, of which $20,000 is for administering the provisions of the act relating to extension departments or divisions and branch stations, $15,000 to enable him to cooperate with the Secretary of the Interior in relation to schools of secondary grade giving instruction in agriculture and home economics and to the preparation of teachers in these vocations; and $15,000 to be expended by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in paying the expenses of administering, in cooperation with the Secretary of the Interior, those provisions of the act relating to instruction in the trades and industries and in the preparation of teachers for these vocations. These appropriations begin with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

I want to say in regard to these administrative features that there has been some criticism with reference to the dividing or subdividing of responsibility between the three departments—Interior, which means the Commissioner of Education; Agriculture, and Commerce and Labor.

The Commissioner of Education is in charge of all matters that pertain strictly to schools; the Secretary of Agriculture is in charge of matters which pertain to purely college extension work and to the agricultural schools and branch experiment stations.

The connection of the Department of Commerce and Labor with this matter has been at the earnest suggestion of the laboring men, who say that the Department of Commerce and Labor is nearer to them than any other. They seem to have an approach to that department which they have to no other. They have asked that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor hold an advisory position with reference to this bill, and the committee thought it wise to observe their wishes touching this matter.

Now, let the Secretary read section 10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read section 10, as follows:

SEC. 10. That the sum of $40,000 annually, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in paying the necessary expenses of administering the provisions of this act relating to schools of secondary grade and to the preparation of teachers in agriculture, trades and industries, and home economics; the sum of $20,000 annually, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture in paying the necessary expenses of administering the provisions of this act relating to extension departments or divisions and branch stations; the sum of $15,000 annually, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in paying the necessary expenses of giving advice and assistance, as herein provided, to the Secretary of the Interior in the administration of the provisions of this act relating to all schools of secondary grade giving training in agriculture and home economics, and to the preparation of teachers in these vocations; the sum of $15,000 annually, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in paying the necessary expenses of giving advice and assistance, as herein provided, to the Secretary of the Interior in the administration of the provisions of this act relating to instruction in the trades and industries and to the preparation of teachers for these vocations. The moneys appropriated under this section shall be known as the administration fund.

Mr. PAGE. Now, Mr. President, we have proceeded through the appropriating sections of this act. The following table shows, in a condensed form, just what the bill purposes doing in the matter of appropriations.

To summarize, it may be said that the entire appropriations in 1921 will aggregate $14,912,000.

The appropriations increase from 1913 to 1921 as follows:

1913	$2,077,000
1914	2,477,000
1915	2,777,000
1916	13,412,000
1917	13,712,000
1918	14,012,000
1919	14,312,000
1920	14,612,000
1921	14,912,000

Let me repeat that every appropriation made by this bill may be accepted by the State or not as it may elect. I do not suppose that the appropriation will at any time aggregate quite as much as this table shows. In 1921 we shall unquestionably have more than 100,000,000 population, and the appropriation at most will never be as much as $15,000,000. It will therefore be readily seen that the entire appropriation can not amount to 15 cents per capita of the population of this country.

Now, I realize that we might appropriate $15,000,000, or 15 cents per capita, for a great many things for which we ought not to appropriate any sum, but the objection which some urge to the appropriations made in this bill that they are extravagant, is not, in my judgment, well founded.

Senators, here is a bill that affects every city, town, village, and hamlet in this country from Canada to the Gulf and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and yet the utmost that can be taken from the Federal Treasury for this great educational work in case every State shall accept every provision of the bill will be less than 15 cents per capita of our population.

Touching section 11, let me state briefly that it safeguards the funds appropriated for schools of the secondary grade and the preparation of teachers for these schools. It charges the Secretary of the Interior with the duty, and gives him the necessary power to administer the provisions of this act in relation to the $9,000,000 appropriated for schools teaching the trades and industries, home economics, and agriculture, as provided for in sections 3, 4, and 5 of this act; the $640,000 for the education of teachers in State agricultural colleges, as provided in section 8; and the $1,000,000 appropriated for the education of teachers in State normal and other training schools, as provided in section 9. Section 11 also provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall have the cooperation of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

I now ask that section 11 may be read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read section 11, as follows:

SEC. 11. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby charged with the duty, and to him is hereby given all necessary power, to administer the provisions of this act relating to all schools of secondary grade and to the preparation of teachers in agriculture, the trades and industries, and home economics as herein provided; to secure advice and assistance from the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in carrying out the provisions of this act, in the making of investigations concerning education in the industries, home economics, and agriculture, and in the making of reports thereon; to cooperate with the State boards for vocational education herein provided for the respective States and the District of Columbia in developing the work of such secondary schools and in the training of such teachers; and to give to such boards for vocational education such advice and assistance as will best enable them to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. PAGE. I do.

Mr. JONES. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Bradley	Dillingham	Massey	Stone
Brandegee	Fall	Myers	Swanson
Briggs	Fletcher	Nelson	Thornton
Bryan	Gallinger	Oliver	Townsend
Burnham	Guggenheim	Page	Warren
Catron	Heyburn	Perkins	Watson
Chamberlain	Jones	Pomerene	Wetmore
Clapp	Lippitt	Reed	Williams
Cullom	McLean	Shively

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names—not a quorum. The names of the absentees will be called.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. ROOT, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. SMITH of Arizona, and Mr. TILLMAN answered to their names when called.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. BACON, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. CULBERSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I would now invite the attention of the Senate to section 12. It safeguards the other $4,000,000 appropriated in sections 6 and 7. It charges the Secretary of Agriculture with the duty, and to him is given the power, to administer the provisions of the act relating to the $1,000,000 appropriated for branch stations at the district agricultural high schools, and the $3,000,000 appropriated for the extension-work fund, and it authorizes him to aid the Secretary of the Interior in carrying out the provisions of this act, so far as they relate to instruction in agriculture and home economics in schools of the secondary grade, and the preparation of teachers for those vocations.

I call the attention of Senators especially to the fact that here is a bill appropriating a very large amount of money, and it is exceedingly essential that every possible precaution be taken to see that the money is not where it can be misappropriated or diverted. I want to say that not only hours, but days and weeks, have been devoted to the safeguarding of this fund. I believe that Senators will find, when they read the bill carefully, that it is an effective bill, and that it will carry out the purposes for which it was drawn in a manner that will prove entirely satisfactory.

I now ask that section 12 of the bill be read in full.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby charged with the duty, and to him is hereby given all necessary power to administer the provisions of this act relating to extension departments and branch stations; to make investigations and studies relating to the work of such departments and branch stations, and to issue reports thereon; to cooperate with the authorities of the State colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts and the State experiment stations in developing the work of such departments and branch stations and in giving such State experiment stations such advice and assistance as will best enable them to carry out the provisions of this act; and to aid the Secretary of the Interior by giving advice and assistance to him in carrying out the provisions of this act relating to instruction in agriculture and home economics in schools of secondary grade and to the preparation of teachers for these vocations, and to make such investigations in relation to agriculture and home economics and such reports thereon as may be necessary in discharging this responsibility.

Mr. PAGE. I now call attention to section 13. Section 13 gives the Secretary of Commerce and Labor authority to assist the Secretary of the Interior in carrying out those provisions of the act which relate to instruction in the trades and industries and the preparation of teachers for those vocations.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I have been called out of the Chamber for a time while the Senator from Vermont has been occupying the floor, and I should like to inquire if he is going through each section of the bill and explain in detail just what the provisions are and what their effect will be?

Mr. PAGE. I am.

Mr. BRISTOW. And will his explanation be printed in pamphlet form so that during the vacation it may be distributed to those who are interested in the subject?

Mr. PAGE. Well, Mr. President, I should be very glad indeed to furnish the Senator from Kansas with a pamphlet copy of my speeches. The facts are that by the kindness of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] my original speech upon this bill was made a Senate document, which permitted the printing of 1,200 copies. Since that time the calls upon me for those speeches from many States in the Union have been such that I have felt compelled to order 10,000 additional copies, for which I have paid out of my own pocket—first for 5,000 and then for 5,000 more. That means a tax upon me of about $500 for speeches that I have ordered printed. I do not know that I shall feel like continuing that kind of work extensively, but my speeches will, of course, be found in the RECORD.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator's speech I have, and it is, of course, a very exhaustive discussion of the subject; but I was impressed with the reading of these paragraphs and the Senator's explanation of each one, and of course I know it would be an imposition on the Senator to ask him to have published an elaborate pamphlet such as that would be; but if that were printed and properly indexed, it seems to me it would be of value, especially to the busy man who might want to look up any special phase of the subject and study it, and it would be a more convenient, though not a more scholarly, presentation of the matter than was the original speech.

Mr. PAGE. I am exceedingly gratified that the Senator from Kansas takes an interest in this bill. I want to say to him, however, that what I am saying now is practically what I said in my original speech; and if he will turn to pages 8 to 28 of my original speech, which he has—if he has not, I will furnish him a copy—he will find all the data he requires to understand exactly what the bill does, what it safeguards, and how it does it. I speak advisedly when I say that the Senator will be entirely satisfied if he will read my original speech on this bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator, as I understand, expects to have at least the RECORD show the detailed explanation, such as he has here been going through with, so that those of us who desire can turn to the RECORD and get the explanation of the bill as he is now presenting it.

Mr. PAGE. I certainly expect that what I say here will find its way into the RECORD. I have no idea of cutting it out. I want to say, further, to the Senator from Kansas, before I close upon this point, that I designed that my original speech should give a full and complete abstract of the bill, so full and so complete that he probably will not care to read what I am saying here to-day.

I now come to section 13 of this bill, which provides the duties and responsibilities of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in assisting the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior, as the designation is used in this bill, practically means the Commissioner of Education, who, presumably, will have charge largely of the school work, although it will be under the control, of course, of the Secretary of the Interior.

The question is asked as to why the administrative features of this act have not been left entirely with a single department. This I have explained, although I shall be glad to explain it again if any Senator would like to be further advised about it. The main point is that the bill has been worked out with a great deal of painstaking detail, as I am sure that any Senator who will carefully examine into its provisions will confess. I now ask that the Secretary read section 13.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby charged with the duty, and to him is hereby given all necessary power to aid the Secretary of the Interior by giving advice and assistance to him in carrying out the provisions of this act relating to instruction in the trades and industries in schools of secondary grade and to the preparation of teachers for these vocations, and to make investigations relating to education and research in the trades and industries and issuing reports thereon.

Mr. PAGE. I now ask the attention of the Senate to section 14. This is a particularly important section. It provides that in order that any State may secure the benefits of this act it shall, through the legislative authority of said State, accept its provisions and shall designate a State custodian to receive and be responsible for each and all of the seven funds appropriated. I would call the attention of Senators especially to the last paragraph of this section, for in many respects it contains one of the most important changes made in the bill as originally introduced. It reads as follows:

Any State or the District of Columbia may accept the benefit of any one or more of the respective funds herein appropriated to it and may defer the acceptance of the benefit of any one or more of such funds, and shall be required to meet only the conditions imposed in relation to those funds the benefit of which it has accepted.

This paragraph has been incorporated in the bill at the suggestion of several States which were in doubt as to whether they would or would not deem it advisable to accept all the appropriations and provisions of the bill, as they were required to do under the measure as it was originally drawn, in order to be the recipients of any of the appropriations named in the measure.

The effect of this amendment is to leave it optional with any State to accept any one or all of the appropriations and to permit it to defer the acceptance of any one or more of its provisions until such time as the State may wish to avail itself of the benefits of those particular provisions.

My judgment is that, without a single exception, every State will avail itself of every provision of the bill. Inasmuch as the $3,000,000 appropriation for each of the three classes of secondary schools—$9,000,000 in all—and only a part of the appropriation for college extension work becomes effective until 1916, all the States will be given ample opportunity to provide by legislative enactment for taking advantage of the provisions of the bill.

I confess, Mr. President, that I may be mistaken about this matter. This is only an opinion. The junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] has said to me that the condition of affairs in Louisiana was such that he feared they could not accept the provisions of the bill, and yet he is a warm supporter of the measure, because he believes, as he says, that it is a good measure, even though they can not accept it. He said:

I would not think that we were doing just and right to do anything to injure the cause of vocational education, but whether we do or do not accept, makes no difference with the support which I shall give to the measure.

I now ask that section 14 be read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 14. That in order to secure the benefits of any fund provided for in this act any State shall, through the legislative authority thereof, accept the provisions of this act relating to such fund, and shall appoint the State treasurer custodian, to be known as custodian for vocational education, for all moneys received by such State under this act, and shall provide for the proper custody, administration, and disbursement of such moneys, as herein provided; and the District of Columbia shall, through the commissioners thereof, accept the provisions of this act, and shall appoint a custodian of all the moneys received by the District of Columbia under this act, to be known as custodian for vocational education, and shall provide for the proper custody, administration, and disbursement of such moneys. Any State or the District of Columbia may accept the benefit of any one or more of the respective funds herein appropriated to it, and may defer the acceptance of the benefit of any one or more of such funds, and shall be required to meet only the conditions imposed in relation to those funds the benefit of which it has accepted.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I now invite the attention of the Senate to section 15 of this bill. I would especially ask the attention of those Senators who feel that the Federal Government should not interfere with the educational machinery of the several States. As the bill was originally drawn it provided for the formulation of rules and regulations by the Department of the Interior acting in conjunction with the several States. Perhaps I may digress a little to refer to my experience with a single State—the State of Massachusetts. One of the leading minds, as it seems to me, of the educational forces of that State is Hon. Frederick P. Fish, of Boston. He visited me here in Washington. In my contact with many leading educators I have found no one who, it seemed to me, understood more fully about all matters pertaining to education than Mr. Fish. He insisted stoutly that Massachusetts did not want the fingers of the Federal Government in their educational pie in any sense whatever; Massachusetts has one of the best educational systems in the United States, and they did not want it disturbed by injecting the Federal Government into it at any point or in any way that to them seemed obnoxious. I said, "Mr. Fish, touching the fundamentals of this bill I feel very unyielding; but, so far as the administrative features are concerned, I am not only willing, but I am glad to get the advice and counsel of a man who is as well versed in educational matters as you are, and I shall esteem it a great favor if you will bring to bear upon this bill the benefit of your great ability and experience in the lines of education."

After Mr. Fish's return to Boston, and after a conference with Dr. Snedden, it was decided to send here to aid in redrafting this bill their deputy commissioner of education, Mr. Charles A. Prosser, who came here and devoted at least two full weeks to this bill. The great obstacle to be overcome was that feature of the bill which seemed to interfere with State autonomy. At one time it seemed improbable that a satisfactory compromise could be reached, but after two weeks of hard work the idea of a State board of control, to be designated the State board for vocational education, was decided upon as the best possible solution, and it was adopted exactly in the form in which it now appears in this bill.

To this State board for vocational education is committed the important duty of preparing and putting into operation educational standards along the lines of vocational training, which it is believed will work out with entire satisfaction to the State and without sacrifice of that oversight and control which makes it certain that the funds appropriated by this bill shall not be misappropriated or diverted from the purposes for which they are intended. The principle underlying this whole measure is that inasmuch as the Federal Government was to furnish this money it should properly be given power to safeguard that fund that it should not be diverted from the purposes contemplated by the appropriation.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Was this to be a board of education within the State in addition to the regular State board?

Mr. PAGE. I will say to the Senator that it was to be a board of control, a board for vocational education, but that board might either be the board which already controlled the educational affairs of the State, or it might be a new board, according as the State should decide.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then it might result in two boards in one State—one for vocational education and the other for general education.

Mr. PAGE. If the State by its constitution, as in the case of Idaho, is compelled to have only one board, then I apprehend they could not have two boards, although, as provided by this measure, they might have two if they so desired.

Mr. HEYBURN. I had that in mind.

Mr. PAGE. Yes; but the facts are that it is absolutely and entirely within the province of the States to say what they shall do about this matter. Let me repeat that the only way in which the Federal Government can interfere with these matters is to see that the State board of vocational control shall not misappropriate or divert this fund.

Let me rehearse a little of the history of vocational education, which I believe every Senator here has experienced. In 1890 Congress added very largely to the appropriation for the agricultural colleges under the Morrill Act. In Vermont—and I imagine that in Vermont we had substantially the experience of other States—this additional appropriation was properly considered by the farmers as a matter of great importance. They discussed the matter in their granges and other farmers' gatherings. They examined into the results which had flowed from the original Morrill Act and found that, while it had given to the country a body of trained experts—men who had gone out into various parts of the Union and done excellent work, men who had entered the employ of the Government in the Department of Agriculture and under the Department of Agriculture all over this country were doing the country excellent service—while they had done all this and had given to the country a lot of experienced teachers in agricultural colleges and normal schools and in the agricultural high schools in the different States, nevertheless it was found, upon actual canvass, that after some 40 years' existence in Vermont, the University of Vermont and the State agricultural college had returned to the farm only 15 thoroughly equipped farmers in the entire State.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me there?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. NELSON. I was under the impression that the addition made to the Morrill Act, to which the Senator has referred, was much later than 1890. That addition was made by an amendment offered by myself to the agricultural appropriation bill which provided for an increase of $5,000 a year up to $25,000 for five years, so that at the end of five years the fund for each State under the Morrill Act would be $50,000 instead of $25,000. Prior to that—and I imagine that is the date the Senator refers to—we made an agricultural-college grant of 30,000 acres of public lands to each State.

Mr. PAGE. May I interrupt the Senator there?

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. PAGE. Was not that the original provision of the Morrill Act?

Mr. NELSON. No; that was not the provision of the original Morrill Act. The Morrill Act gave $25,000 a year to agricultural colleges established under the original grant. I have always understood that that $25,000 a year appropriation was what is commonly called the Morrill Act. The other act was much later, and I want to say that it gave 30,000 acres of public lands to each State. The States that had public lands in their midst had a right to select the lands, and many of the the public-land States did so.

It was a very valuable grant to them, and they made money out of it; but the States that had no public lands got scrip, and that scrip was sold to speculators and hawked about at a very low figure. I think most of the States that had no public lands did not realize over 75 cents an acre on that college grant, and some of them received as low as 50 cents an acre. I remember one case where a speculator at Cleveland, Ohio, many years ago, had bought up the scrip of many States. I can recall that when I first went to Minnesota that scrip was retailed at a dollar an acre, so that the speculator must have bought it at a much cheaper rate. That was the original grant for agricultural colleges. The Western States, which had public lands in their midst, kept those lands and got a good deal out of that grant; but the other States which did not have public lands sold their college scrip in bulk and realized only small amounts for it. I think, if the averages were figured out, it would not run over 50 to 75 cents an acre—that is, the original grant. The Senator will excuse me for interrupting him, but I had occasion to look into this matter some years ago and thus became familiar with it.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator from Vermont is not only not disturbed by the interruption, but he wishes that every Senator upon the floor here was sufficiently interested in this great measure to interrupt him at every point and touching every section of this bill. In my judgment, there is nothing to-day that is so important an asset to the American people as the American boy, and while we are conserving our forests, our mines, and our water powers we are neglecting the boy. Every Senator here, it seems to me, ought to feel an interest in this measure so keen, so intense, that he will interrogate me at every important point. When we get through with this bill, if it is bad, let us cast it out and if it is good I hope we will adopt it.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to interrupt him further?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. NELSON. I will say that in the State of Minnesota we have made a most beneficent use of this grant and of this fund. We have established, in connction with our State university, an agricultural school, in connection with our agricultural station, and in that school the conditions are so adapted that the boys and girls on the farms can attend the school. While it is a part of the university, its method of instruction and its curriculum are entirely different from those of the State university. There are two terms a year—one late in the fall and throughout the winter and one in the later spring—so that the boys can in the interval go home and work on the farm. They have, in connection with it, a woman's or girls' department, in which women are taught everything pertaining to domestic science—cooking and sewing and everything that will make a woman or a girl a good housekeeper as a farmer's wife or a mechanic's wife.

We have a veterinary school in connection with it. In fact, we have taken pains to make that agricultural school especially adapted for the boys and girls on the farm and have made great progress; and the farmers and their children have availed themselves of it. We have, on an average, from seven to eight hundred students every year in the agricultural college.

Now, if the Senator will pardon me, I must tell him an incident. It may encourage him. I labored here some years ago to get an amendment to the Agriculture appropriation bill to double the Morrill fund, as I have stated. After I had succeeded in that, a large number of resolutions were sent to me from agricultural colleges throughout the country congratulating me on my work. There was a national convention somewhere in New England that year, and it sent me resolutions congratulating me. But after I had been home in Minnesota, on my farm in Alexandria, I got a letter from the accountant of our State university. He said:

> This year we get $5,000 more from the Morrill fund than we had ever had before. Will you please explain that to me?

And that put me in mind of the fact that a prophet was not without honor save in his own country. Everywhere else they knew that I had succeeded in getting the appropriation doubled, except in my own State.

The Senator from Vermont, who has taken so much pains with this bill and has taken it to heart, may have the same experience that I had in that matter, but I hope not.

Mr. PAGE. I have had an experience, although different. If the Senate will pardon me for referring to it, I will say that I was certain that the fund to which I referred was appropriated under the law of 1888 or 1889 or 1890, because I was governor in 1890, and the matter came up before our legislature. The additional appropriation was perhaps made either under the Hatch Act or the Adams Act——

Mr. NELSON. The Hatch Act related to appropriations for experimental stations, and the other act that you mentioned——

Mr. PAGE. The Adams Act.

Mr. NELSON. The Adams Act was supplemental to that. It did to the Hatch Act what my amendment did to the Morrill Act—doubled it up.

Mr. PAGE. At any rate, the fund became such a large fund that the farmers of Vermont sat up and took notice. They said the fund had been diverted from the purpose of the Morrill Act, because Senator Morrill's design was to have the fund aid in the cause of agriculture. I do not know but that Vermont is like other States. I am almost ashamed to refer to my own State in this regard. The complaint was that the University of Vermont and State agricultural college had so diverted that fund that agriculture practically received no benefit; that they had devoted this fund to the education of engineers—civil engineers, mechanical engineers, electrical engineers—and when a boy came down to the university to enter and wanted to join some of the societies of the college they would not receive him. The result was, as the then President Buckham told me, that they lifted him up out of agriculture and away from the farm.

The farmers of Vermont were indignant, and they said "Unless this fund can be devoted more to agriculture than it has been, we will vote to sever the agricultural college from the University of Vermont;" and the university had to get down on its knees and beg. I know I insisted that the fund should not go to the University of Vermont unless they would give some assurance that it would not be diverted.

I want to say that having had that experience, one of the important things that appealed to me in regard to this bill was to safeguard the money, so that it should not be diverted from the purposes designed by Congress; and I believe the bill does this perfectly.

But at the same time we must not interfere with the educational machinery of the States. The State autonomy must be fully preserved, and to effect this end this State board of control, or State board for vocational education, has been authorized by this act to occupy an intermediate position between the schools themselves and the Federal Government.

These State boards of control may formulate—indeed must formulate—the plans whereby vocational education may be established; but in doing this they have the benefit of the advice and superior knowledge of the Commissioner of Education and their power is supreme if they formulate a plan which satisfies the Commissioner of Education—or, using the language of the bill, the Secretary of the Interior—that the plans and purposes of this act are being complied with in spirit and in letter.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask the Senator whether or not it is possible, in his judgment, to maintain in a university covering general subjects of education, a separate agricultural branch to which this fund could be segregated and applied? Would it be sufficient merely that a class in agriculture should form a part of the general college course?

Mr. PAGE. The Senator from Idaho has mistaken the purpose of this measure. None of the funds appropriated by this bill go to the State agricultural colleges for general educational purposes. They are to educate teachers for the general work of vocational education, and they have something to do with the administration of the branch station farms at the district agricultural schools. Some of the State agricultural colleges have been a little hostile to this bill because it did not give them more of the funds appropriated, but the fact is that we say to them, "You may educate the teachers, but we must have these district agricultural schools where the boy who has not passed the eighth grade, who has not gone through a high school, may have a sort of agricultural college of his own, and where he may receive a practical agricultural education, and be stimulated and encouraged in such a way that he will go back to the farm to promote and energize farm life at home."

Mr. HEYBURN. I had in my mind a condition existing in the University of Idaho. The agricultural department there is merged with the general educational system of the university.

I beg the Senator's pardon. I do not mistake the purpose of the bill. I was inquiring more particularly as to its practical application, as to whether the fund would be so handled that it might be used solely for the purpose of educating those who were to be teachers or whether it might be put in a general fund and without specific apportionment used for that purpose in connection with the general purposes of education.

Mr. PAGE. As we go along in the consideration of this bill the Senator will find that that has been specifically cared for. They can not use the fund except for the education of teachers, and for the especial purposes called for by this bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then if persons were engaged in studying in the agricultural department or along those lines the funds would have to be segregated, would it not? The same students might be engaged in a variety of studies, and how would it be possible to confine the fund to education along agricultural lines unless they could drop all of the other studies?

Mr. PAGE. I am exceedingly pleased that the Senator from Idaho is interested in this bill enough to make these inquiries. I want to say to him that I will come to that particular feature in a very short time, as I take up section by section the remaining provisions of the bill.

WEST KENTUCKY COAL CO.

During the delivery of Mr. PAGE's speech.

Mr. BRADLEY. Will the Senator from Vermont yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. PAGE. If it takes no discussion.

Mr. BRADLEY. I do not think it will take any time. I wish to call up and ask immediate action upon the bill (H. R. 13016) for the relief of the West Kentucky Coal Co.

Mr. PAGE. I can not consent if it is to take any discussion; otherwise I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BRADLEY. I do not think it will. It has passed the House and been reported by the Senate Committee on Claims favorably, and there are no amendments to it.

Mr. PAGE. Reserving the right to object, I yield for that purpose.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13016) for the relief of the West Kentucky Coal Co.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky the circumstances of the destruction of the barge of coal that makes the United States liable for it.

Mr. BRADLEY. The United States had a boat towing three barges of stone that it failed through negligence to properly secure to the bank. They broke loose and drifted out into the stream and collided with the West Kentucky Coal Co.'s fleet and destroyed the same of the value named in the bill. The War Department reports the facts and says the Government was guilty of negligence and the damages ought to be paid.

The bill passed the House, came to the Senate, and the Senate Committee on Claims reported it favorably. The loss was due to the negligence of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

After the conclusion of Mr. PAGE's speech,

Mr. McCUMBER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the house to the bill (S. 6384) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 2.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, and agree to the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 7343) to authorize the building of a dam across the Coosa River, in Alabama, at a place suitable to the interest of navigation about 7½ miles above the city of Wetumpka.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 7343. An act to authorize the building of a dam across the Coosa River, in Alabama, at a place suitable to the interest of navigation about 7½ miles above the city of Wetumpka;

H. R. 21094. An act to create a Commission on Industrial Relations;

H. R. 23112. An act to extend the limits of the port of entry of New Orleans, La.; and

H. R. 25282. An act to authorize the Union Pacific Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. PAGE. I yield for the presentation of a conference report.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DU PONT. I submit a conference report on the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. I am yielding, having the floor on the legislative bill, for a conference report. This does not displace the legislative bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not at all. The Secretary will read the conference report on the Army appropriation bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25531) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 6, 7, 8, 12, 14, 15, 27, 28, 61, 64, 76, and 77.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 13, 16, 24, 25, 26, 30, 31, 32, 35, 38, 40, 42, 44, 45, 49, 50, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 63, 67, and 71; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert "airships"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert "airships"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert the following: ": Provided, That hereafter in time of peace whenever any officer holding a permanent commission in the line of the Army with rank below that of major shall not have been actually present for duty for at least two of the last preceding six years with a troop, battery, or company, of that branch of the Army in which he shall hold said commission, such officer shall not be detached nor permitted to remain detached from such troop, battery, or company, for duty of any kind; and all pay and allowances shall be forfeited by any superior for any period during which, by his order, or his permission, or by reason of his failure or neglect to issue or cause to be issued the proper order or instructions at the proper time, any officer shall be detached or permitted to remain detached in violation of any of the terms of this proviso; but nothing in this proviso shall be held to apply in the case of any officer for such period as shall be actually necessary for him, after having been relieved from detached service, to join the troop, battery, or company to which he shall belong in that branch in which he shall hold a permanent commission, nor shall anything in this proviso be held to apply to the detachment or detail of officers for duty in the Judge Advocate General's Department or in the Ordnance Department, or in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal until after such canal shall have been formally opened, or in the Philippine Constabulary until the 1st day of January, 1914, or to any officer detailed, or who may be hereafter detailed, for aviation duty. And hereafter no officer holding a permanent commission in the Army with rank below that of major shall be detailed as assistant to the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs with rank of colonel, or as commanding officer of the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry, or as chief or assistant chief (Director or Assistant Director) of the Philippine Constabulary, and no other officers of the Army shall hereafter be detailed for duty with the said constabulary except as specifically provided by law"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "sixteen million"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert "Fifteen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert "Thirty-eight"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert "Seventy"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert "Seventy-one"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert "Sixty-five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "three hundred and seventeen thousand eight hundred and forty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment, after the word "enlist," insert the following: ": And provided further, That nothing in this provision shall be so construed as to forfeit credit for double time already accrued"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, after the word "man," strike out all down to and including the comma after the word "twelve," in line 2; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment, after the word "Panama," insert the following: ", or Hawaii or Porto Rico"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 7 of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment strike out the article "an" and insert in lieu thereof the word "any"; and in the same line, after the word "Army," strike out all down to and including the word "thereto" in line 9; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert:

"Equipment of Coast Artillery, armories, Organized Militia: There is hereby made available and the same shall remain available until the end of the fiscal year 1913, the unexpended balances of any appropriations heretofore made for dummy guns and mortars; mounts for dummy guns and mortars; dummy ammunition; loading appliances; range and position finding equipment; aiming and laying devices; subcaliber tubes and mountings therefor; labor and material necessary to install dummy guns and mortars; and to provide appliances and devices for instructional purposes in armory buildings provided by States for Coast Artillery companies of the Organized Militia." And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment to the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "$8,797,080.42"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "seven million five hundred and fifty-seven thousand seven hundred and seventy-three"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert: ": Provided further, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to sell and convey to the State of Texas, on or before July 1, 1913, for the purposes of a State tuberculosis sanitarium, the military reservation of Fort Clark, Tex., or such portion of it as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be sold, at a price to be fixed by a board of three appraisers, one of whom shall be designated by the Secretary of War, one by the governor of Texas, and the third to be agreed upon by the two appraisers first designated: And provided further, That no part of the appropriations contained in this act shall be expended for permanent improvements at any Army post which has been abandoned or which may be ordered abandoned by the President of the United States, $1,700,000:"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "ten million eight hundred and fifty thousand"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "nine hundred and twenty-five thousand three hundred and fifty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Beginning in line 1 of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, strike out all after the word "Provided" down to and including the words "Provided further" in line 9; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 51: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed by said amendment insert "five hundred"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "five million"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, after the word "hundred," strike out the words "and thirty-seven"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "eight hundred"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 65: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "$150,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed by said amendment insert "one million"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 68: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount as proposed at the end of said amendment insert "$100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of line 6 of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, after the words "may be," insert the words "hereafter specifically"; and in line 7 strike out the word "law" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Congress"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 70: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert as follows:

"SEC. 2. That, for the purpose of utilizing as an auxiliary to the Army reserve hereinafter provided for the services of men who have had experience and training in the Regular Army, in time of war or when war is imminent, and after the President shall, by proclamation, have called upon honorably discharged soldiers of the Regular Army to present themselves for reenlistment therein within a specified period, subject to such conditions as may be prescribed in said proclamation, any person who shall have been discharged honorably from said Army, with character reported as at least good, and who having been found physically qualified for the duties of a soldier, if not over 45 years of age, shall reenlist in the line of said Army or in the Signal or Hospital Corps thereof within the period that shall be specified in said proclamation, shall receive on so reenlisting a bounty which shall be computed at the rate of $8 for each month for the first year of the period that shall have elapsed since his last discharge from the Regular Army and the date of his reenlistment therein under the terms of said proclamation; at the rate of $6 per month for the second year of such period; at the rate of $4 per month for the third year of such period; and at the rate of $2 per month for any subsequent year of such period, but no bounty in excess of $300 shall be paid to any person under the terms of this act."

Mr. REED. I should like to inquire whether this is new matter, or is it an amendment of an amendment which was made in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a modification of an amendment agreed to in the Senate.

Mr. REED. May I ask to have the amendment that was agreed to in the Senate read in connection with this? It is a little irregular, but we have no copy of the report before us.

Mr. PAGE. Is the Senator from Missouri going to consume much time on this subject?

Mr. REED. Not at all. I am just trying to get some information. It will take but a moment.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that the amendment has been twice passed by the Senate.

Mr. REED. In its present form?

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. In its present form. There has been an addition to it, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The original amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Amendment No. 70 was to strike out all of section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That hereafter all enlistments in the Army shall be made for the term of five years, and for all enlistments hereafter accomplished five years shall be counted as an enlistment period in computing continuous-service pay.

Mr. NELSON. From the reading of the conference report I infer that the period of enlistment is extended to seven years. Is that correct?

Mr. DU PONT. The nominal period is extended to seven years.

Mr. NELSON. That is, a soldier can not enlist for less than seven years?

Mr. DU PONT. That is true, but for only four years of the time is he under the colors. For three years he is in the reserve, at his home, and not liable to be called out except in time of actual or threatened war and by the authority of Congress.

Mr. NELSON. But he must enlist absolutely for seven years?

Mr. DU PONT. That is the provision.

Mr. NELSON. Four years in active duty in the Army and three years on the retired list?

Mr. DU PONT. Yes; and on his own application he can be passed into the reserve with the approbation of the Secretary of War after three years' service.

Mr. NELSON. That is a revolutionary plan. It is something we never have had before.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I could not hear the Senator from Delaware. His face was turned away from me.

Mr. DU PONT. What information does the Senator from Missouri desire?

Mr. REED. I wanted to know whether in the bill as it passed the Senate the period of enlistment was extended.

Mr. DU PONT. The period of enlistment as the bill passed the House was five years of active service. The Senate disagreed to that, and wished to leave it as at present—at three years of active service. In conference there was an agreement reached to make it four years of active service, and later in conference, on the recommendation of the War Department, the period has been extended to seven years, four years in active service and three years in the Army Reserve, which is not to be called out except in case of actual or threatened war, and then only by authority of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the conference report will proceed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Are those provisions embodied now fully in this report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The provision in the report was not fully read, and the Chair will ask that it be read in full.

The Secretary read as follows:

"And that on and after November 1, 1912, all enlistments in the Regular Army shall be for the term of seven years, the first four years in the service with the organizations of which those enlisting shall form a part, and, except as otherwise provided herein, the last three years on furlough and attached to the Army Reserve hereinafter provided for: Provided, That at the expiration of four years' continuous service with such organizations, either under a first or any subsequent enlistment, any soldier may be reenlisted for another period of seven years, as above provided for, in which event he shall receive his final discharge from his prior enlistment: Provided further, That any enlisted man, at the expiration of three years' continuous service with such organizations, either under a first or any subsequent enlistment, upon his written application, may be furloughed and transferred to the Army Reserve, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, in which event he shall not be entitled to reenlist in the service until the expiration of his term of seven years: Provided further, That for all enlistments hereafter accomplished under the provisions of this act, four years shall be counted as an enlistment period in computing continuous-service pay: Provided further, That hereafter the Army Reserve shall consist of all enlisted men who, after having served not less than four years with the organizations of which they form a part, shall receive furloughs without pay or allowances until the expiration of their terms of enlistment, together with transportation in kind and subsistence as provided for by this act in the case of discharged soldiers, but when any soldier is furloughed to the reserve his accounts shall be closed and he shall be paid in full to the date such furlough becomes effective: Provided further, That any enlisted man, subject to good conduct and physical fitness for duty, upon his written application to that effect, shall have the right of remaining with the organization to which he belongs until the completion of his whole enlistment, without passing into the reserve: Provided further, That except upon reenlistment after four years' service or as now otherwise provided for by law, no enlisted man shall receive a final discharge until the expiration of his seven-year term of enlistment, including his term of service in the Army Reserve, but any such enlisted man may be reenlisted for a further term of seven years under the same conditions in the Army at large, or, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, for a term of three years in the Army Reserve; and any person who may have been discharged honorably from the Regular Army, with character reported as at least good, and who has been found physically qualified for the duties of a soldier, if not over 45 years of age, may be enlisted in the Army Reserve for a similar term of three years: And provided further, That in the event of actual or threatened hostilities the President, when so authorized by Congress, may summon all furloughed soldiers who belong to the Army Reserve to rejoin their respective organizations, and during the continuance of their service with such organizations they shall receive the pay and allowances authorized by law for soldiers serving therein, and any enlisted man who shall have reenlisted in the Army Reserve shall receive during such service the additional pay now provided by law for the soldiers of his arm of the service in their second enlistment period. Upon reporting for duty, and being found physically fit for service, they shall receive a sum equal to $5 per month for each month during which they shall have belonged to the reserve, as well as the actual cost of transportation and subsistence from their homes to the places at which they may be ordered to report for duty under such summons."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not think we ought to adopt any such provision as that without the fullest consideration. I think this measure will have to go over until to-morrow if the conferees insist upon that provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Georgia permit the reading of the report to be completed?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

The reading of the report was resumed and concluded, as follows:

Amendment numbered 72: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Change the numerical designation of section 4 so as to read "Sec. 3," and restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by this amendment with amendments as follows: After the word "occurred," in line 14, page 53, strike out so much of the next 15 lines as begins with the words "Provided, That every permanent officer" and ends with the words "in those grades," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That on and after the 1st day of January, 1917, any vacancies occurring among officers of the Quartermaster Corps with rank above that of colonel may, in the discretion of the President, be filled by selection from among officers who shall have served by detail in said corps for not less than four years: Provided further, That not to exceed six officers holding commissions with the rank of captain in the Quartermaster Corps and who have lost in relative rank through irregularities of promotion and the operation of separate promotion within the three departments hereby consolidated, may, in the discretion of the President and subject to examination for promotion as prescribed by law, be advanced to the grade of major in the Quartermaster Corps, and any officer who shall be advanced to said grade under the terms of this proviso shall be temporarily an additional officer of said grade, but only until a vacancy shall occur for him on the list of officers of said grade as hereafter limited; and no officer shall be detailed to fill any vacancy on the list of majors of the Quartermaster Corps until after all additional officers authorized by the proviso shall have been absorbed"; after the word "Provided," in line 21, page 53, strike out the comma and the word "That" and insert "further, That no details to fill vacancies in the grade of colonel in the Quartermaster Corps shall be made until the number of officers of that grade shall have been reduced by three, and thereafter the number of officers in that grade shall not exceed 12; and no details to fill vacancies in the grade of lieutenant colonel in the Quartermaster Corps shall be made until the number of officers of that grade shall have been reduced by three, and thereafter the number of officers of that grade shall not exceed 18; and"; in line 24, page 53, strike out the word "eleven" and insert in lieu thereof the word "nine"; in line 25, page 53, strike out the word "forty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty-eight"; in line 3, page 54, strike out the word "thirty-one" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-nine"; in line 4, page 54, after the word "hundred," insert the words "and two"; and in line 20, page 54, after the word "perform," insert "but such regimental, battallion, and squadron quartermasters and commissaries shall not be required to receipt for any money or property which does not pertain to their respective regiments, battalions, or squadrons, and they shall not be separated from the organization to which they belong"; and in line 17, page 55, after the word "law," insert "And provided further, That for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this section the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the Chief of the Quartermaster Corps herein provided for immediately upon the passage of this act, and it shall be the duty of the said chief, under the direction of the President and the Secretary of War, to put into effect the provisions of this section not less than 60 days after the passage of this act"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Change the numerical designation of section 5 so as to read "Sec. 4," and restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by this amendment, amended as follows: In line 1, page 56, after the comma which follows the words "rate clerks," insert "civil-service employees and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 5. That hereafter the General Staff Corps shall consist of 2 general officers, 1 of whom shall be the Chief of Staff, 3 colonels, 4 lieutenant colonels, 10 majors, and 10 captains or first lieutenants, all of whom shall be detailed from the Army at large in the manner and for the periods prescribed by law: Provided, That hereafter, except as otherwise provided herein, when any officer shall under the provisions of section 26 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, be appointed to an office with rank above that of colonel, his appointment to said office and his acceptance of the appointment shall create a vacancy in the arm, staff corps, or staff department from which he shall be appointed, and said vacancy shall be filled in the manner prescribed by existing law, but he shall retain in said arm, staff corps, or staff department the same relative position that he would have held if he had not been appointed to said office, and he shall return to said relative position upon the expiration of his appointment to said office unless he shall be reappointed thereto; and if under the operation of this proviso the number of officers of any particular grade in any arm, staff corps, or staff department shall at any time exceed the number authorized by law, no vacancy occurring in said grades shall be filled until after the total number of officers therein shall have been reduced below the number authorized by law; but nothing in this proviso shall be held to apply in the case of any officer who now holds a four-year appointment to an office with rank above that of colonel and whose return to the relative position that he would have held if he had not been appointed to said office is not possible under existing law."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 75: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert:

"SEC. 6. That hereafter the service of a cadet who may hereafter be appointed to the United States Military Academy or to the Naval Academy shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer of the Army."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Change the numerical designations of section 8 and section 9 so as to read section 7 and section 8.

H. A. DU PONT,
F. E. WARREN,
JOS. F. JOHNSTON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES HAY,
JAMES L. SLAYDEN,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cullom	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Bacon	Curtis	Massey	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Dillingham	Myers	Smith, Md.
Bradley	du Pont	Nelson	Smoot
Brandegee	Fletcher	Oliver	Stone
Briggs	Gallinger	Overman	Swanson
Bristow	Heyburn	Page	Thornton
Catron	Johnston, Ala.	Penrose	Townsend
Chamberlain	Jones	Perkins	Warren
Clapp	La Follette	Reed
Clarke, Ark.	McCumber	Sanders
Crane	McLean	Shively

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. Not a quorum. The roll of absentees will be called.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. LIPPITT, Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, and Mr. BURNHAM entered the Chamber and responded to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the conference report on the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. BACON. What is that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware asks for the present consideration of the conference report on the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, before that is done, I should like to have the Senator in charge of the conference report make some explanation of the new provision which, in substance, makes the term of enlistment seven years. From what I have learned of the Army since I have been here, I have been of the opinion that it was with the utmost difficulty that privates were kept in the service even one year, and that most of them were trying to get out. If we are now to publish to the world that the term of enlistment is to be for seven years, it seems to me that we shall have some difficulty in securing enough young, aggressive, independent Americans to fill up the quota even of our small standing Army. I myself have always believed that there ought to be some way by which any person who had been lured into joining the Army in times of peace might get out of his bargain if he wanted to do so, and that there ought to be a way, upon giving three or six months' notice, by which he could sever his connection with the Army, without having to go to the penitentiary for attempting to do so. I believe we ought to liberalize it just as much as possible. Personally, I do not fall in with the idea of having a sort of semistanding Army scattered among the public generally, which may be called upon at any time to enter the service. I do not like the military idea permeating the generality of our citizenship, and I wish the Senator would explain exactly what the new provision means, and especially what is to be gained by it.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the Senator from Delaware proceeds, the Chair will have Rule XXVII read, so that there may be no misunderstanding as to the parliamentary situation.

The Secretary read Rule XXVII, as follows:

> The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read, or a question of order, or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and when received, the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put, and shall be determined without debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has had the rule read for the reason that debate can only be had by unanimous consent.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent just to say a word in regard to this matter.

I want this report to go over until we can have an opportunity to examine it. To bring in here a provision of this kind, which I think is absolutely foreign, in the first place, to the functions of a conference report, and talk about our being required to go into a consideration of it without an opportunity to read it or anything else——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Or any right to amend it.

Mr. BACON (continuing). Or any right to amend it, it seems to me is hardly fair. I want to say one word in regard to this matter. I recognize this bill as an old acquaintance. The feature of this bill about a reserve was here as an independent bill 10 or 12 years ago, and after a very long discussion of it in the Senate, that feature now embraced here was defeated in the Senate. As it is now brought in, it is exactly the same thing. It does not originate in the Senate. It comes from the War Department.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator wants to be correct. It originated in the other House, so far as the length of service is concerned.

Mr. BACON. I am not talking about the length of service; that is an entirely different thing.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me to finish, the term of service in the House bill was five years, and in compromising the differences between the two Houses the time was both lengthened and shortened. It was shortened to a four years' positive or a three years' permissive term under the colors, with the other four years in reserve without salary, unless, perchance, the reserve were called into active service. Then there was a reserve also provided for in the bill when it passed the Senate——

Mr. DU PONT. I will add to that the statement that the reserve will not be called out except by authority of Congress.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, this is an utter revolution of our whole Army organization and Army system. It is the converting of this country into a military organization in part, and when extended will be so in whole.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator will yield just to permit me to make an inquiry, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee if this conference report has been printed?

Mr. DU PONT. It has been printed; yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have called for a printed copy and have been unable to get one.

Mr. DU PONT. It was printed in the House; it has not been printed in the Senate, for there has not been time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to examine the provisions of the conference report.

Mr. BACON. We ought to have time to examine it. The idea that a matter of this kind, which, as I say, not only revolutionizes the organization of the Army, but the entire military system of this country, converting it into the German system, and only needed to be extended to make it absolutely the German system—to say that we shall be called on to pass on this on a conference report, injected here improperly, not belonging to it at all, is going pretty far, to say the least.

Mr. President, there is much more in it than a mere question of bounty or length of service. This is not a legitimate action on the part of the conferees. It is altogether new matter, and, as I have said, is nothing but an old acquaintance brought back here in a new guise. It was before us as an independent bill some 10 or 12 years ago, and was resisted most strenuously and finally defeated. Now, Mr. President, I do insist that this report go over until we have an opportunity to examine it, for we have never even had an opportunity to read it.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], who has asked me to make some explanation in regard to the enlistment provision of the conference report, and also replying to some of the remarks of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], I will say, in the first place, that the provision as to an Army reserve has no relation whatever to the reserve measure to which the Senator from Georgia refers, which measure was proposed when the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] was Secretary of War and was based on a totally different principle. It involved an expenditure in time of peace for the maintenance and upkeep of the reserves. The provision before the Senate does not involve the expenditure of a single penny during time of peace and will cost the Government nothing except in the event of war. When there are actual or threatened hostilities it is provided that the reserve may be called out, not by the President alone, but with the consent of Congress, which seems to me a conservative proposition.

The bill as proposed by the House changed the period of enlistment from three to five years. The Senate disagreed to the proposition and insisted on the maintenance of the three-year term of enlistment. As a compromise a basic term of four years was provided as an enlistment period, and in connection with this compromise a suggestion was made and favorably considered by the unanimous vote of the conferees that the period of nominal enlistment should be increased, the real enlistment being for four years absolutely and for three years permissively. The nominal enlistment includes service in the reserve, and service in the Army reserve involves no military duty whatever unless the reservists be called out and service rendered to the Government. In time of peace service in the Army reserve, if it can be called service, imposes no expense to the Government, there being no pay or allowances attached to it. It is provided, however, that if we were threatened with war or actually engaged in war and Congress authorizes the calling out of the Army reserve, then, in that event, the reservists shall be paid for the time they are actually engaged in the service of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator a question right there, Mr. President?

Mr. DU PONT. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. What is to be gained by having this sort of a reserve army?

Mr. DU PONT. I was just coming to that.

Mr. McCUMBER. Allow me to finish the sentence——

Mr. DU PONT. I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that the object to be gained by an Army reserve is as follows: I suppose the Senator is aware that the strength of the regular companies, troops, and batteries of the Regular Army on a war footing is nearly twice as great as in time of peace?

Mr. OVERMAN. Does this report present the same provisions as the bill on the calendar which has been so much objected to?

Mr. DU PONT. That is a totally different measure, which deals with the raising of Volunteer troops. This measure deals only with soldiers in the Regular Army, and has no analogy or connection whatsoever with the bill to which the Senator referred.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I suggest to the Senator that at the time of the Spanish-American War the Government simply called upon the several military organizations of the States, the State Militia, the National Guard, and so forth, and there were twice as many as could be taken by the Government; and since that time the number has increased probably four or five fold at least? Does not the Senator believe, with the vast number of these military organizations in every State, that in almost any kind of a war in which we could be engaged we could call out a sufficient number, and more than a sufficient number, who would immediately volunteer, without the necessity of having this semistanding army scattered over the country?

Mr. DU PONT. The semistanding army, as the Senator styles it, will amount under the provisions of this bill to a maximum of not over 40,000 men, and most probably will be nearer 25,000 men. There are less than 13,000 men discharged from the Regular Army every year, who would pass into the reserve. In two years that would amount to about 25,000 or 27,000 men at most, and if some of the three-year men are permitted to enter the reserve the figures might be as high as some 35,000 men; but I doubt very much if the army reserve would ever exceed those figures. The purpose is to render the Regular Army efficient to meet the situation should we become involved suddenly in hostilities. When the companies are doubled in strength, it is plain that if you add to them raw, untrained men the Army will not be as efficient as if you fill up the ranks with old soldiers, who are familiar with the discipline, with the service, with the manual of arms, and the duties of a soldier in general. That is the idea of this provision of the bill and that is all it involves. It will cost the Government nothing; it is a measure of small proportions, so far as numbers are concerned. There is no semistanding army involved; it is simply intended to promote the immediate readiness and efficiency of the Regular Army in case we are suddenly called upon to repel invasion. In my judgment it will do this, in large measure, provided that the men will enlist for six or seven years and are not deterred by that long period. Although the idea is largely experimental, the War Department instructed its recruiting officers some time ago to question every recruit who enlisted—of course under the present three-year term—as to whether he would object to enlisting for six years if he were allowed to go home at the end of three years and not be called out except in case of war.

So it was reported to the committee that the returns showed that over 90 per cent of those enlisting said they had no objection whatever to that. Based on those facts and the urgent recommendation of the War Department and the practical conclusions reached after full debate and discussion in the committee and in conference, we agreed to report the measure as it now stands.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not want to continue the discussion longer at this time, because I want an opportunity to read the provision.

Mr. DU PONT. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. But was there anything in the bill either as it passed the Senate or the House about any reserve force who should go into civil life?

Mr. DU PONT. I will answer the Senator from Georgia in the affirmative.

Mr. BACON. I do not believe there was.

Mr. DU PONT. I will quote to the Senator the exact language. The bill as it passed the Senate provided:

> That for the purpose of utilizing as an Army reserve the services of men who have had the experience and training in the Regular Army, in time of war or when war is imminent—

And so on. That is the provision to which I refer.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On what page is that?

Mr. DU PONT. On page 9 of the bill under the head of "Pay of enlisted men."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Delaware that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. BACON. I trust the Senator from Delaware will give us an opportunity to examine the report. We have had no chance at all to read it, and to me the request seems unreasonable. I can recognize it by even glancing at it, but as to reading it through carefully, it is impossible to do so at this time, and I trust the report will not now be taken up.

Mr. DU PONT. It is a simple subject and involves no expenditure of public money; and there is so much crowding upon us in the closing hours of Congress that, as much as I would like to oblige the Senator from Georgia, I must insist upon my motion.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. REED. Does it not require unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not.

Mr. REED. I thought there had been a unanimous consent preceding that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There had not been. The report was presented and read, and then the Senator from Delaware moved to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. REED. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. I transfer the pair to the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. As I do not see him in the Chamber, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GUGGENHEIM (when his name was called). In the absence of my general pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer the pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and I voted inadvertently. However, I transfer the pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. STONE. I have a pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. POMERENE. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] is necessarily absent and that he has a general pair with my colleague, the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. I will let this announcement stand for the week.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. I transfer it to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SHIVELY. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. KERN] is unavoidably absent from the Chamber on account of illness in his family. He is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

Mr. BRIGGS. I am paired with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON] and wish to inquire whether he has voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia has not voted.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have a pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia, and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. FALL. I should like to inquire whether the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] has voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the Senator has not voted.

Mr. FALL. I have a general pair with him. However, I am informed by the senior Senator from Florida that if the Senator from Florida were present he would vote "yea," and I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. ROOT. I have a pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I should like to inquire if the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina has not voted.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Then I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Bankhead	Cullom	Jones	Perkins
Bourne	Cummins	McCumber	Poindexter

So the Senate agreed to proceed to consider the report of the committee of conference on the Army appropriation bill.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for a moment?

Mr. REED. I desire to retain the floor, but I will yield temporarily to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. I this morning offered a resolution in reference to certain statements made by me in the Senate yesterday, and I desire to modify its phraseology and have it read to the Senate, and in that way will bring up the matter to which the Senator from Missouri desires to address himself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution (S. Res. 386) as modified will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the statement made by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] in the Senate on Wednesday, August 21, 1912, be, and is hereby, referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, appointed under Senate resolution No. 79, agreed to on April 29, 1912.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I simply want to say, if the Senator will pardon me a moment, that I find on investigation that the resolution under which this committee has been acting covers the ground so far as the expenses of investigation are concerned, or the ability to subpœna witnesses, and therefore all I have to do in this instance is to make a special request for the reference of this particular matter to that committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a little later it is my intention to offer an amendment to the resolution just read extending the scope of the investigation so as to include all moneys expended by all candidates for the nomination for President during the present year. It has occurred to me if we are to investigate, we might as well not stop at the mere personal controversy now existing between ex-President Roosevelt and the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

When the Senator from Pennsylvania had the floor yesterday he invited Members of the Senate to ask him any questions pertinent to the matter of personal privilege he had brought before the Senate. While the time, strictly speaking, has passed, I nevertheless desire to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question or two which are especially inspired by the reply of ex-President Roosevelt published in the newspapers this morning.

Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania on yesterday stated that there was some doubt as to the authenticity of a certain letter dated October 13, 1904.

Mr. PENROSE. Is that the letter which purported to inclose a check?

Mr. REED. It is.

Mr. PENROSE. That is the letter regarding which I have my suspicions as to its genuineness, but I attached no importance to the statement one way or the other, and proceeded immediately to go on with the main issue involved, which was that it was true that the check had been received. I only expressed a belief about the letter if genuine. It may be, it may not be. This is rather an old transaction.

Mr. REED. The letter bore the purported date of October 13, and professedly inclosed the certificate of deposit for $25,000, which the Senator tells us was a contribution by Mr. Archbold of the Standard Oil Co. to the Pennsylvania Republican campaign. Can the Senator state whether the additional $100,000, which he says was paid by the Standard Oil people to the National Republican Committee, was paid on or prior to the 13th day of October, 1904?

Mr. PENROSE. My understanding was that it was paid on or about that time; perhaps a little time before that. Just how it was paid I do not recollect at this time, and it may be I did not know exactly at any time. I am positive that those details will come out in the investigation, which I expect will be promptly made by the Committee on Privileges and Elections. As near as I can recall it now, the check to the national committee was given to them early in October.

Mr. REED. I want to ask the Senator what he has to say to this statement of President Roosevelt as it appears in the Washington Post of this morning?

Col. Roosevelt then read from copies of letters which he said he had sent to Mr. Cortelyou in the latter part of October, 1904.

In these letters he said that he had been informed that "the Standard Oil people" had contributed $100,000 to the campaign, and he told Mr. Cortelyou that if it was true that such a contribution had been made, the money should be returned at once. He wrote that, "in view of the open and pronounced opposition of the Standard Oil Co. to the establishment of a bureau of corporations, one of the most important accomplishments of my administration, I do not feel willing to accept its aid. I request, therefore, that the contributions be returned without further delay."

That statement is said to have been made in the latter part of October. I should like to ask the Senator whether to his knowledge the money ever was paid. I refer to the $100,000 to the national committee. And if so, was it ever returned?

Mr. PENROSE. I understand the Senator has the paper there before him. The date of this letter or alleged letter to Mr. Cortelyou is about the 26th of October, is it not?

Mr. REED. Yes; the date of the letter is October 26.

Mr. PENROSE. The letter was sent about a week before the election. It was several weeks after both the transactions to which I referred yesterday, namely, the payment of $100,000 to Mr. Bliss and the declination to furnish a further amount of $150,000. The letter was sent to the chairman of the national committee. The dates indicate that.

Mr. REED. As I understand the Senator, then, the $100,000 had been received before this letter of Mr. Roosevelt was dictated.

Mr. PENROSE. Considerably——

Mr. REED. Had the money been spent or was it on hand and was it, in fact, returned?

Mr. PENROSE. The information I have always had as to the transaction was that Mr. Roosevelt was advised that the money had been spent and could not be returned, and the letter was sent to make a record for future reference.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, can the Senator, then, state to us whether, in fact, the letter was written with full knowledge that the money was gone?

Mr. PENROSE. That is my information, Mr. President.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, let us have order. We can not hear.

Mr. PENROSE. That is my distinct information, and also the information of many others.

Mr. REED. I desire to ask the Senator a further question. Does he know of any large sums of money that were contributed to the National Republican Committee in 1904 that were returned to the donors?

Mr. STONE. Again I ask that there may be order in the Chamber so that Senators may be heard.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator kindly repeat his question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will please be in order and Senators will refrain from audible conversation.

Mr. PENROSE. There was such confusion in the Chamber that I did not catch the full question.

Mr. REED. As nearly as I recall my question, it was whether the Senator knew of any large sums of money that had been donated to the Republican National Committee in 1904 that were returned to the donors.

Mr. PENROSE. The returning of contribution is such a rare instance on the part of political committees that if there had been any such case it would have made a profound impression on my mind. I do not recall any.

Mr. REED. The Senator has no knowledge of it?

Mr. PENROSE. I have no knowledge of it, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. In this connection I desire to put into the RECORD the reply of Mr. Roosevelt as it appears in the Washington Post of this morning. I do not want to take time to read it, but ask permission that it may be printed as a part of my remarks, including the part I have just read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"Mr. Penrose and his allies and the entire crowd of crooked politicians and crooked financiers, who have attempted to make these attacks upon me," said Col. Roosevelt, "have made them and are making them not only knowing that they are false, but because they are false, and because that they know that the forces behind me, and which I at this time represent, are the only forces which the crooked politicians and crooked financiers of the country have really to fear.

"The only part of Mr. Penrose's statement that needs comment by me is that portion in which it is asserted that I had been advised of a heavy campaign contribution from Mr. Archbold in behalf of the Standard Oil Co. to the Republican national campaign committee, and that I directly or indirectly requested a contribution from Mr. Archbold and his associates interested in the Standard Oil Co. This statement is false."

Col. Roosevelt then read from copies of letters which he said he had sent to Mr. Cortelyou in the latter part of October, 1904.

In these letters he said that he had been informed that "the Standard Oil people" had contributed $100,000 to the campaign, and he told Mr. Cortelyou that if it was true that such a contribution had been made, the money should be returned at once. He wrote that, "in view of the open and pronounced opposition of the Standard Oil Co. to the establishment of a Bureau of Corporations, one of the most important accomplishments of my administration, I do not feel willing to accept its aid. I request, therefore, that the contributions be returned without further delay."

"Mr. Cortelyou informed me," said Col. Roosevelt, "that there had been no contribution received from the Standard Oil people and that none would be received. Over the phone last night, in response to a question of mine, he stated that he had at that time made this statement, and that his memory and mine agreed entirely as to the circumstances of the occurrence. If any contribution was received it was against my explicit and reiterated directions as set forth in these letters."

Col. Roosevelt then quoted from an open letter issued just prior to the 1904 election by Mr. Cortelyou, saying that the campaign fund of that year was much smaller than that of any presidential campaign. During all trust prosecutions the Colonel said, no one had asked any favor because of campaign contributions.

Referring to "Mr. Penrose and his allies," Roosevelt said:

"They know that the triumph of the progressive cause, and only the triumph of the progressive cause—that is, the Progressive Party—means the elimination from politics of the Penroses, and means driving from their intrenchment, in both business and politics, the powers of special privilege such as the Standard Oil Co. Naturally, these men, aided by the newspapers which they control, will stop at nothing in order to rid themselves of the only enemies they really fear."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, also in this connection I desire to read a statement which I find in the New York Sun of this date:

These disclosures by Penrose are, it is acknowledged, only a beginning. If Col. Roosevelt or Mr. Cortelyou attacks the Pennsylvania Senator on the ground of his statements it is likely that Mr. Penrose will have something further to say. The Senator himself intimated clearly on the floor of the Senate that he would welcome a further discussion of this subject.

"There are papers on file and a number of letters accessible, interesting documents," said he, "and I have no doubt as this discussion develops during the coming campaign should any gentleman desire to press it these matters will see the light of day."

Senator Penrose added that these letters are hidden in the archives of campaign committees and in the cellars and vaults of business houses and offices of lawyers throughout the country. Penrose's friends declared that he had only scratched the surface in the statement made by him to-day, and that when the proper time comes further documentary evidence would be available.

In this connection rumors of disclosures of contributions by other corporations to the Roosevelt 1904 campaign were in circulation to-day. Charges will be made soon that the Gould interests, controlling the Missouri Pacific, contributed $100,000 to the Roosevelt campaign fund and that the Southern Pacific contributed a like amount. This $100,000 contribution by the Southern Pacific, it is said, was in addition to the $240,000 that E. H. Harriman raised and dumped into New York State.

LETTER FOR THE RECORDS.

A circumstantial story was being told to-night of how a member of President Taft's Cabinet has knowledge that Roosevelt was aware of the contribution by the Standard Oil Co. to the 1904 campaign. It is said that this member of the Cabinet entered Mr. Roosevelt's office while he was dictating a letter to the chairman of the National Committee warning him that the Standard Oil Co.'s contribution must not be accepted.

According to the story it was pointed out to Mr. Roosevelt that the contribution had been made 10 or 12 days previously; that the money had been spent and that it would be impossible to pay it back. Mr. Roosevelt is said to have remarked then that the letter should at least go on the record.

I ask the Senator whether he has any knowledge now of the fact that the Missouri Pacific or the Gould interests did contribute to this campaign fund of 1904.

Mr. PENROSE. I have no direct knowledge, Mr. President; simply my information at the time that large contributions were made from those interests.

Mr. REED. Does that answer also include the Southern Pacific?

Mr. PENROSE. That is my understanding.

Mr. REED. If I understand the Senator now, he means by this last statement that while he was actively engaged there with the committee he understood, as a member of the committee, that these interests had contributed heavily to the fund.

Mr. PENROSE. That is correct, Mr. President. I was not in the close personal touch with the situation that I happened to be in relation to the particular Archbold contribution. My relation to that situation arose from the fact that half the counties in Pennsylvania are the original oil part of the State; that a large number connected with the oil interests are Pennsylvanians, and Mr. Archbold was a citizen of Pennsylvania for a great many years and had been known to me since he had been a young man in Titusville, in Pennsylvania, long before he was worth a dollar. In that way I happened to be accidentally in touch with this particular situation in a way to know the details personally.

Mr. REED. While the Senator is on his feet may I ask him another question? To what extent were the acts of the national committee concealed from Mr. Roosevelt?

Mr. PENROSE. My observation of Mr. Roosevelt has been that he was well calculated to have pretty superior knowledge about everything that was going on in the national committee. I do not think there was a day, and some days an hour in the day, when the chairman of the national committee was not in communication with him over the telephone.

Mr. REED. Who was the chairman at that time?

Mr. PENROSE. I understand it was Mr. Cortelyou.

Mr. REED. Formerly Mr. Roosevelt's secretary?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator state to us what he knows in reference to the information conveyed to the President from time to time in regard to the progress of the campaign and the funds that were contributed?

Mr. PENROSE. I assume, Mr. President, that as he and the chairman were communicating every day, and sometimes every hour of the day, and knowing the vigorous and energetic way with which Mr. Roosevelt pursues political campaigns, that he was not a child in the wilderness.

Mr. REED. Was he regularly consulted with reference to the campaign as it went along?

Mr. PENROSE. It is my impression that he was very much consulted. He absolutely named his Cabinet officer and former Secretary as chairman of the national committee, and I suppose that every act of that chairman was dictated by his chief.

Mr. REED. Was Mr. Cortelyou at that time in the confidence of the President?

Mr. PENROSE. He was put there by the President, and I do not imagine he lost the confidence of the President during the three months of the campaign. I never heard that he did. He was absolutely designated by the President as chairman of the committee. The national committee sat, in a docile way at Chicago, until the word was received as to whom Mr. Roosevelt wanted for chairman.

Mr. REED. So that, as I understand you, Mr. Roosevelt dictated the chairmanship of the committee?

Mr. PENROSE. He named the chairman of the national committee as absolutely as he would name his stenographer or private secretary.

Mr. REED. And kept in active touch with him. I want to ask the Senator if, as a matter of fact, President Roosevelt largely directed the campaign? What are the facts about that?

Mr. PENROSE. I think he chiefly directed the campaign.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator.

In that connection and just as a bit of character sketching I want to present the following from the New York World:

HIS GREATEST AMBITION.

"'Col. Roosevelt's greatest ambition,' said Greenway, 'is to be shot on the field of battle.'"—Saturday Evening Post.

"Nonsense! Col. Roosevelt's greatest ambition is to be a one-man war.

"He wants to be the commanding generals on both sides, standing calm and collected in front of his tents while the wireless spits out its reports from the front, while the telephones clatter and the telegraph clicks his orders to his corps commanders.

"He wants to be the general staff of both armies, scrutinizing the monster maps of the field of operations and shifting the pins that mark the positions of the opposing forces.

"He wants to be the trusty scouts dashing up breathlessly from the firing line.

"He wants to be the roar of the artillery, the rattle of the small arms, and the flashing detonations of the smokeless powder.

"He wants to be the last desperate charge upon the batteries, sabering himself at the guns.

"He wants to be the rear guard that bravely covers the retreat, and the smashing attack of the reserves which turns defeat into rout.

"He wants to be the dead and the dying on the field of battle, who have yielded up their lives as a last sacrifice to their beloved countries.

"He wants to be the dust-stained correspondents painting his countless acts of heroism in words that will never perish.

"He wants to be the commission that negotiates peace with honor, and, lastly, he wants to be the grand review at the close of the war, standing silently in front of the flag-draped stand, saluting himself as he marches past and pinning medals of honor to his dauntless breast.

"That is what the Colonel wants. 'To be shot on the field of battle' is only one of the minor incidents of his great ambition."—New York World.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrogate him?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Just let me ask him the date. Has the Senator the date of that editorial?

Mr. REED. February 29, 1912.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not think it could have been published within the last week or so, because only yesterday I read in one of the August periodicals that Mr. Roosevelt's chief ambition was to kill a grizzly bear with a knife. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, of course I am absolutely a nonpartisan; I always have been, and I do not desire to inject any partisan references into the debate; but I have before me a couple of pieces of more or less exquisite literature—principally less—that I should like to inject into the remarks of the Senator from Missouri at this moment, if he thinks that the magnitude of his aim and the chastity of his diction could admit of the association.

Mr. REED. I have no objection so long as the Senator from Mississippi assumes full responsibility.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The first poem, Mr. President—I do not know who the author is, but it was sent to me in the mail—is entitled "What Teddy thinks"; and it reads:

I'm twice as great as Washington,
I'm twice as great as Grant;
Because third terms they didn't get
They needn't think I can't.

I'm twice as great as Jefferson
And Madison combined;
I'm twice as great of all the lot
Of Presidents, I find!

I'm greater than my country,
And its customs and its laws,
It's poor old Constitution,
And its precedential flaws.

I'm twice as great as any man
Above or 'neath the sod;
In fact, I'm half inclined to think
I'm most as great as Nod!

Some time ago, Mr. President, in the course of a political fling in the Senate, I quoted a paraphrase of the Apostles' Creed in a manner which was extremely offensive to a great deal of religious sentiment. I therefore withdrew it from the permanent RECORD, not because it was irreligious or blasphemous, as was charged, but because it was, upon my own second thought, in bad taste, to say the least of it. I was much astonished to find, when I had imitated Martin Luther, who once wrote a paraphrase upon the Litany, making fun of Zuinglius and the Zurichers, who were ultra Swiss Protestant reformers, and when I imitated two archbishops of Canterbury, one of whom wrote a paraphrase upon the Litany, ridiculing the Pope at Rome, and another of whom wrote a paraphrase upon the Litany ridiculing Oliver Cromwell and the Puritans, that some real good men and some pure, true, sweet, good women, especially of my own church, the Episcopal Church—the Church of England—thought me guilty of irreverence and sacrilege. Of course, everybody who listened to me knew that I was not making fun of the Creed; that I was making fun of Theodore Roosevelt; that I was making fun of the people who had erected him into the place of a demigod, if not a god. I at that time offered what I had to say as an illustration of the blind hero worship of his followers. I did not think then that what I had to say in way of criticism and prophecy would be so soon confirmed by his own followers. I now want to read what confirms it.

There is a sweet old hymn beginning in this way:

Follow, follow,
I will follow Jesus.
Everywhere He leads me
I will follow on.

I have no selfish, servile instincts, but when I have helped in my semi-impotent way to sing this good old hymn I have felt it to the bottom of my bones—

I will follow Jesus.
Everywhere He leads me
I will follow on.

Jesus the Savior of man and the Son of God.

Not that I have ever actually followed Him, but because I was always willing to confess that the man who did follow Him followed in the right course, and was better than I.

At the Chicago convention there was another rendition of the hymn. If any further proof were needed of blind, absurd, and stupid hero worship of Theodore Roosevelt, it is here. "Demigod," I said in the former speech; but they have erected him into a god now. I am reading now from a squib in a newspaper:

Had Theodore Roosevelt been guilty, in place of Senator WILLIAMS—

Because of this parody upon the Apostles' Creed, in which I was only, I repeat, imitating the example of Martin Luther and two archbishops of Canterbury, and of which I was not even the author, but which had been going around in the press for a month and more and only read by me, I was solemnly rebuked later on by the ecumenical council of the Church of the Latter-day Saints, held in the State of Pennsylvania and presided over by Archbishop Bill Flinn. [Laughter.] Was he archbishop or cardinal? At this ecumenical council there was a solemn resolution passed taking me as a text and denouncing me for having paraphrased the Apostles' Creed, and being therefore guilty of disrespect to God, when all I had meant was disrespect to Roosevelt, and when everybody who heard me knew what I meant. The confusion was a natural result of the state of mind of the Rooseveltians.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I had not paraphrased the Apostles' Creed; I had merely repeated it. But if I had paraphrased it, I would, I repeat, have stood in the shoes of Martin Luther and in the shoes of two of the greatest archbishops of Canterbury who ever existed, except that I would have been paraphrasing a profession of belief adopted by a church convention of men, and they were paraphrasing a solemn prayer—a communion in passion and faith of men with God.

Let the hearer go back in our history and read the trial in the municipal court of the city of Boston at the December term, 1822, where the grand jurors were John Adams, Moses Williams, and others, in which is included the first trial of William Hone before Justice Abbott and his second trial before Lord Ellenborough, and his third trial, with another change of judges, instructed to instruct a conviction, and his acquittal on all three charges in spite of Crown and ministry, and let him remember the bonfires that were built in London and all over England, celebrating the three juries' position in behalf of freedom of the press when they acquitted him.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me finish this, so as to keep the connection, and I will then yield.

Mr. PENROSE. Very well.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This article goes on:

Had Theodore Roosevelt been guilty in place of Senator WILLIAMS no doubt the incident would have passed without notice, or even been counted to him for righteousness. For surely no one has called the personally conducted Roosevelt convention to account for its own odd dereliction.

It sang with great gusto these words:

Remember, the original is—

Follow, follow,
I will follow Jesus—

Jesus—the Son of God—

Everywhere He leads me
I will follow on.

I accused these people of being sacrilegious in their blind hero worship, demigod worship, and in proof here is what I am informed that they sang at the Chicago convention:

Follow, follow,
We will follow Teddy.
Anywhere he leads us
We will follow on.

Now, I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not press this line of criticism too far. Anything that would bring about a condition where a crooked municipal contractor, like William Flinn, could lead in any kind of a chorus that approached a hymn is certainly progress upward.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I dare not agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania. I do not desire to incur the odium theologicum any further than I have already unwittingly and very innocently incurred it. I agree with Thomas Jefferson when he said that the thing to be chiefly avoided in all life was incurring the odium theologicum.

A few words seriously. There is not a man in the Senate, or anywhere else, that attaches more importance than I do to the solemn form of words of a solemn human creed. Of course, a creed is nowhere the word of God; it is the word of men trying to express in unison with one another their ideas of what the word of God would induce them to believe. The Apostles' Creed, which is the word of man, and not the word of God, appeals to me in the strongest way, because it was the recognized endeavor of honest men trying to learn the philosophy of love to one's neighbor and love to one's God, to put into words in a solemn form what they believed. I believe with Saint Paul that "the form of sound words" is worthy of remembrance and of observance everywhere. There was not a man sitting in the Senate the day I spoke who imagined for one moment that I had the slightest idea of ridiculing the Apostles' Creed, or of ridiculing the solemn assertion of faith of any creed of people upon the surface of this earth, whether Christians, Mohammedans, or Jews.

The thing most sacred for a man is what he shall formulate to himself as his relationship with God and his fellow man, and whether he forms it in an ecumenical council, in a religious assembly, or whether he formulates it by himself, with nobody present except himself and his God, it is sacred to any man who respects himself and God; and yet I found that a crowd of men in the State of Pennsylvania, actuated, so far as I know, by no political or religious principle of any description up to that day anywhere or at any time confessed or displayed, held an ecumenical council, in which they pronounced themselves to be latter-day saints, and pronounced me to be a great sinner, an irreverential sort of a man, and all this occurred under the superintendency of Archbishop or Cardinal Bill Flinn, of the city of Pittsburgh, in that good old Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Why, I would have been even less surprised if the present Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] had undertaken to read religious lessons to men of lesser pretense than I. Mark it once more.

Follow, follow,
We will follow Teddy.
Anywhere he leads us
We will follow on.

If there is any madness of demigod worship and of hero worship to equal that in the history of the civilized world I do not remember it. If there is any craze to equal it, since the craze of speculating in tulips in Holland, expiring in the eighteenth century, I do not remember it. There was a time when men swore allegiance to tulips of a certain form and a certain color, and when they bought tulips to be hybridized and crossed down unto the third and fourth generation, when all Holland—peopled by the most phlegmatic people in the world—went crazy about tulips; but from the tulip craze down to now there has been nothing equal in sacrilege and irreligion, folly and stupidity, demigod worship, to these lines, a paraphrase, not upon a profession of faith, but upon a prayer in music.

Follow, follow,
We will follow Teddy—

Not Jesus—

Anywhere he leads us
We will follow on.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have no interest in the controversy between the Senator from Pennsylvania and ex-President Roosevelt save as it affects the general welfare. One of these gentlemen, the Senator, is a Republican of the most extreme school; the other was a Republican who walked by day and by night in company with the Senator from Pennsylvania and with all that portion of the Republican Party which are sometimes known as "stalwarts" and sometimes as "standpatters," but who always and forever have been standing guard upon the ramparts of the Republican Party. Just what Mr. Roosevelt's views or creed may be at this time I do not much care to guess, because his opinions change as rapidly as the colors of the rainbow shift, albeit they little resemble the glorious beauty of the rainbow's varying hues. The Senator from Pennsylvania and the "Third Termer" belong to schools of politics I have never attended and never even respected. I say frankly that I think they are both doing the greatest service to the country now they have ever rendered because they are each destroying that organization which has so long assisted monopoly to levy tribute upon the people of the United States. For once they are serving the Lord, for they are rending the mask of hypocrisy and exposing the ugly and infamous truth to an astonished and disgusted world.

Mr. President, I do not believe that Theodore Roosevelt was ignorant of that which took place in the Republican National Committee. I do not believe that that man who has thrust his hand into everything terrestrial and who has sought to regulate every avocation of life, to control all attributes of mind and aspirations of soul, who has instructed motherhood and specified the number of children each woman must bear in order to be considered a good citizen, who has revised the English language and abolished the spelling book, who has always and everywhere been guilty of impudent, insistent, pestiferous intermeddling with the business of everybody now living and the reputations of all the dead who sleep, did not know where the money for his own campaign was coming from. I do not believe his own private secretary and confidential man, placed by him in control of the Republican committee, failed to report regularly and in detail. I do not believe that Mr. Roosevelt afterwards promoted that man because he had deceived and lied to him, but rather that he gave him promotion because he had carried out his orders and obeyed his instructions.

Mr. President, here is an editorial in the New York World which states the case better than I have:

But if we are to believe one who is often detected in misstatements, Mr. Roosevelt knew nothing about what was going on.

Corruption funds, then, are the only things in this world as to which the ex-President frankly admits ignorance. He can regulate everything, from the size of families to the contents of a spelling book. He can rewrite all our constitutions and laws single-handed. In one day he can upset the jurisprudence of a thousand years and make a better one. But when it comes to the question of the tainted money that elected him in 1904 his mind is a blank.

Mr. President, I say it is impossible for a candid thinking man to believe that Theodore Roosevelt did not know what was going on, and that the only difference between him and some of those whom he denounces to-day is that the latter frankly admit where they got the money, how they got the money, and what they did with the money, while Theodore Roosevelt is clamorously declaring that, while he got the money and accepted the benefit of the money, he remained as innocent of its origin as a babe, a lunatic, or an idiot. Between the man who makes frank avowal of that which he has done, assuming full responsibility, and the creature who takes the money and then in sheer craven cowardice turns to denounce those who gave it, the American people will know how to judge. They may condemn both, but they will not condemn both alike. From my standpoint they ought to condemn both, because I can find no justification for collecting money from these great corporations and using it to corrupt the public. But when Mr. Roosevelt tells the American people he is utterly ignorant of the sources from which his own campaign fund came, I venture the prediction that the people will write under his name the short, ugly word he has so often branded upon the brows of honest men and good women.

I am about to show that if Theodore Roosevelt did not know that money was received from the Standard Oil, he did know that money was being procured from sources more wicked, more vicious, more dangerous than was the Standard Oil Co. in the blackest hours of its long criminal history.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REED. And since the Senator from Pennsylvania is on his feet, as he seems to have dealt extensively with these large concerns, I ask him whether the refusal of the Standard Oil people to give up the additional $150,000, of which he told us, was what caused Mr. Roosevelt to transfer his valorous banner from the citadel of the house of Rockefeller to the fortress of Morgan.

Mr. PENROSE. As the Senator from Missouri was proceeding to describe the odious character of the Standard Oil Co., I rose to remind him that perhaps if the requisition for $150,000 had been honored that company might have remained in the list of good trusts. I do not say it would have.

Mr. REED. I have in my hand the Washington Star. Under the headline "Taft, a Dead Issue, etc.," is an account of a speech made by Roosevelt at Boston on August 17, 1912. I quote:

At the outset Col. Roosevelt announced that he would answer any question that anybody asked, and that nobody could embarrass him for a minute.

I regard that as the most accurate statement of a fact ever made by Theodore Roosevelt, for I do not believe that any person or any thing or any condition could embarrass him even for a second.

"How about Perkins?" a man called out.

Now, Senators, I challenge your attention to Mr. Roosevelt's answer:

"I am delighted to tell you about Mr. Perkins," the Colonel replied. "I will satisfy everybody's thirst for information."

"Mr. Perkins is a rich man," said he. "He came into this movement, not at my request, but of his own initiative. I felt just the same curiosity that a man in the crowd who asked me about him felt. I said to him 'Mr. Perkins, why are you supporting me?'

Roosevelt is astonished to find Perkins is supporting him.

"Why are you supporting me?"

"Mr. Perkins flushed, and said he did not know but that he ought to be offended, but I told him he should not be, and that I was both surprised and pleased to have his support.

"'The prime reason why I am with you,' he told me, 'is because I have children. I came to the conclusion that this country won't be a good place for my children unless we have substantial justice, unless the relations between capital and labor are on a better basis. I wish to support any movement which will bring that about. So far as I can see,' Mr. Perkins told me, 'you are the only public man who, in good faith, is supporting those views.'

"I have told you literally what Mr. Perkins said."

Mr. President, there was not a man in that audience, there was not a man who read this account, who was not led to believe, and it was intended they should believe, that only within the past few weeks had an alliance for the first time been formed between Perkins and Roosevelt; that Perkins, after all his record of corporation promotion and of trust building, had suddenly turned and looked into the face of his little innocent children and exclaimed: "If wicked men like me pursue their present course then there will be no place where the children of the future may dwell, and my little love blossoms will suffer with the rest." And so with a heart bowed down, with contrite and penitential soul, he came and prostrated himself at the feet of the master reformer of the century and exclaimed: "Behold, I am a stranger to thee, O wise and righteous one, yet I come to serve thee." Is that the truth? Is this the first alliance between Roosevelt and Perkins and the Morgan interests?

If there is anyone who has a right to speak by authority in regard to Theodore Roosevelt and Mr. Perkins it is certainly Mr. Munsey. I do not know what Mr. Munsey's property interests may be, but it has been repeatedly charged that he is the heaviest individual owner of the common stock of the Steel Trust.

Mr. PENROSE rose.

Mr. REED. I do not charge that as a fact, but it has been stated publicly and never to my knowledge denied. Certain it is that for years he has been a most ardent supporter of Mr. Roosevelt. He has traveled with him, worked with him, plotted with him, and striven for him, so that what he says of Roosevelt—what he said years ago—ought to be accepted as satisfactory proof of Roosevelt's friendship for and relations to Mr. Perkins.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me to refresh his recollection about a matter?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to recall to the recollection of the Senator that Mr. Perkins had been wounded in the service of his master; that he was indicted for the diversion of the funds of widows and orphans interested in life insurance companies, and was dismissed on a demurrer, the funds having been applied to campaign purposes, and, according to my recollection, having been applied in the campaign of 1904.

Mr. REED. I am coming to that a little later. But I want to start back of that transaction, so I call Mr. Munsey as a witness. Let us see whether or not Perkins is a new recruit to the Roosevelt cause. Let us see whether he has just joined Roosevelt because his little children, looking up with innocent eyes, are pleading with him for their future and for the salvation of the country. Imagine, if you please, these tiny tots, their countenances stained with tears, lining up some morning before their fond parent, holding out baby hands, in supplication, and exclaiming in lugubrious chorus: "Dear papa, if you don't quit stealing everything in the world we will not have any place to live." At such a vision every eye must fill with tears—every heart must bleed. I pass from the pathetic scene to call attention to Munsey's Magazine of April, 1903. That is nine years ago. Here is an article headed "The Men about the President." I read from page 517, quoting at some length that the context may fairly appear:

> The personnel of the list of the President's friends and confidants indicates that he believes in quality rather than quantity when it comes to advice. He has selected men who have a reputation not only in statecraft but in the various spheres of finance, industry, law, education, and commerce—each a specialist in his particular phase of human activity.
> It is a question if any of Mr. Roosevelt's predecessors consulted with so many people outside of the cabinet room. Some very important suggestions have come from men who are not members of his official family, but who have had the pleasure of knowing that the President deferred to their experience.

I am wondering if Archbold had that pleasure, but for the present I stick to Perkins.

> The episodes that marked the ending of the strike in the anthracite coal regions will long be remembered, especially the meeting in the cabin of a steam yacht in New York harbor between two men, one of whom was Mr. Pierpont Morgan and the other a member of the Cabinet. Just what was said no one knows except these two gentlemen and Mr. Roosevelt; but the immediate result was a message to the mine owners which ended the greatest labor disturbance in the history of the country. Many a statesman has crossed the continent or has gone from the New World to the Old on "official business," but none, perhaps, has been intrusted with a more important mission than was Elihu Root when he represented the President in that conference on the Morgan yacht. There could not have been a more signal proof of Mr. Roosevelt's confidence in his ability.

Over at page 521 is where Mr. Perkins comes in directly.

> The President's Unofficial Counselors.

This was not nine days ago or nine weeks ago, bless your heart; it was nine years ago. I wonder if at this time Perkins's youngest child had been born, I wonder whether he had any children. If he did then I wonder why he did not think of them then.

But I proceed with the article.

> In a New York building where some of the greatest combinations of transportation and industry have been conceived is the office of a man who could probably have almost any position in the power of the President to offer. The relation which George W. Perkins bears toward Mr. Roosevelt is as unique as it is intimate. There is a certain likeness between Messrs. ROOT and Perkins.

I apologize to the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] for having to read this.

> Not only because they are self-made in every respect, but because they have similar traits and abilities. The President—— > of the great life insurance company whose methods were revolutionized by Mr. Perkins, said of him: "He can handle men as no other man I ever saw."

That is McCall——

I think he is doing tolerably well to-day handling Teddy—Mr. Roosevelt. I apologize for having irreverently referred to the great man as Teddy.

> He (Perkins) can handle not only men, but governments. When he placed Russia in debt to an American corporation by negotiating the famous five-million-dollar loan—a transaction that may be said to mark a new era in international banking—Mr. Morgan realized here was the man he needed for his lieutenant. His first task as a partner of the famous financier was to map out the plan of the United States Steel Corporation. Even in this country of miraculous transformation Mr. Perkins's rise has been phenomenal. He possesses a wonderful power of hard work; and with his present business responsibilities he needs all of it; yet with all the demands on his time, the President has the benefit of his best thought whenever it is desired. Communications between the two men are far more frequent than the people at large might imagine, considering the present administration's attitude upon the so-called "trust question."

The last sentence furnishes the key to unlock many mysteries, if we but amend it by inserting the word "pretended" before the word "attitude," so that it will read, "Communications between the two men are far more frequent than the people at large might imagine, considering the present administration's pretended attitude upon the so-called trust question." Thus reformed the sentence is illuminating.

Mr. President, in the light of that statement, what can any honest man think of a candidate for President who seeks to impose upon an audience and upon the country the thought that he has just been joined by Mr. Perkins for the first time, and that Mr. Perkins comes humbly in sackcloth and ashes repentant, praying forgiveness for sins, and seeking to make atonement by assisting in the regeneration of his country; and that he was induced to approach the penetential altar by the awful thought that his children are likely to suffer for want of a place to live.

The Munsey article, taken in connection with Roosevelt's speech, demonstrates the hypocrisy, the cant, the reckless disregard this man who poses as the regulator of public morals and the censor of all human conduct has for the truth.

Roosevelt's relations with Perkins not only have been intimate for nine years, but they began prior to that time. I challenge your attention to the fact that this is not Mr. Perkins's first advent into politics; that he is no a novice, a tenderfoot, an amateur, led by love of children into the political arena. Oh, no; nor are his contributions for the first time affecting the political equation.

This gentleman has been in the political game since 1896; before, possibly. This much is sure, that as early as 1896 his hands have regularly gone deep into the coffers of corporations and brought forth corruption money.

Let us see. It was proven to a demonstration in the insurance investigations in New York, that in the campaigns of 1896, 1900, and 1904, the Equitable Life Insurance Co., the New York Life Insurance Co., and one other insurance company had contributed in every campaign; Perkins in 1896 took out of the coffers of the New York Life Insurance Co., of the money that belonged to the children and the women who would become the widows and the orphans of the men who were insured $50,000, and contributed it as a part of the vast corruption fund that was sent forth to pollute the politics of the United States.

In 1900 this same man Perkins was instrumental in having drawn from the same coffers $50,000 more which went into the campaign fund of the same party and was expended as the former sum had been. It was this same Perkins who in 1904 advanced to the Republican campaign fund $48,702.50, and then when the election was over laid his dishonest and corrupt hands upon the money of the women and children his company held in trust and pocketed $48,702.50.

That occurred eight years ago. I wonder if Perkins was then induced to purloin the money of the children of other men by the fact that his own little children opened their rosy lips praying him, "Papa, for God's sake, save us by helping Mr. Roosevelt save the country."

That is not all. It appears that when Mr. Harriman was sent by Mr. Roosevelt to raise a corruption fund for his benefit, Mr. Perkins was once more in evidence and contributed personally $10,000.

Yet Mr. Roosevelt has the cool insolence to stand before an audience of American citizens and ask them to believe that until very recently he and Perkins were absolute strangers, and that Perkins, being in penitential mood, just sort of slid in behind the band and, unbeknownst to everybody, joined the sweet-voiced choristers, Flynn and Hanna, Brown and Roosevelt, in the glad refrain, "This is the way I long have sought and mourned because I found it not."

Mr. President, what is after all the kernel of this matter? The Democratic Party has for years declared that no corporation should be allowed to contribute to political campaigns.

We have condemned the practice in our platforms, prohibited it by law in many of the States we control, and we have tried to write the same prohibition into the laws of the nation. Ours has been a warfare against the reception of contributions from any and all corporations.

But this is not the doctrine of the latter-day saint and reformer. Roosevelt bars the Standard Oil, or, to speak with accuracy, pretends to bar it.

Sir, if it be wicked to accept the money of the Standard Oil people, in what does the wickedness consist? If it be said that the Standard Oil is engaged in a conspiracy against trade, that it is a trust, I answer so likewise is the steel combination a trust. If it be said that the Standard Oil has broken the law, I answer so did the Northern Securities Co.; so did the Harriman interests break the law. If the wrong consists in taking money from corporations that are engaged in breaking the law, then why is it worse to take the money of the Standard Oil Co. than it is to accept the money of the Morgan combinations? Is it worse to serve John D. Rockefeller's company than it is to serve the Perkins and Morgan consolidated interest? In capital the latter ten times outmeasures the Standard Oil. In the impudent consolidation of various competing interests they have offended more than the Standard Oil.

The Steel Trust has practically cornered the steel and iron business of the greatest Nation on earth. It has gathered within its grasp nearly all valuable iron mines, the furnaces, the mills, the essential lines of transportation. It is the colossus of the commercial world. It dominates the markets of America and largely controls world prices.

Sir, steel and iron are the greatest of modern necessities. You might stop all the oil wells of the country, and the damage would not be irreparable; you might absolutely put out every lamp that burns kerosene, and yet the world would be lighted. But if we were to lose the ability to produce steel and iron, the clock of civilization would be turned back 5,000 years. Railroads would disappear from the land, ships vanish from the sea, modern building cease, bridges rust upon their piers and be no more, the wheels of workshops and factories become silent, the tools of industry and implements of husbandry no longer exist. We would be back to the Stone Age. The Big Stick would again be the symbol of law and authority.

But the Morgan interests have extended their field of operations far beyond the iron and steel industries. They dominate a vast system of banks, covering the United States, the heart and center of which is located in New York City, where the word of Morgan and Perkins is supreme. This mighty coalition of financial power is able to control, directly or indirectly, the business of the country. It can arrest all development; it can bring on panics; it can crush railroads; it can depopulate cities and decimate Provinces. It can produce good times or bad times; it can annihilate fortunes in a night; it can create them in an hour. Indeed, as Mr. Munsey boasted in the article I have read, it is able even to control the policies of foreign nations. It surely has been largely controlling the policy of our own Government. This concern, having cornered the steel and iron business of the land, gained a dominating control over transportation lines and created what is in fact a national money trust, concluded at last that the time had arrived when it could name and own a President.

So handy-man Perkins is sent out to finance Roosevelt's campaign. The Morgan interests thought at first they would have an easy victory. Were they not all-powerful? Did they not have for a candidate the greatest demagogue since Cola di Rienzi ranted on the streets of Rome? They got in so deep before they knew it that they could not back up. Now that their scheme has been exposed to the American people, Roosevelt is trying to pretend that Perkins is as a man "fit for repentence"; aye, indeed, "already repentant"; who comes with tear-washed countenance, an utter stranger, to the Roosevelt camp, anxious to make amends for past misdeeds; and that he has been admitted solely because he has a large family of interesting children; otherwise, the party of progress and reform would not tolerate his presence.

Who is George W. Perkins? Here is the answer, cut from the pages of the report of the Steel Investigating Committee of the House of Representatives:

Director of the United States Steel Corporation.
Chairman of finance committee and director of International Harvester Co.
Director of Astor Trust Co.
Director of Bankers' Trust Co.
Director of Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railroad Co.
Director Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Co.
Director Erie Railroad Co.
Director German-American Insurance Co.
Director German Alliance Insurance Co.
Director International Mercantile Marine Co.
Director Marquette & Bessemer Dock & Navigation Co.
Director National City Bank of New York.
Trustee of New York Trust Co.
Director of Northern Pacific Railway Co.
Chairman of board, Pere Marquette Railroad Co.

Nearly all of these companies control or own a large number of other companies.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. Did I understand the Senator a few moments since to refer to the expenditure in the recent primary election for nomination for President?

Mr. REED. I have not yet. But if the Senator has any information, turn on the light.

Mr. PENROSE. I would be very glad to advise the Senator that there is quite a lot of information leading to the thought that some $3,000,000 was underwritten by Mr. Perkins and his associates to nominate Mr. Roosevelt for President of the United States for their own personal purposes. I expect that there will be those having the proof and data to submit to the proper committee of investigation of the Senate at the proper time.

Mr. REED. Then may the gods speed the hearing!

Mr. PENROSE. The largest campaign fund in the history of the United States raised for a nomination was raised for Mr. Roosevelt at the primaries last winter and last spring.

Mr. STONE. For a nomination by what convention?

Mr. PENROSE. For the primaries, to be applied to the primaries in different States having popular primaries, and for the promotion of bogus conventions and contests in the Southern States.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator mean that $3,000,000 were underwritten by Mr. Perkins and others to secure the nomination of Mr. Roosevelt at Chicago, at the convention which nominated President Taft, or at the Progressive convention?

Mr. PENROSE. No; I meant to state that the object of this enormous and unprecedented campaign fund was the ultimate control of the regular Republican nomination in the convention held in June in Chicago which nominated Mr. Taft for President and Mr. Sherman for Vice President. What underwriting has occurred since then for the third party remains to be developed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose the only thing that prevented the campaign fund from having effect was the national committee?

Mr. PENROSE. The majority of the national committee exercised every care possible to restrict and restrain the efforts to purchase colored Taft delegates at $5,000 a head.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator know that the national committee took jurisdiction of that subject?

Mr. PENROSE. The national committee spent many anxious moments after some of those gentlemen wandered off the reservation. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORAH. Did the national committee as a national committee take jurisdiction of it or individually?

Mr. PENROSE. The war board of the national committee kept close watch on the proceedings as to some of those delegates who wandered off for a day or so at a time, and they applied their efforts to get them back.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose the Senator is not prepared to state how they got them back?

Mr. PENROSE. We got them back by appealing to their manhood and their reputation for honor and integrity, and in almost every case we got them back.

Mr. BORAH. I take it, Mr. President, that the men who would wander off the reservation for the purpose of raising the price would not have very much manhood left to appeal to to get back.

Mr. PENROSE. There is a certain kind of political etiquette that exists in these matters. It seemed to be paramount in this case, and they did come back. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I read somewhere the other day an article which spoke of us as a nation that walked through tragedy with a laugh upon its lips, and as I hear this laughter in the Senate I think how true that statement was. Yet, sir, what is disclosed by the colloquy we have just heard? A direct charge upon one side of $5,000 bribes being offered to delegates of the national convention, and upon the other side a practical admission of the fact, and a jeering interrogatory, "How did you get them back?"

Mr. President, what does that admission mean? Sir, no man can be elected President of the United States save he receive a nomination at a great national convention. Therefore, when the leprosy of corruption reaches a national convention it taints the very source of presidential elections, for, as I have said, without the nomination of such a national convention there can be no hope of an election.

If you corrupt our national conventions, then the people are either deceived into voting, or forced to vote, for the man thus nominated. So that the result is that the President of the United States comes into office because bribes have been paid. The bribe monger, not the people, select the President. Thus crime is rewarded by gaining control of the greatest Government beneath God's kindly skies. And yet we laugh at the shameful story just now told.

We take the wretch who has accepted a bribe of $10 for his vote and send him to the penitentiary; and we ought to. We ought, therefore, so much the more to visit punishment and obloquy and shame upon the man and upon the men who would purchase the votes of men selected to represent great constituencies of great States in a national convention that is to nominate a candidate for President of the United States. Why, sir, if such things as these can be in our Republic, how long until the vile and foul poison shall have spread itself into the hearts and homes of the people, until pride of country and patriotism shall be dead, and until this Republic shall become a thing at which other nations shall mock.

When villainy lays its scaly hand upon the white throat of decency, in the very temple where the guardians of justice and virtue are supposed to stand, when the awful fact is laid bare in the Senate of the United States we make it cause for laughter and for jeers. Sir, at such a tale as has been told the pale flag of fear might well mount to the cheek of any man who loves his country. And yet bribery was done; and done, I doubt not, with Perkins's money and with Roosevelt's active connivance.

When men gain office by the crimes of others they prove themselves at once unworthy of trust and the tools of those whose polluted hands lifted them to place and power.

Thus far I have demonstrated that Mr. Roosevelt's pretense that Perkins has only recently become his ally is utterly and abominably false. I have already shown that this alliance has existed for years; that the interests represented by Perkins contributed enormously to Roosevelt's 1904 campaign. I now propose to show how Perkins sought, demanded, and obtained his reward. I propose to prove that he came with the arrogance of power, with threats upon his lips, and that Roosevelt cringed before him in an attitude at once base and cowardly. I propose to prove that for every dollar Perkins or his associates contributed to the Roosevelt campaign they were permitted by Roosevelt to rob the American people of tens of thousands of dollars.

It is said Morgan has never yet made a bad investment. Whether that statement be true or not I think it can be asserted with absolute certainty he has never failed to demand and take his "pound of flesh." In yielding to his demands Theodore Roosevelt violated his oath of office as President of the United States and trampled upon the laws enacted by the people.

The public is familiar with the story of how the Morgan-Perkins interests, in order to prevent the competition of Andrew Carnegie, and create a monopoly, paid him for his property over $200,000,000 more than it was worth. The public knows how the steel corporation was formed with less than $400,000,000 of actual assets, but with a capital of $1,400,000,000. The public knows the story of how a new rival appeared in the field, known as the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. This concern was capitalized at a little over $30,000,000. It possessed such natural advantages that its independent continuance menaced the monopoly prices of the Morgan-Perkins trust. When the panic of 1907 came on, the great money power threatened to close down upon it. Controlling the money power was Morgan and Perkins.

Representatives of Morgan and Perkins came to Washington, laid the entire transaction before the President, Mr. Roosevelt, and secured from him a promise of immunity from punishment. He sanctioned the destruction of the last great rival of Morgan's and Perkins's steel trust.

If it was worth more than $200,000,000 to remove the rivalry of the Carnegie plants, it certainly was worth much more to destroy the rivalry, and at the same time acquire the properties of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. Is it any wonder that Perkins still remains faithful.

I call attention to the second incident: In April of this year there was printed in a Senate document the correspondence which showed that when the Attorney General, in the year ——, was about to prosecute the Harvester Trust Perkins insolently demanded that Roosevelt stop the prosecutions. His orders were truculently obeyed.

This is what Perkins told the President's representative, Herbert Knox Smith, all of which Smith wrote to the President. Mr. Perkins concluded with great emphasis with the remark "that if after all the endeavors of his company and the other Morgan interests to uphold the policies of the administration and to adopt their methods of modern publicity this company was now to be attacked in a purely technical case the interests which he represented were going to fight."
